Many thanks for your kind letter of June 4th. I am delighted to hear that you enjoyed YOU ARE THERE on ancient Egypt, but must confess that I had nothing to do with it. The program was in fact produced by Mr. Charles Russell, and in view of your very interesting suggestion I am taking the liberty of passing your letter along to him.

Best regards.

My dear Murrow:

You're to be congratulated on your recent television program dealing with ancient Egypt and the pharaohs, particularly Cheops. We enjoyed it thoroughly.

After watching your show and realizing what general interest there is in that period, it occurred to me that you might be interested in doing another program in a month or so on the Pharaoh Akhnaton.

As you know, we have just finished filming THE EGYPTIAN, on which we did an enormous amount of research which brought to light for the first time information on how the ordinary man lived and thought 3300 years ago. I'd be very happy to put at your disposal any information you might require for a program dealing with the most fascinating and best-known of the pharaohs. There is an abundance of interesting material on the man.

For instance, Akhnaton, as you may already know, was the first man to believe in one true God -- a living, loving God named Aton who was the source of all energy and whose symbol was the sun. This greatest of the pharaohs not only believed in such a God himself, but he attempted to convince others of such a deity. As a result of his beliefs, Akhnaton was assassinated at the age of 30, the same age as Jesus Christ when he was crucified. But Akhnaton died 1358 years before Jesus was born!

He was the son of Amenophis III, one of the most powerful conquerors and rulers of his time, yet Amenophis IV, or Akhnaton (Aton is Satisfied), as he chose to call himself, came to be known as the "Prince of Peace," because he refused to wage war even when his enemies invaded the borders of Egypt. He was the first man in history to say, "Love Thine Enemies," which, in an age as warlike and ruthless as his, was outstanding.

Not only was Akhnaton monotheistic, he was monogamous in a time when every monarch had several wives and dozens of concubines.

Akhnaton's God was a God of perfect love and mercy, who was not to be worshipped by sacrifices or rituals but by the dedication of the inner life of the spirit.

As Professor Arthur Weigall, the noted English Egyptologist, says: "Aton is a God almost as we conceive him today."

Certain passages of the Bible, especially the 114th Psalm, are obviously taken directly from Akhnaton's beliefs, and there's scarcely any doubt that the entire Judaic-Christian religion is based upon the teachings of this 14th Century B.C. pharaoh. In fact, a number of authorities, including Freud, believe that Akhnaton was the teacher of Moses.

In view of all this, I'm certain that a program based on Akhnaton's life and times would be of immense interest to your viewers. And if, in addition to supplying research material, we could contribute to such a program in any way, possibly by having some of the personalities connected with THE EGYPTIAN -- Victor Mature, Philip Dunne the writer, or myself -- appear with you, we should be only too glad to cooperate.

I'm looking forward eagerly to your reaction to this suggestion and hoping to see you again soon.

Sincerely,

Henry T. Sarnoff

Dear Dr. Zarem:

It takes a little time, but eventually I get my reading done, and I absorbed the contents of your paper SCIENCE, SOCIETY AND SURVIVAL with great interest.

I would like someday to have an opportunity to argue certain aspects of it with you, but in the meantime want you to know that I found it interesting and stimulating.

I am returning it to you herewith.

Dear Mr. Zarem:

This is merely a note to thank you for your letter of January 27th.

My thanks also for sending me a copy of the Thanksgiving Day Service and "Know-How, Our Maginot Line".

I certainly appreciate your thoughtfulness.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

It was a pleasure indeed visiting with you. I look forward to the possibility that we may again meet sometime soon. In the meantime, I am sending you enclosed, a copy of the Thanksgiving Day Service, about which we spoke during my recent visit with you. I rather hope that both Human Rights Day (December 10th) and Bill of Rights Day (December 15th) will some day be incorporated into a single national holiday with Thanksgiving Day.

I am also sending you another paper, "Know-How, Our Maginot Line", simply because you were nice enough to ask for it.

All of these writings are a part of my own method for releaving frustration and are really crude manifestations of something you said so beautifully last week in Louisville.

Sincerely yours,

A THANKSGIVING DAY

FAMILY SERVICE

The Thanksgiving Holiday is a natural time to reaffirm our faith in those principles upon which our institutions and way of life depend. The attached brief and simple ceremony, relating the struggle for Freedom, was created to assist us, as Americans, in giving thanks for this greatest blessing.

A THANKSGIVING DAY FAMILY SERVICE

A Family Service to commemorate the efforts of those Pilgrims who, in the quest for Freedom, founded our country and gave the world a nation based on "liberty and justice for all."

This Service can be used by groups of any convenient size. It is designed to take place at the Thanksgiving dinner table. The leader of the Service should be the head of the home in which the Service is performed. Everyone present who can should take part. The portions to be read may be assigned at the leader's discretion. The writer's suggestions in this connection do not go beyond occasional notes.

Experience has indicated that the success of the Service depends upon how much discussion is stimulated. Departures from the prepared notes will occur naturally and should be encouraged. The ceremony should be respectful and earnest, but not too formal. Try to answer all questions that may arise. The Service should take place before the dinner is served and concludes with Grace. It can be satisfactorily managed in thirty to forty-five minutes.

* * * * * *

THE SERVICE

The Service is conducted as follows:

LEADER: Of all of the national holidays celebrated in our country, the most typically American and the oldest is Thanksgiving. We know this day as a solemn day and also as one of great rejoicing. In millions of homes throughout the land are gathered families and friends, even as we are here. They come together to rejoice in the fruit of the harvest and to give thanks for the blessings bestowed upon them by Almighty God as individuals and as part of a nation. It is entirely fitting, therefore, that we recall here how and why this Day came to be and what significance it holds for us.

(Turning to youngest who can comprehend) How did the Thanksgiving Holiday start? Tell us what Thanksgiving means to you.

(Allow the youngest to answer this in his or her own words. Give gentle encouragement. If several children are present, give each a chance to join in the answer.)

LEADER: (Turning to a young man or woman present) And what does Thanksgiving mean to us grown-ups?

A READER: Just when and where the idea of a Thanksgiving started no one really knows. Even the oldest historic records show that there were many ancient festivals celebrated by many peoples at their time of harvest. How the celebration of the first harvest festival of the Pilgrims in this country, in 1621, came about is known to every school child. The name of the Holiday tells us what Thanksgiving means to us. We look upon Thanksgiving as the Day for giving thanks for our blessings. On this day it has become the custom for people of all religious beliefs to go to the church of their choice, each to give thanks in his way. On this day it is the custom for the entire family to gather at home for a Thanksgiving Day Dinner. Thanksgiving has become a very important day in our lives. It is a day of humblesness and prayer with appeal to all people--regardless of race, color, creed, or national origin.

LEADER: (To young lady) The Pilgrims have been mentioned. Who were they, and why did they come to America?

A READER: Over 300 years ago, many people in Europe were made unhappy because their rulers did not let them worship God as they wished. In England, for example, the king decreed that all the people he ruled had to use the same prayers as he did or he would throw them into prison or drive them away from their homes. So unhappy did some of these people become that they left their homes and went to far-off countries. These people--in search of a better life, free from religious persecution--called themselves Pilgrims. They were ordinary folk--men, women, and children--of all kinds. Some were merchants, some sailors, some scholars, professional people, laborers, farmers--all were deeply religious, and in search of Freedom to Worship their God as they wished. A band of them embarked on the ship Mayflower to come to America, a new land where they could live as they pleased. They landed at Plymouth Rock in 1620.

LEADER: Let us read responsively the poem, "The Landing of the Pilgrim Fathers."

THE LANDING OF THE PILGRIM FATHERS

by Felicia D. Hemans

LEADER:
The breaking waves dashed high
On a stern and rock-bound coast,
And the woods, against a stormy sky,
Their giant branches tossed;

ALL:
And the heavy night hung dark
The hills and waters o'er,
When a band of exiles moored their bark
On the wild New England shore.

LEADER:
Not as the conqueror comes,
They, the true-hearted, came,
Not with the roll of stirring drums,
And the trumpet that sings of fame;

ALL:
Not as the flying come,
In silence and in fear,--
They shook the depths of the desert's gloom
With their hymns of lofty cheer.

LEADER:
Amidst the storm they sang,
And the stars heard and the sea!
And the sounding aisles of the dim wood rang
To the anthems of the free!

ALL:
The ocean-eagle soared
From his nest by the white waves' foam,
And the rocking pines of the forest roared,--
This was their welcome home!

LEADER:
There were men with hoary hair
Amidst that pilgrim-band;
Why had they come to wither there,
Away from their childhood's land?

ALL: There was a woman's fearless eye,
Lit by her deep love's truth;
There was manhood's brow serenely high,
And the fiery heart of youth.

LEADER: What sought they thus afar?
Bright jewels of the mine?
The wealth of seas, the spoils of war?--
They sought a faith's pure shrine!

ALL: Ay, call it holy ground,
The soil where first they trod!
They have left unstained what there they found-- Freedom to worship God.

LEADER: Did the Pilgrims celebrate Thanksgiving immediately upon landing?

A READER: No. The first year was a hard one for the little band of Pilgrims. There was much work to be done, homes to build, many folk were sick and the winter was a hard one. The following year, when the crops that had been planted were harvested, they gathered to thank God, so the first Thanksgiving Day was celebrated in 1621.

A READER: Although Thanksgiving was created in 1621, it did not become an annual event for many, many years. In 1622 the harvest was so poor, there was no Thanksgiving Feast at all! The spirit of the Thanksgiving festival in American was set by George Washington, in 1789, after the colonies were united by the Revolution. This proclamation set aside November 26th, 1789, as a day of Public Thanksgiving and Prayer for all of the blessings enjoyed by Americans as a free people, and mentions specifically that we should be thankful for the civil and religious liberty with which we are blessed.

A READER: Although proclaimed by George Washington, Thanksgiving did not become a national, legal holiday until proclaimed such by Abraham Lincoln in 1863. The most tireless worker for a national Thanksgiving holiday was Mrs. Sarah Josepha Hale, a writer, who campaigned for this holiday for 36 years before her efforts met with success. It was she who suggested the last Thursday in November for Thanksgiving.

LEADER: And so, this is how Thanksgiving became the national holiday we now celebrate. This, then, is the day on which we most solemnly thank God for the blessings of a bountiful harvest. This is the day we are thankful for the men and women of courage who ventured to this country as Pilgrims to seek religious freedom. On this day we remember the pioneers, the dreamers, the men of ideals and the men of ideas; those who fought and those who perished in the mighty battles for freedom; the men of all faiths who founded and built our America. This is the day we give thanks as citizens of the country which gave "freedom of the individual" to the world. It is particularly fitting that we take a few moments here to recall that the rights and privileges we enjoy did not occur suddenly--or accidentally; that our way of life evolved through centuries of toil; that the system under which we live is based upon principles of liberty that were developed in many great documents from the Ten Comandments, the Sermon on the Mount, the Great Charter of England, the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States and its Bill of Rights. We are all familiar with the Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount. Let us hear something about the Great Charter of England

A READER: The Great Charater of England, or Magna Charta, was written during the reign of King John of England. "Bad King John", as he was called, hated the church, levied heavy and unjust taxes, and confiscated land as he pleased. Things became so bad that, in the year 1215, the great barons of England forced him to sign a document guaranteeing certain rights and privileges for them. Thus was born the Magna Charta, a document drawn to protect the barons from their king. It did not, however, protect the people from the barons. Nonetheless, its importance was great because it outlined a means of action between a government and its people, which had far-reaching effects and led to our immortal Declaration of Independence.

LEADER: Our Declaration of Independence evolved in much the same manner as the Magna Charta. By 1774 the unjust action of King George of England toward the American colonies had become so unbearable that the colonies banded together to meet this threat to their freedom. Who among us has not heard the story of the first Continental Congress" of the Boston Tea Party? of Paul Revere? of Patrick Henry's stirring "I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me liberty or give me death"? The colonies asking for just rights and liberties instructed their delegates to the Continental Congress "to declare the united colonies free and independent states". It was Thomas Jefferson who wrote this immortal document which blazed the trail for freedom in this country. Signed on July 4, 1776, the Declaration of Independence is one of the greatest documents in world history. Let us hear once more a portion of its immortal message.

ALL: When, in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume, among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident--that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That, to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed . . .

A READER: When the Revolutionary War had ended, the 13 American colonies were finally independent. They were not united, however, and it required painful effort to frame a government that would be acceptable to all. A Constitutional Convention was called, and in 1788 the Constitution of the United States became the "supreme law of the land." The struggle to obtain ratification of the Constitution by the individual states was a mighty one. So severe were the objections, that not until the various states were assured that additional safeguards of personal liberties were to be added to the original document, would they agree to it. The additions in the form of ten articles of amendment are our Bill of Rights. We must not forget that this document, our Constitution, was the first in man's history which was prepared for the sole purpose of protecting a people from its own government.

LEADER: Let us together read the Preamble to the Constitution of the United States:

ALL: We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

LEADER: And now, together we will read our Bill of Rights. This is especially fitting. For here in the Bill of Rights is contained the spirit of the Constitution; here is preserved the majesty of the individual; here is the source of our Free Speech, Free Worship, Free Press, the Right of Assembly, the Right of Trial by Jury. In the Bill of Rights we find our guarantee of protection from oppression, the very basis of our American Way of Life.

ALL: Article One:- Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people to peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

A READER: Article Two:- A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed.

A READER: Article Three:- No Soldier shall in time of peace, be quartered in any house, without consent of the Owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

ALL: Article Four:- The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

A READER: Article Five:- No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamouse crime, unless on a presentment or indicment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

A READER: Article Six:- In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him, to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defence.

A READER: Article Seven:- In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.

Article Eight:- Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Article Nine:- The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

ALL: Article Ten:- The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

LEADER: Will you all join with me now in concluding our Thanksgiving Day Service.

ALL: On this Thanksgiving Day, let us reaffirm our faith in those principles upon which is based our freedom, our individual liberties and our way of life. Teach us, oh God, to live with faith and in tolerance in order that we may receive Thy full blessings as free men always.

The Group now sings:

AMERICA, THE BEAUTIFUL

O beautiful for spacious skies, For amber waves of grain,
For purple mountain majesties Above the fruited plain.

ALL: America! America! God shed His grace on thee,
And crown thy good with brotherhood From sea to shining sea.

O beautiful for pilgrim feet Whose stern impassion stress
A thoroughfare for freedom beat Across the wilderness

ALL: America! America! God mend thine ev'ry flaw, Confirm thy soul in self-control, Thy liberty in law.

O beautiful for heroes proved In liberating strife,
Who more than self their country loved, And mercy more than life.

ALL: America! America! May God thy gold refine
Till all success be nobleness And ev'ry gain divine.

O beautiful for patriot dream That sees beyond the years
Thine alabaster cities gleam Undimmed by human tears.

ALL: America! America! God shed His grace on thee,
And crown thy good with brotherhood From sea to shining sea.

End of Service

Grace, suitable to the religious background of those assembled, is now said.

Know-How, Our Maginot Line

Know-How, Our Maginot Line

A. M. ZAREM, Stanford Research Institute, Los Angeles Division, Los Angeles, Calif.

It is generally agreed that America's production know-how is her chief source of strength. Without free enterprise, that strength would wither

In 1934, a famous Frenchman, with knowledge of tactical operations of all the French armies, is said to have stated: ". . . the impenetrable fortifications now under construction will be our lasting security . . . the fortifications of the Maginot Line will make up for any deficiency in numbers which we may have to face in an enemy." (Pertinax, "The Grave Diggers of France," Doubleday, Doran, 1944.) The Maginot Line, whose construction was started in 1929, was one of the most remarkable fortresses ever built. It ranks with the Walls of Jericho and the Great Wall of China in its position in history. The line was 125 miles long and consisted of a variety of fortifications, pill boxes, and so forth, connected by an elaborate system of elevators, underground corridors, and other systems of communication. It cost approximately $500 million and could not be replaced now for more than double that amount.

The Maginot Line was never stormed. The German army invasion of the low countries began on May 10, 1940, and the Germans entered Paris June 14. The line was surrendered to the German armies on June 16, a bare 36 days after the invasion of the low countries started. It may be of interest to note that the Germans found there foods, supplies, and munitions to last an army of about 250,000 men for one year.

What do we Americans seem to depend upon most for our future security? If a public poll were taken, most answers would fall into two categories. The basis of our security, we believe, lies in (1) the atomic bomb, and (2) the great American Production Know-How, which will build bigger, better, and more bombs, and deliver them to any possible aggressor.

This attitude should be a cause for real concern. Before we definitely decide our security lies in American know-how and the atomic bomb, should we not look more carefully into and behind these more or less obvious answers?

It is the tendency of human beings in general, and Americans perhaps in particular, to adopt the philosophy of naming something and forgetting it. There was a time when the average man on the street gave a pious answer to the question: "What makes grass green?" So great have been the strides of science that today, in answer to the same question, even young folk reply, "chlorophyll!" Yet this answer has no true meaning for them. It does not explain the color of grass any more completely, and for most of us the whole matter is no better understood today than 50 years ago. We quench our curiosity about things by giving them a name.

In examining the basis for our know-how we may find other contributing factors which may be even more important.

Of course, production won World War II. As a country the U. S. can outproduce any other country in the world; and, indeed, perhaps the entire world on selected items. What is more pertinent, is: will we be able to outproduce other countries in the newer things, 10, 20, and 30 years from now? How did the present advanced state of our technology come about? What is behind this know-how? Consider scientific research and the role it has played in our industrial development.

It has been said quite generally that the function of all research is to make man healthier and happier and to increase his knowledge of all things about him. Fundamental research has no yardsticks; it has no value, no price; it does not lead to patents. The essence of applied research, on the other hand, is the application of the results of fundamental research toward a definite, preconceived, and useful goal. Clearly enough, fundamental scientific research is the basis for technological advance. Now science means many things to many people. There are those who feel that a television set, the atomic bomb, or a garbage grinder are "science." To resolve the confusion that exists in the minds of many between science and the things of science, it is necessary to go back several hundred years.

Birth of Scientific Method

In the 17th century man's views went through a dramatic change. A new philosophy was born, based upon experimentation, observation, deductive reasoning, and more experimentation. Thus developed the scientific method.

Scientists of the 17th century must have hoped for an early arrival of the tremendous benefits they expected to come from their activities and theories. However, it required nearly two centuries before the practical influence of basic research and scientific progress made itself felt. By free exchange of ideas we obtained our theories from abroad; and until quite recently, the strength of the United States lay in the practical application of scientific principles rather than in the discovery of new knowledge. This could be expected for a young, growing country with an untapped wealth in resources. As far as the atomic bomb is concerned, we are all supposed to know that the basic discovery of nuclear fission was made in Germany, founded on research done in Italy.

The motivation behind basic research

A. M. Zarem, after graduation from IIT, worked on advanced degrees at CalTech while instructing in physics, electrical engineering, and mathematics. Later, at Allis-Chalmers, he invented what has been called "an automatic oscillograph with a memory." As chief administrative and scientific representative of Stanford in southern California, Dr. Zarem has been active on major problems of the region, including mass transportation, water resources, and air pollution. He suggested, organized, and directed the first and second National Air Pollution Symposia.

was curiosity, not the desire for comfort or personal gain. Lee A. DuBridge, president of California Institute of Technology, has stated: "This knowledge of science, furthermore, does not come labelled whether it is to be used for good or evil purposes. It is just knowledge, which can be used in any way that man desires." It is not to be confused with or taken to be refrigerators, atomic bombs, or garbage grinders. Science, extended by curiosity, has no geographical boundaries—its boundaries are the boundaries of the mind. It therefore shows no partiality to race, color, creed, or national origin. There is no pattern, no law, no rule of behavior we know about which can be used to predict where in this world or when a brilliant mind will appear.

Distribution of Nobel Prizes

This can be partially illustrated by reviewing the list of Nobel Prize winners since 1901. The Nobel Prizes have been given in five selected fields since that time. These fields are physics, chemistry, medicine and physiology, literature, and peace. The results are as follows: In physics the English have 14 Nobel Prize winners, the Germans 11, the Americans nine, the French five, the Dutch four. We should note that the Germans obtained only one after 1925. And of the American nine, six came after 1936. Surely the Americans appear to be just beginning in the field of physics. In the field of chemistry, the Germans have 19, the Americans nine, the English six, the French six, the Swedish three. Of the nine the Americans have, six were obtained after 1945. In medicine and physiology, we are much better; the Americans have 15, Germans nine, English eight, French three, Dutch three, and the Russians two. Of the American 15, 14 have come since 1933. Of the German nine, three since 1931. So we see again the newness of American approach to science. Noticeable also is the dark age which descended upon Germany. In the field of literature, the French have eight, the English five, Germans five, Americans three, Italian three, and the Danish two. All three of the American came after 1930. In the field of peace, the Americans have 11, French seven, English five, the Germans three, and the Swiss four. Certainly in the field of peace Americans lead.

As far as applied research and production know-how activities are concerned, the world has witnessed the most remarkable growth of these activities in America. Toward the latter part of the 19th century competition among countries and in the United States increased to a sufficient degree to cause industry to turn to science. The results of this activity were so remarkable that industry and science have been wed ever since. It was during this period, toward the end of the 19th century, that a large number of independent investigators—such as Edison and Goodyear—made discoveries which led to the establishment of entirely new industries.

Systematic research by companies and research departments and laboratories began in the early 1900's. Reflect upon this: ORGANIZED INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH IS ONLY ABOUT 50 YEARS OLD! While atomic bombs, radar, television, and a multitude of devices with synthetic intelligence are commonplace today, the elementary particle of matter which had to be harnessed to make possible these developments was given the name "electron" only about 50 years ago. In 1915 we had about 100 research laboratories in this country; by 1950 we had approximately 3000, employing perhaps 200,000 people. This magnificent growth has been an indication that the American industrialist has come to consider research not as an expense, but rather as a capital investment, an insurance against technological obsolescence. It is this application of the results of science to industry which has resulted in the Magnificent March of Magic from our laboratories and our shops. It is this application of science to industry which has developed our know-how.

Some inescapable conclusions can be summarized here.

(1) If we live in an age of anything, it is an age of science; an age in which the products of science confront us at every turn.

(2) Pure scientific research traditionally grows best in the universities.

(3) Fundamental research precedes and supports applied research, and it is the applied research and the applied science which has given us the automobiles, refrigerators, garbage grinders, and atomic bombs.

(4) Science itself has no direct social impact. It is important that we recognize that the social impact of science begins in the industrial, governmental, and other research laboratories where the knowledge revealed by science is utilized to the making of things, be they for good or bad.

(5) A nation that wishes to be a leader in technology must certainly be a leader in pure science.

(6) Behind American know-how is German know-how, and French know-how, English, Swedish, and Norwegian know-how, clear down to the know-how of Pithecanthropus erectus.

(7) Behind our know-how stands "know-why"; and just as know-how is related to applied science, so know-why is identified with basic science.

(8) We must recognize the relationship between know-how and know-why, in order that we may put more energy into understanding science. Certainly we must somehow clear up the popular confusion that exists today and makes people think that an atomic bomb or a television set is science. It is the scientists' responsibility to see that the public is shown the difference between "science, technology, and the practical arts," in order that closer attention may be given to the scientific and technological elements which increasingly have to enter into our national policy.

Is there security in know-how? Yes! to a degree. There is the same security in know-how as there was in the Maginot Line. It will hold for a time; certainly against frontal attacks in which another country's know-how is pitted against ours. However, we must realize that know-how is not exclusively ours. Behind it stands know-why, and know-why is where one finds it.

In a recent press release, Gordon Dean, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, was quoted as stating that approximately 20 countries have now enacted laws regarding the control of atomic energy; and that in some 14 countries, Russia being only one of them, atomic research was being pursued. Specifically, Mr. Dean stated: "Atomic energy, on an international scale, is rapidly becoming a factor to be reckoned with in world affairs, aside from its role as a military weapon." It seems clear that know-how alone will not secure our future. It seems also as clear that know-why is at least as important as know-how; that if we wish to have know-how in the future, we must continue to develop our know-why now. But is this sufficient to ensure our future?

Clearly a nation that is healthy, a nation whose welfare is preserved, is a nation that can be strong. It is therefore important that we view the welfare of this nation to determine how it has come about. In a larger sense, neither know-how or know-why alone, or even together, has been sufficient to ensure our continued welfare. While it is important that we understand the roles that know-how and know-why have played in increasing our productivity and our standard of living, it is even more important to realize that know-how and know-why alone would not be sufficient to bring this country to its present position of leadership. There are other extremely significant ingredients which aided in bringing this about.

Free Enterprise Stands Back of Know-How

The mass of people today believes that further increase in our standard of living must, of course, certainly come about. Many of us really believe that these increases in our standard of living are not only easy, but that they are inevitable, and that our present standard of living developed automatically by some obscure process. There is not a full realization of how much this progress owes, for example, to incentives as they have been available in this country.

Our wealth, our standard of living, our security and our future depend upon a complex combination of things: a free, restless, skilled, vigorous people, their natural resources, and a stimulating economic climate of freedom of enterprise. Without this freedom to stimulate the flow from basic science to applied science, from know-why to know-how, we can stand in danger of losing the future. But neither know-why, know-how, or freedom of enterprise stand alone. We must support them all. Tooling physically is in many ways similar to constructing a Maginot Line. It will secure us from frontal attack. It is certainly not sufficient. We must tool mentally as well, lest we become vulnerable from behind, from the direction of pure science. Finally, it is part of our responsibility, if we believe these things, to see that the public in general is informed in order that it may act intelligently in any crisis that may lie ahead.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

This is a little clearer than the typescript I sent you on December 1st. At least its tone is less apostolic. Because the ideas in it are new and unaccustomed, some of the newness will have to be rubbed off in public discussion before Congress can be expected to react favorably. Broad public discussion is the main problem now, but I think the ball is beginning to roll. I hope you can find a moment to look it over.

Congratulations on your reaching the top of the tree in TV.

DEMOCRATIC IDEALS AND COMMUNIST IDEOLOGY
or
A NEW LOOK AT THE COLD WAR

Edmund Zawacki, Chairman, Department of Slavic Languages

When the first atom bomb exploded over Hiroshima, it smashed more than a great Japanese industrial center. It also smashed certain traditional trains of thought in men's minds. Since Hiroshima, terms have had to be re-defined in many fields of knowledge besides physics and chemistry.

To-day, the cosmic glare of the hydrogen bomb is the light by which our terms must be re-defined particularly in political science. The very survival of human life on this planet may be at stake. Nor are such new definitions the exclusive concern of the so-called experts. They are rather the concern of common folk and common sense.

Let us take the concept of world peace. How should we define it? After all, a definition valid for the swirling [illegible] dynamism of international life in the supersonic hydrogen epoch is necessary.

Peace must be conceived as something positive and dynamic. It is not the mere absence of war but the dynamic opposite of war. In a single familiar word, peace must be momentum exerting overwhelming force in a direction away from war. No static concept of peace is valid in a world being driven by the atom.

Ordinary common sense reveals that momentum with this latent power and direction is usual in everyday life among individuals in all societies everywhere. We contribute to it whenever we greet each other in the street, wave a good-bye, or invite each other to the house for a visit. Obviously, the momentum of these familiar actions is away from strife, and its cumulative potential overwhelms those who would challenge it.

We can stand firmly on the assertion that this definition of peace holds as true among nations in world society as among individuals in any community. Stable world peace, therefore, is just as attainable as the peace of any community. But the first condition for it is the practice of direct social intercourse among nations.

Folks at the grassroots of America understand perhaps even more easily than the experts that it is in the power of the American people through legislation by Congress to make this practice the fundamental principle of normal international behavior among all the nations of the world--including the Soviet Union and its satellites--regardless of what the present Soviet Government may say, or do, or fail to do about it. In fact, the necessary legislation has been formulated in a bi-partisan bill which will be introduced for debate in the current session of Congress.

The important truth to grasp meanwhile is that world peace can actually be stable, but only as momentum is stable--dynamically, like the atom.

Once we define peace in these atomic but at the same time familiar common-sense terms, the abstract ideological quarrel between the Communist and the non-Communist world reduces itself swiftly to a single concrete issue, namely, the Iron Curtain.

The so-called Iron Curtain is not primarily a geographical line. Only in the shallowest sense can it be regarded as one.

Viewed from the inside, the Iron Curtain is a politically brutal terrorism in ideas practiced by Communist Parties through police controls wherever they are in power. The Chinese call it brain-washing. Its action paralyzes the expression of sincere private opinion by individuals, and thereby prevents the formation of public opinion. In the USSR, for example, the Russian public is atomized into some 200,000,000 individuals, each fearing his neighbor as a possible informer of the secret police. This is the Iron Curtain. No one dares open his mind to his neighbor. The ultimate purpose of the Iron Curtain in this domestic phase of its action is to eliminate any and every private opinion which might conceivably challenge the Communist Party's ideology from inside the Soviet-dominated area now or in the future.

Viewed from the outside, the Iron Curtain is repressive isolation of the Soviet and Soviet-dominated people from the non-Communist world and the non-Communist intellectual climate. In this phase it is an obstructive activity practiced by the Party on an international scale in order to protect Communist doctrines from new, that is, non-Marxist ideas.

The Iron Curtain is, therefore, primarily a repressive and obstructive ideological activity in world society. Its name, coined by Winston Churchill, is badly misleading, for it obscures the dismaying truth that its practice is establishing itself insidiously as a principle of allegedly normal international behavior. And it is being so established as much by Western democratic acquiescence as by Communist activity. For, when if ever in the last thirty-five years did any Western power--not excluding the United States--even once challenge the principle of the Iron Curtain in world society with anything except propaganda, mere proposals, or political sentimentality?

* * * * * * *

Once we understand the principle and purpose of the Iron Curtain, the relatively new Communist doctrine of co-existence--a doctrine formulated by the late Stalin--shows itself to be a masking maneuver in the cold war. It provides specious moral cover. It attempts to conceal but not bridge the gap yawning between people in world society estranged individually and collectively by the Iron Curtain.

The first and perhaps sufficient condition of one peaceful world is direct, large-scale, social intercourse among all nations. The idea of one world does not require, therefore, any special political structure of the world for its fulfillment, like world federation or any other cart before the horse. The present structure of independent sovereign nations will serve as well as any.

The very idea, however, of two atomically armed and ideologically hostile worlds indefinitely co-existing peacefully, is worse than a paradox or a delusion. It is actually the first condition for continuing the cold war. And being so, it makes for the hair-trigger instability the whole world is aware of today. After all, how long can we juggle two sub-critical masses of uranium without an explosion?

It is from the doctrine of co-existence that the Communist so-called peace offensive was launched during Stalin's lifetime. Stalin's death in no way changed the doctrinal base from which it operates now and will continue to operate. Because it has scored important but, fortunately, still unexploited victories in the West, one may seriously ask whether the Western stampede toward the spurious concept of peace formulated by Stalin in the term "co-existence", is not a greater danger for the immediate future than the military power of the Soviet Union.

At the very least, American devotion to peace has been cast in doubt even among our friends, and a new wave of wishful thinking that the cold war can be settled by diplomatic horse-trading with the present Soviet Government has risen in the West. Quite obviously, it is nothing but wishful thinking to believe that the cold war can be settled by acquiescing in the very principle and condition of its continuation.

Here a warning is perhaps in order lest our hopes in President Eisenhower's proposed international atomic pool rise too high for our own good. Because the President's atomic proposal does acquiesce in the principle of the Iron Curtain, and does seem to accept the idea of co-existence on Communist terms, the plan can hardly give us the position of overwhelming moral strength we need for effective negotiation with the Soviet Government. Under such circumstances we court a serious ideological defeat. The original blast from the Moscow radio that the President's U.N. speech was a threat with the hydrogen bomb, should not be too easily forgotten. This slander was never recanted. Nor did our ambassador ask for an explanation or an official apology. Arthur Dean, our chief negotiator in Korea, walked out of the peace negotiations there for less.

Precisely what is the role of military power in the cold war? If we in America take accurate measure of the Soviet Government's military power, we must admit that it is already too great for us to challenge in the actual field without risk of losing all or most of our allies and courting an atomic war. This is perhaps why President Eisenhower's speech last April calling for Soviet deeds of peace was diagnosed and treated by the Soviet Government as U.S. bluffing with the atom bomb (Izvestia, April 25, 1953), and why the President's U.N. speech was blasted by the Moscow radio on December 9 as a threat with the hydrogen bomb. But quite apart from who is bluffing or threatening whom by shooting off atom bombs and hydrogen "devices" in their own backyards, American military power is also too great for the Soviet Government to dare challenge in the actual field. This being so, a military impasse between the Communist world and the Western democratic has been reached by reason of atomic armaments. Neither side can win an atomic war. And both sides should know it.

After the experience of Korea, it is hardly realistic to hope that such an impasse can be resolved by ordinary horse-trading deals with the present Soviet Government. The solution is not to be found in pre-atomic power politics re-named "negotiation from strength." The hydrogen epoch is upon us. The destructive potential of thermo-nuclear weapons is foreseeably so great, that by the end of even the next five years the factor of superior fire-power in weapons of this kind will be politically meaningless. Perhaps it already is. The test of political strength, therefore, must be coming in a different field altogether.

If American political leadership should in these conditions continue to improvise in negotiations from obsolete strength--and by this I mean military strength, including H-bombs and what have you--it will not take many Big Four Conferences before we shall be obliged to retreat ideologically either into irresponsible bellicosity or into a stymied Maginot-line mentality behind the hydrogen bomb. A Maginot-line mentality is the mentality of co-existence, the myopic outlook the leaders of the Communist world are maneuvering us into.

It should be pretty obvious to most people by now that the strategic objective of the Communist peace offensive is to outflank the Western democratic idea in men's minds and turn it upon itself much like the Maginot-line was outflanked and turned in military operations during World War II. How great a victory this so-called peace offensive has won, was revealed not long ago when Mr. Clement Attlee ascribed some of his frustration as a British political leader to allegedly antiquated features of the Constitution of the United States. In Mr. Attlee's view the President would be able to negotiate with more authority in international conferences if he were not so much hampered by Congress.

The opposite side of Mr. Attlee's thin coin is Senator Bricker's proposed amendment to the Constitution, which provides that the President's authority in international negotiations be limited still more than it is now by Congress.

Unlike as these two attitudes may appear, they are similar in that they both reflect dissatisfaction with the Constitution of the United States. Both contribute to confusion in Western democratic thinking. The Attlee-Bricker contradiction, therefore, seems to mark a victory for the Communist so-called peace offensive. Although these two statesmen would perhaps be the last to regard themselves as ideological casualties in the cold war, the ideological casualties for the West can indeed become catastrophic unless the spurious Communist peace offensive is routed in time. In this connection it is worth recalling that the issue in a recent French election was alteration of the French Constitution.

For reasons like these it is important that people everywhere understand that democracy is a process, not a government structure nor a type of political machinery. We should be more chary of pinning the label of fascist or dictator on people who are on our side of the ideological struggle. Any and every system of government in America, Europe, Asia, or Africa functions democratically in the Western sense in proportion as: 1, private opinion can cumulatively become public opinion; 2, the moral force of public opinion can be exerted on public servants and thus be embodied in national policy at home and abroad. This is the acid test of whether one government is more democratic or less democratic than another.

Conceived in dynamic terms like these, democracy is neither American, nor British, nor French. It is human and humane, and capable, therefore, of controlling the atom. Traduced though it may be by Communist Parties, democracy lives in the yearnings of the Russian and satellite peoples. The evidence is unmistakable.

Perhaps because we are accustomed to think of diplomacy, too, in what are now antiquated pre-atomic terms, we in the West have tended to accept without enough criticism the notion that the way to peace is the door of the conference room. In present conditions this is not true at all. Every diplomatic agreement made by us with a Communist government remains an insubstantial deal and an ideological defeat. The reason is quite simple. We in the West negotiate on the presumption that the world is a single society of nations. Precisely because of the Iron Curtain, the presumption is false. Nor can the doctrine of co-existence make it more than politically scholastic. Deals based on politically scholastic and false presumptions can hardly be anything but insubstantial. But they do contribute to our gradual reconciliation with the Iron Curtain as compatible with world peace. And that is an ideological defeat.

Such a situation, to put it mildly, leaves the Western democracies in an awkward dilemma. But the horns of the dilemma can be turned to toss the Communist party of the Soviet Union.

It is generally recognized--or it should be--that the Soviet Government is only an organ of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. What we in the West perhaps do not perceive steadily enough, is the truth that the Party does not operate the Iron Curtain by choice. It has no other choice.

The alleged scientific truth of Marxism has always been so fragile and is now so thoroughly discredited at home by the experience of the Russian and satellite peoples, that it has required the most brutal repressive apparatus the world has ever seen in order to protect it and sustain it. Marxism does remain, nevertheless, the "revealed truth," as it were, of the Communist pseudo-religion, and, as such, it gives its specious moral justification to every act of the Soviet Government at home and abroad. Everything the Party does is represented as morally justified by its alleged scientific short-cut to the millenium. The Party cannot abandon the Iron Curtain which sustains the so-called scientific truth of its ideology at home, without risking disintegration of its entire body of doctrine and thus losing the moral grounds for its own existence as a party. The element of moral justification is paramount in the cold war.

It would seem, then, that the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and Communism everywhere can be overthrown only by means of and together with the Iron Curtain. We need to be reminded perhaps that we should not regard the Russian and satellite people as Communists any more than the Party does. The Communist Party is an exclusive organization--like every conspiracy--in all countries where it has come to power. In the Soviet Union it comprises about three per cent of the population.

In the United States it is not the President nor the Department of State but the Congress which has the means to bring overwhelming moral force to bear directly and exclusively on the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and its affiliates. Legislation is now in process whose action will completely disintegrate the Iron Curtain rather than merely try to penetrate it. Rep. Javits (R-N.Y.) and a bi-partisan team of co-sponsors from the House Foreign Affairs Committee will lead the debate on it in the current session of Congress.

What is the nature of the Javits bill? All it proposes is to authorize the President to enter into agreements with the Soviet and satellite governments in order to develop on principle peaceful, large-scale, reciprocal exchanges of visitors between our countries, and it will give the President a position of moral strength to negotiate from by providing the funds necessary for our immediate action in such exchanges. We shall pay the expenses of the Russian and satellite visitors: $1,000 each for a two months visit--not more than 1,500,000 visitors annually for three years.

One million fine hundred thousand visitors from the Iron Curtain countries annually! A billion and a half dollars. Have these Congressmen gone nuts? Far from it. Let us consider the bill from shrewd down-to-earth angles--first of all, the economic. A billion and a half dollars isn't hay, but, quite obviously, not a single cent of it can be spent on Russian and satellite visitors unless and until the Iron Curtain disintegrates and the principle of large-scale social visiting among peoples is accepted by the Soviet Government in actual practice. Furthermore, every U.S. penny would be spent by the visitors right here in the United States. Congress can, therefore, financially afford to set a quota of 1,500,000 visitors. The figure is quite realistic. It is the same as the number of people estimated to be killed in Washington, D. C. should a hydrogen bomb drop on the Capitol. It is unlikely that any ciphers can be cut off the end of either quota.

Let us look at the bill now as a new kind of power politics suited to the hydrogen epoch, power politics not with military or economic force, but power politics with moral force.

This measure is designed to destroy the Communist ideology, not the people in the Iron Curtain countries. It is action of a kind and magnitude that makes the Iron Curtain itself a moral issue as well as a political issue between the people of the Iron Curtain countries and their terroristic governments. And it defines the issue in familiar action which plain people throughout the whole world understand--including the millions in the Soviet Union and the satellites. After all, it is a truth as universal as it is homely that, among individuals, only those who wish each other well exchange visits regularly and often. Among nations it is not different.

Our purpose in this action should be openly proclaimed over all the media of mass communication at our disposal--daily, for howsoever long it takes to achieve it. Our purpose is to smash the Iron Curtain as a principle together with Communist Parties everywhere. Our purpose is liberate ourselves as well as the Russian and satellite peoples from world Communism. To emphasize the ism in this statement of purpose is hardly political sentimentality, nor is it madness. It is our choice of the battlefield in the hydrogen epoch. Ideological battles are waged against ideas, and they are fought with moral force, not with hydrogen bombs.

On the simple homely issue of neighborly visiting--once we properly assess its moral potential--we can rout the spurious Communist peace offensive. This would be People's Diplomacy, the kind of diplomacy which can turn the horns of the present Western dilemma and toss the Communist Party of the Soviet Union into the historical past where it belongs together with Marx, Engels, Lenin, Stalin and their pseudo-biological analogies. In the hydrogen epoch exchange of people is more important than exchange of goods. Goods would inevitably follow behind people once the principle of the Iron Curtain broke down. But Peoples' Diplomacy requires common sense and morality on our part. Common sense is knowing what to do next. Morality is doing it. This means acts of Congress, acts of faith in the strength and virtue of the democratic process.

Naturally, the present Soviet Government as the organ of the Communist Party would refuse to participate in a visiting program of this kind. The party has no choice except refusal. It must do everything in its power to smear and obstruct this action, for its very existence in the future depends on its success in preventing the principle of large-scale social intercourse among nations from prevailing over the Iron Curtain. Only in the actual practice of fundamental principles can the moral strength of Western democracy and Marxist Communism be tested. Principles do not prevail upon men by intellection nor mere indoctrination; they require resolute and successful example.

Action of this kind is not a mere proposal to be offered to the Soviet Government to reject or haggle over. As an act of the Congress of the United States, it would be the law of the most powerful people on this planet. Success would not depend on Communist sincerity in negotiation nor on Communist good will.

We are not seeking the good will of Communist Parties; it is irrelevant. Only the good will of the people of the Iron Curtain countries is relevant; they are not to be made to volunteer for the visitor quotas.

The present governments in the Soviet Union and the satellites must name their candidates to fill the quotas. This is to be liberation, not a rescue. The Communist Governments, as the administrative organs of the Party, must choose their most ardent Communists, if they have enough of them, to fill the quotas it is in our power to set, and they must invite American visitors in return. We should demand that the Soviet Government join us in bringing to the attention of the Russian and American people any vacancies left in the quotas by either side. We ourselves should broadcast to the whole world, every day, over all media of mass communication, for however long it takes to establish in men's minds this peaceful and normal democratic principle of international behavior.

Let us at last have done with semi-hysterical fears of subversion by Communism. It is a doctrine discredited in the Soviet Union itself by thirty-five years of bitter experience. Only so long as we subscribe to the doctrine of co-existence do we make subversion possible. Marxism as an idea still rattles in the empty heads only of self-styled liberals and progressives who are a hundred years behind the times, and in the muddled heads of hysterical ladies shuddering at the name of Robin Hood.

What we should fear and fear greatly, is the dropping of hydrogen bombs anywhere, anytime, now or twenty-five years or a hundred years from now. The least of our fears should be people as people, particularly the Russian people, the first victims of the Communist conspiracy. Spies? Agents? Sniffing out our military secrets? What strategic meaning have any military secrets now that even the Soviet Government hastens to reveal its own secrets by test explosions? Military secrets and spies are the cloak-and-dagger romance of pre-atomic politics; if they are not already stuff for the comic books of the past, they soon will be. The hope for peace is not in secrets but in the American and Russian people. Not even Mr. Vishinsky can argue that the act of exchanging social visits is an act of aggression. Nor would the Red Army believe it is an invasion of Russia.

The strategic political initiative in this ideological revolution is properly ours, and the overwhelming moral strength of our democratic institutions will enable us to hold it indefinitely. It was not Points One and Two in President Eisenhower's address to the U.N. proposing the conversion and limitation of atomic armaments, but Point Three which was the most fertile idea in the whole speech. Point Three reads as follows: "Allow all people of all nations to see that, in this enlightened age, the great powers of the earth, both of the East and of the West, are interested in human aspirations first and foremost rather than in building up the armaments of war."

Here the President pointed out the field in which the test of strength between American democratic ideals and Communist ideology must come. The new Javits bill is, therefore, enabling legislation giving the President a position of overwhelming moral strength from which to negotiate to establish peace, not co-existence. If we and our children are not to live like rats in cellars and underground, but as human beings worthy to be the creatures of God, then give these ideas your considered thought and come back next time with some searching questions.

Dear Ed Murrow,

This is an odd salutation, but it is the one that suits the picture of you I have in my memory, neither stand-offish nor easy to presume familiarity with. I appreciated your hurried but friendly note of December 17, which you wrote on the eve of your departure for Korea. Your programs from there were answers to questions in a lot of people's minds, and apart from the fact that our local station occasionally asked "Well, Ed, what's the word for to-day?" and got Collingwood's 'footnote to the news' in reply, the organization and reception of your program was up to its usual high standard in all respects.

I hope you will find time enough to study the ideas in my "New Look at the Cold War" as background for the new Javits Bill, both of which I sent you on December 1st. One new consideration might perhaps be regarded as important if you plan to comment on the bill--which I hope you do.

This legislation will enable the President to develop point3 of his program (Dec. 8 at the U.N.), which I personally regard as the most fertile idea in his whole speech. Point 3 reads as follows: "Allow all peoples of all nations to see that, in this enlightened age, the great powers of the earth, both of the East and of the West, are interested in human aspirations first and foremost rather than in building up the armaments of war."

Without this legislation by Congress, any negotiations with the present Soviet Government on conversion and/or limitation of atomic armaments (points 1 and 2 of the President's program) will of necessity remain nothing more in principle than negotiations for the co-existence of two atomically armed and ideologically hostile worlds--which is actually the doctrine formulated by Stalin himself, and the first condition, not for ending, but for continuing the cold war. Kingsbury Smith may have a new journalistic feather in his cap, but Malenkov was also quite pleased to given Stalin's former high and mighty position as the oracle of the world's future. The new and proper kind of power politics which the Javits bill enables the President to conduct, power politics not with military or economic force, but with moral force, would cut Malenkov and the Kremlin down to size.

If you have any suggestions on how to go about getting this bill debated on Town Meeting when the time comes, I should be greatly obliged.

Sincerely,

E. Zawacki

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Since the pile of stuff I sent you a couple of weeks ago has not come back, I hopefully assume you agree that the new H.R.5852 has something on the ball, and that you will do what you can about it. I trust Mr. Moffett of Life Magazine forwarded to you my review of Samuel Sharp's book as I asked him to. It exposes a line of thought that is also followed, I fear, by the "Research Program on the USSR in conjunction with the East European Fund, Inc." (See the American Slavic and East European Review, Dec.1953,p.581). This program was being run by Alexander and "Cherry" Dallin up to the summer of 1953, at which time Alexander Dallin joined the staff of the War Documentation Project of the U.S. Air Force.

I hope I am not an academic Joe McCarthy, but I do know and attach some importance to the fact that David Dallin (Alexander's father, or brother?) returned to Russia from abroad in 1919 in order to become a member of the Moscow Soviet from 1919-1921, and thus become a Bolshevik big shot in the Communist Party. (See Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, Sept.1952,p.30)

I have no reason at all to doubt the anti-Soviet attitudes of the Dallins to-day, nor do I for a moment question their American sympathies, but I do seriously question the capacity to think in resolutely non-Marxist categories of anybody whose formative training and habits of thought were Marxist. And I fear that people ofthis school, if not of this stamp, are in positions of high advisory influence in academic and Government activities. Else how can one explain the ideological blindness of Harvard University Press when it gave its schola rly prestige to a thing like Sharp's book, or the fantastic phenomenon of the unwitting acquiescence of the Secretary of State and the President of the United States in the Communist doctrine of co-existence formulated by Stalin himself? This is, to my mind, a demonstration of abject poverty in ideas among the so-called specialists enjoying both high academic prestige and great advisory influence in our Government.

In order to keep you abreast of what I am trying to do against heavy academic odds, I enclose a copy of my latest letter to Congressman Javits and of my "new" set of definitions which I sent as a short article to Life Magazine in a new try to reach print with them. I don't know what, if anything, Life will do with them.

The Honorable J.K.Javits
The House of Representatives
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Javits,

I don't know what your reaction was to The President's four-point program in his speech of December 8 to the U.N. Mine was not enthusiastic. Unless Point three has in mind enactment of the new H.R.5852 by Congress, which from its phrasing I doubt, the program can lead to U.S. ideological disaster. That is why I have not minced words either in my letter to Mr. Moffett or in the new short article for Life Magazine which I immediately sent him , and which I enclose. I hope you can see it this way, for unless you can ~~[illegible]~~ what I regard as the fantastic and paradoxical truth of the whole situation, I am afraid my assessment of the President's program will strike you as McCarthyism. Since Senator McCarthy praised the speech with faint damning--along with Vishinsky, incidentally-- he can be left out of account. Most foreign comment, so far as I can see, really damn the President's proposals with faint praise.

The reaction of the Kremlin was predictable--a negative blast followed by a willingness to haggle--and indeed I did predict it to Mr. Rex Carney, managing editor of the Wisconsin State Journal. And it has already had the effect desired by the Kremlin. Even hard-boiled newspapermen are breathing easier now that the present Soviet Government deigns to take seriously a program of international action proposed by the President of the United States! Who has the diplomatic initiative? Malik has gone to Britain as the new ambassador. Nye Bevan has swung what looks to me like a haymaker at Churchill. Watch the Attlee-Bricker contradiction begin to come into the picture in any number of moves by the Soviet Government in the conferences they were driving for all the time, and which now look as if they were traps into which we had maneuvered them. After all, it was Malenkov who in his first speech to the Supreme Soviet proposed big four or big five conferences. The one thing they will strive to keep off the agenda will be point three in the President's program. They will try to crowd it out with "the ban". Watch their counter ~~proposal~~, for certainly there is going to be one. Point three is precisely the most essential one in the President's program and it must be resolutely thrust,not down their throats,but right up their arse with H.R.5852. They can neither oppose it nor absorb it; they can only avoid it if we let them. If we get sucked into negotiations on the politically scholastic problem of limiting atomic armaments in present world conditions, and let H.R.5852 and point three go by the board, we will have suffered an ideological disaster from which it will be hard to recover.

No news yet from Congressman Zablocki or Ed Murrow.

Always with high regard, sincerely

CO-EXISTENCE OR PEACE?

If once we learn to define peace not as the absence but as the opposite of strife, then it ceases to be a lofty unattainable ideal, and turns out to be the usual momentum of a customary human activity, namely, that generated by the practice of neighborly social intercourse. This definition of peace is as true among nations in world society as it is among individuals in any community. World peace, then, is in its essence simply momentum exerting non-military force in a direction away from war. As such, it is something positive and dynamic in international affairs and can actually be powerful and stable, but only as momentum is powerful and stable--dynamically, like the atom.

Once we define world peace in these atomic and, at the same time, familiar common-sense terms, the abstract ideological quarrel between the Communist and the non-Communist world quickly reduces itself to a single concrete issue, the so-called Iron Curtain. The Iron Curtain is not primarily a geographical line--except perhaps to purblind specialists who stubbornly confuse the Communist conspiracy with Russian imperialism. The Iron Curtain is an activity establishing itself as a principle of deplorable but allegedly normal or, at least, acceptable international behavior. And it is being established as a principle as much by Western acquiescence as by Communist activity. For when if ever in the last thirty-five years did any Western power--not excluding the United States--even once challenge the principle of the Iron Curtain with anything except words, mere proposals, or political sentimentality?

Viewed from the outside, the Iron Curtain is repressive isolation, physical and intellectual, of the Soviet and Soviet-dominated peoples from the non-Communist world and the non-Communist intellectual climate. In other words, it is a defensive activity protecting Communist doctrines from new, i.e. non-Marxist ideas.

Viewed from the inside, it is a fierce inverted imperialism in the sense that it is an extension of political control inward upon the Soviet and satellite people in such a way as to control even their mental processes (brain-washing). The function of the Iron Curtain at home is progressive paralysis of individual private opinion, and its ultimate purpose is to eliminate any and every private opinion which might conceivably challenge the Communist Party's ideology from inside the Soviet-dominated area now or in the future.

Once we understand the function of the Iron Curtain, the relatively new Communist doctrine of "peaceful co-existence"--a doctrine formulated by the late Stalin--shows itself to be a masking maneuver in the war of ideas. It provides specious moral cover for the Iron Curtain.

Co-existence as a doctrine should be studied in its proper ideological perspective, for it is the doctrinal base from which the current Communist "peace offensive" operates. The cold war has been going on for longer than is generally realized. Up to World War II, the doctrinal base from which Communist conspiratorial activity operated, was the doctrine of "capitalist encirclement of Communism". Since World War II, the base has been Stalin's doctrine of "co-existence as equals between the Communist and the non-Communist worlds". After 1960, according to the present expectations of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, the doctrinal base will shift to "Communist domination of the world".

Co-existence, then, is the current Party Line. And because a concerned private citizen may still in these United States call the turns as he sees them, it is his civic duty to say that neither Secretary Dulles in his speech to the CIO on November 18, nor President Eisenhower in his speech to the U.N. on December 8, was aware that he was following it. It is perhaps high time that the ideologically color-blind specialists in high advisory positions in our Government began to acquire some common grassroot sense.

Obviously, the very idea of two atomically armed and ideologically hostile worlds indefinitely co-existing peacefully, is worse than a paradox or a delusion. It is actually the first condition for the continuation of the cold war. And being so, it makes for the hair-trigger instability the whole world is aware of to-day. After all, how long can even President Eisenhower's four-point program juggle two sub-critical masses of uranium without an explosion?

The first and perhaps sufficient condition of one peaceful world is direct, large-scale, social intercourse among all nations. President Eisenhower indirectly acknowledged it in his third point. Nor does the idea of one world require any special political structure of the world for its fulfillment. The familiar pattern of independent sovereign nations will serve as well as any. But the Iron Curtain as a principle of international relations must cease to operate. It must be completely disintegrated. And it is in the power of the Congress of the United States to disintegrate it. Actually, legislation of the necessary kind has already been formulated in the House Foreign Affairs Committee for consideration when Congress convenes in January. Congress should debate it together with the President's program. Without the powerful support of this legislation, the President's program will become, at best, a dead letter like the original Baruch Plan.

Dear Mr. Zawacki:

Thank you for your letter of December 1st, enclosing a copy of your article, "A New Look At The Cold War." I have not yet had time to give it the attention I would like to and I am leaving for Korea tomorrow night for about two weeks. I shall hope to be able to study the article carefully after my return.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Edward Murrow
The Columbia Broadcasting System
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Back in our student days in 1931, I met you at the Congress of the C.I.E. (Confederation Internationale des Etudiants) in Bucharest. Apart from your speeches a t the sessions I recall best of all your disputes with the Bucharest police over your Ford. You usually managed to park it in the wrong place--in front of the Royal palace or some other taboo spot. And I rem ember very distinctly your mock dismay during the big dinner given by the mayor in the Bucharest municipal park, when out of respect for the Americans evidently, they gave you the biggest fish head innthe soup! I was sitting next to you. Although I, too, was an American, I represented the Polish Student Union on Commission III (travel). I was studying in Poland at the time. I doubt that you can place me, but it doesn't matter.

I listen to your broadcasts regularly because I enjoy them. As a good newsman I think you will be interested in a news scoop the enclosed materials will make possible for you. I, on the other hand, am interested in the climate of common sense that you can help create in favor of a seemingly crazy piece of legislation.

If you will take the time to study the enclosed analysis of the cold war, "A New Look at the Cold War", which Life Magazine turned down the other day after mulling it over for more than a month(I enclose a copy of Life's letter to me in order to show that their attitude is not at all unfriendly), you will agree, I think, that there is a way to liberate not only the satellite peoples but the Russian people and ourselves, too, from world Communism. In one of your broadcasts which I remember well, you made the common sense observation that to keep on talking of liberation without a feasible and effective plan of action is worse than futile. I agree with you. I am convinced, however, that this trick can actually be turned--but only by peaceful means.

The bill H.R.5852, originally a bi-partisan measure co-sponsored by Congressmen J.K.Javits (R-N.Y.) and A.S.J.Carnahan (D-Mo.), will be re-introduced as revised on the enclosed copy when Congress convenes in January. I have also persuaded Mr. Javits that it would be a good idea to have a team of four co-sponsors from the House Foreign Affairs Committee, two Republicans and two Democrats, distributed across the whole country--on the presumption that Congress and the public would at least doubt that four Congressmen on the Committee could have all g one out of their heads at one and the same time. The other two co-sponsors--if they agree to join the team-- will be Congressmen Clement Zablocki (D.-Wis.) and Donald L. Jackson (R-Cal.)

Of course, in the present political climate the very idea of exchanging 1,500,000 visitors annually with the Soviet Union and the European satellites sounds crazy--perhaps it does in any climate we are used to. But my point is that we are not yet used to the climate of the hydrogen epoch. We seem to be afraid to look ahead five, twenty-five, or a hundred years. Although Mr. Moffett of Life Magazine does not suffer from this shortness of perspective, he did not, as his very decent letter to me indicates, study H.R.5852 with the shrewdness he is capable of. He leaped, as most people do at first, to the unwarranted conclusion that the new H.R.5852 will open the gates "to unlimited Russian visitors". The bill doesn't invite a single one actually. It merely "authorizes the President for a limited period (3 yrs.) to negotiate with the Soviet and satellite Governments on a subject which the Communist Party has for 35 years successfully avoided negotiating about at the policy level, namely, the Iron Curtain.

Up to now we have been passing only moral judgments against the Iron Curtain with mouth-talk--in the U.N., at conferences, and over the Voice of America. By means of H.R.5852's enormous visitor-quota (for your information I arrived at this figure from the official estimate of the number of people to be killed in the event that a single H-bomb should fall on Washington, D.C.), a quota backed by an appropriation of sufficient funds to threaten the present Soviet Government with overwhelming non-military action, we can change the whole tenor of current diplomatic discussions, take the diplomatic initiative away from the Communist so-called "peace offensive", and apply at last moral force against the Iron Curtain--and this regardless of what the present Soviet Government can say, or do, or fail to do about it. In action of this sort we would not lead with the idea of merely piercing the Iron Curtain--which I regard as political sentimentality. We would be leading from the power to disintegrate it altogether. Obviously, this is a new idea breaking loose from the ideological shackles of "containment"--which I regard as only the Communist doctrine of "cO-existence plus wishful thinking.(To back these definitions up, I append, a little extraneously, my review of the latest book from Harvard University Press. It will appear in the February issue of The Progressive published here in Madison. The book has been getting favorable reviews from American scholars of high academic prestige.) P.S. I don't have a copy handy - I'll ask Mr. Moffett to send you the one I sent him.

In diplomacy of this kind the power is behind the President in his negotiation, not out in front as a mere proposal to be accepted or rejected by the Soviet Government. The bill gives the President a morally impregnable political base from which to operate diplomatically on the fundamental issue of one peaceful world or two hostile ones. This is power politics suited to the hydrogen epoch. It is not madness.

If I believed that any one in the present Soviet Government could even for a moment safely entertain the idea of exchanging 1,500,000 visitors with us annually, let alone negotiate actively at the highest level, I should confess myself to be as ideologically illiterate as Harvard University Press and all these "experts" who have already reviewed Sharp's book favorably. The logical question in your mind must be, I expect, wha t is the purpose of H.R.5852 if I am sure that the present Soviet Government cannot and will not participate. The purpose is to overthrow the Iron Curtain as a principle of allegedly normal international behavior, precipitate an ideological crisis inside the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, and smash the whole Communist movement. Once the Mother Party is ideologically broken, the bastard children will hardly stand.

If after studying these new ideas you don't think they have enough on the ball for you to touch, I should appreciate your returning these papers. But if you think they need airing and are willing to do whatever you can about it, please keep them for reference--and more power toyou.

For auld lang syne,
Edmund Zawacki

(~~TOWARD IDEOLOGICAL) CONDITIONS OF PEACE~~

(by Edmund Zawacki)
"Mr. Z."

Ever since the atomic explosion at Hiroshima a change has been under way in men's minds--a change as great as that in the sixteenth century when the Polish clergyman-astronomer, Copernicus, in his pious pursuit of truth, stopped the sun and hurled the earth spinning on its axis around it. The importance of the ideological change being wrought by the atom, however, has been all but obscured by our frustrations in the West with the phenomenon of Communism. It seems to have escaped the notice of too many people everywhere that the Communist so-called revolution, formidable as its present forces appear, is by comparison, like the revolution of a dog trying to catch rabbits by chasing his own tail.

The outlook of a dog engaged in such an activity hardly embraces the whole of Nature, which Marxist dialectical materialism claims (for itself); his outlook embraces merely a natural ~~the~~ hole. ~~of his own a~~. Ribald as such a pun on the Marxist world-outlook may be, the figure itself has more truth in it than ribaldry, and its dialectic, besides, is impeccable.

The dynamic concept of the atom as a knot of energy changes our very concept of matter. It can hardly remain without effect on materialistic philosophy. The newly measured power of the atom is already forcing changes in political science; and political scientists, especially Marxists and those who unwittingly think in Marxist categories, are finding themselves obliged to view the life of social organisms in analogies newer than those drawn after Marx from early nineteenth century biology. After all, a hundred years have passed since Marx and Engels were bedazzled into their cocksure politico-economic millenarianism by their naive belief that Darwinism had revealed the final secret of Nature's process. Marxism, in addition to its serious shortcomings, is a hundred years behind the times.

Not Darwin, but the cosmic glare of the hydrogen bomb is forcing the arts and sciences now to re-define terms in practically every field of human endeavor. Many of our Western concepts, too, are becoming almost as antiquated as the Marxist ones.

Let us take, ~~for instance,~~ the concept of world peace. How should we define it? After all, a definition suited to the positive and dynamic nature of ~~social~~ international life is necessary. We cannot remain content forever with any negative or static concept like the absence of strife among nations. Even in present conditions such a concept is more properly a description of the biological death of humanity than a definition of world peace. World peace is not the static absence of war; it must be the dynamic opposite of war.

Peace must be like momentum. Being positive and dynamic in its nature, it exerts force in a direction away from strife. If we could find an activity which in and of itself would generate momentum of this kind and direction, we should be defining peace in practical as well as atomic terms.

Ordinary common sense reveals that such an activity is usual in everyday life among individuals in all societies everywhere. We practice it whenever we greet each other in the street, wave a good-bye, or invite each other to the house for a visit. Obviously, the momentum of these familiar actions is away from strife. The positive humane force generated by activity of this sort is what we mean by peace.

Stable world peace, consequently, would appear to be not a lofty unattainable ideal but only the function of a feasible human activity, namely, the practice of direct social intercourse among peoples. Furthermore, it is in the power of the American people through legislation by Congress to make this activity the fundamental principle of normal international behavior among all the nations of the world--including the peoples of the Soviet Union and its satellites--regardless of what the present Soviet Government may say, or do, or fail to do about it. In fact, legislation of this kind has already been formulated in the Congress. The important truth to grasp meanwhile is that world peace can actually be stable, but only as momentum is stable--dynamically, like the atom.

Once we define peace in this common-sense way, the abstract ideological quarrel between the Communist and the non-Communist world reduces itself swiftly to a single concrete issue, namely, the so-called Iron Curtain. Only in the shallowest sense can the Iron Curtain be defined as a geographical line. It is an activity insidiously being raised into a principle of allegedly normal international behavior.

Viewed from the outside the Iron Curtain is repressive isolation, physical and intellectual, of the Soviet and Soviet-dominated peoples from the non-Communist world and the non-Communist intellectual climate. In other words, it is a defensive activity protecting Communist doctrines from new, i.e. non-Marxist ideas.

Viewed from the inside, it is a fierce imperialism, an extension of political control inward upon the Soviet and satellite peoples in such a way as to control even their mental processes. The function of the Iron Curtain at home is progressive paralysis of individual private opinion, and its ultimate purpose is to eliminate any and every private opinion which might conceivably challenge the Communist Party's ideology from inside the Soviet-dominated area now or in the future.

* * * * * *

Once we understand the dynamics of the Iron Curtain, the relatively new Communist doctrine of peaceful co-existence--a doctrine formulated by the late Stalin--shows itself to be a masking maneuver in the war of ideas. It provides specious moral cover for the Iron Curtain.

The first and perhaps sufficient condition of one peaceful world is direct, large-scale , social intercourse among all nations. The idea of one world does not require, therefore, any special political structure of the world for its fulfillment. The present structure will serve as well as any.

The very idea, however, of two atomically armed and hostile worlds indefinitely co-existing peacefully, is worse than a paradox or a delusion. Being the first condition for the continuation of the cold war, it makes for hair-trigger instability, and, after all, how long can one juggle two sub-critical masses of uranium without an explosion? Co-existence is not something to be desired; we have it now.

It is from the doctrine of co-existence that the Communist so-called peace offensive was launched during Stalin's lifetime. Stalin's death in no way changed the doctrinal base from which it will continue to operate. Because the offensive has scored important but, fortunately, still unexploited victories in the West, one may seriously ask whether this drive and drift toward a static and, therefore, spurious concept of peace is not a greater danger for the immediate future than the military power of the Soviet Union.

At the very least, American devotion to peace has been cast in doubt even among our friends, and a new wave of wishful thinking that the cold war can be settled by diplomatic horse-trading with the present Soviet Government has risen in the West. Quite obviously, it is nothing but wishful thinking as silly as it is confused to believe that Stalin's death has in any way diminished the futility of our trying to settle the cold war by acquiescing in the very principle and condition of its continuation, namely, the Iron Curtain and its moralistic dressing, the doctrine of co-existence.

* * * * * *

Precisely what is the role of military power in the cold war? If we in America take accurate measure of the Soviet Government's military power, we must admit that it is already too great for us to challenge in the actual field without risk of losing all or most of our allies and courting an atomic war. This is perhaps why President Eisenhower's speech calling for Soviet deeds of peace was diagnosed and treated by the Soviet Government as U.S. bluffing with the atom bomb (Izvestia, April 25, 1953). But quite apart from who is bluffing whom by shooting off atom bombs and hydrogen "devices" in their own backyards, American military power, as Representative Hinshaw and Senator Russell of the Joint Congressional Atomic Energy Committee recently pointed out, is also too great for the Soviet Government to dare challenge in the actual field. This being so, a military impasse between the Communist world and the Western democratic has been reached by reason of atomic armaments.

* * * * * *

After the experience of Korea, it is hardly realistic to hope that such an impasse can be resolved by ordinary horse-trading deals with the present Soviet Government. The solution is not to be found in signatures on disarmament treaties nor in pre-atomic power politics re-named "containment" or "negotiation from strength". The atomic epoch is upon us. The destructive potential of thermo-nuclear weapons is foreseeably so great, that by the end of even the next five years, the factor of superior fire-power in weapons of this kind will be politically meaningless. Perhaps it already is.

If American political leadership should in these conditions continue to improvise in negotiations from obsolete strength when dealing with the present Soviet Government, it will not be long before we shall be obliged to retreat ideologically either into irresponsible bellicosity or into a stymied Maginot-line mentality behind the atom and hydrogen bomb. Bellicosity is the vice which the Soviet Government propagandizes with some success as the inevitable and permanent feature of capitalistic U.S. foreign policy. A Maginot-line mentality is the mentality of co-existence, the myopic outlook which the leaders of the Communist world are maneuvering us into.

It should be pretty obvious to most people by now that the strategic objective of the Communist peace offensive is to outflank the Western democratic idea in men's minds and turn it upon itself much like the Maginot line was outflanked and turned in military operations during World War II. How great a victory this so-called peace offensive has won, was revealed not long ago when Mr. Attlee ascribed some of his frustration to allegedly antiquated features of the Constitution of the United States. In Mr. Attlee's view the President would be able to negotiate with more authority in international conferences if he were not so much hampered by Congress.

The opposite side of Mr. Attlee's thin coin is Senator Bricker's proposed amendment to the Constitution, which provides that the President's authority in international negotiations be limited still more than it is now by Congress.

Both these attitudes are similar in that they both reflect dissatisfaction with the Constitution of the United States. Also, both contribute to confusion in Western democratic thinking. By the same token, the Attlee- Bricker contradiction seems to mark a victory for the Communist so-called peace offensive, which the Soviet Government will try to exploit in any top-level conferences involving Britain and the United States. In this connection it is worth recalling, too, that the issue in a recent French election was alteration of the French Constitution.

For reasons like these it is imperative that people everywhere realize that democracy is a process, not a government structure nor a type of political machinery. Any and every system of government regardless of its geographic location--America, Europe, Asia or Africa--functions democratically in the Western sense in proportion as: 1, private opinion can cumulatively become public opinion; 2, the moral force of public opinion can be exerted on public servants and thus be embodied in national policy at home and abroad.

Conceived in terms like these, democracy is neither American, nor British, nor French. It is human and humane. And, traduced though it may be by the Soviet Government and its puppets, it lives in the hearts and yearnings of their people. The evidence is unmistakable.

Perhaps because we are accustomed to think of diplomacy, too, in what are now antiquated pre-atomic terms, we in the West have tended to accept without enough criticism the notion that the way to peace is the door of the conference room. In present conditions this is not necessarily true. So long as the Iron Curtain continues to function, every diplomatic agreement made by us with the Soviet Government remains an insubstantial deal. We in the West negotiate on the presumption that the world is a single society of nations. Precisely because of the Iron Curtain, the presumption is false. Nor can the doctrine of co-existence make it more than politically scholastic. Deals based on politically scholastic and false presumptions can hardly be anything but insubstantial.

Because all such deals do contribute in their cumulative effect to our gradual reconciliation with the Iron Curtain as a principle of international behavior, they are of necessity ideological obstructions to peace.

This puts us in an awkward dilemma, which obviously cannot be resolved by the traditional diplomatic conference. But the horns of the dilemma can be turned to toss the Communist Party of the Soviet Union.

It is generally recognized--or it should be--that the Soviet Government is only an organ of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. What we in the West perhaps do not perceive steadily enough, is the truth that the Party does not operate the Iron Curtain by choice. It has no other choice.

The alleged scientific truth of Marxism has always been so fragile and is now so thoroughly discredited at home by the experience of the Russian and satellite peoples, that it has required the most brutal repressive apparatus the world has ever seen in order to protect it. It does remain, nevertheless, the "revealed truth" of the Communist pseudo-religion, and, as such, it gives a specious moral justification to every act of the Soviet Government at home and abroad. The Party cannot abandon the protective Iron Curtain, therefore, without risking the disintegration of its entire ideology and thus losing the moral grounds for its own existence as a party.Once the mother-Party falls, the bastard children will hardly stand.

It would seem, then, that the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and Communism everywhere, can be overthrown only by means of and together with the Iron Curtain. We in the West perhaps need to be reminded that we should not regard the Russian and satellite peoples as Communists any more than the Party ~~regardxxxxxxxx~~ does. The Communist Party is an exclusive organization in every country where it has come to power. In the Soviet Union it comprises scarcely three per cent of the population.

* * * * * *

In the United States it is not the President nor the Department of State, but the Congress which has the means to bring overwhelming non-military force to bear directly and exclusively on the Communist Party of the Soviet Union via the Iron Curtain. Legislation can be designed whose action will completely disintegrate rather than merely pierce the Iron Curtain.

The first piece of such ideologically resolute legislation (H.R. 5852) was drawn up in 1951 jointly by Representative J.K.Javits (R-N.Y.) and Representative A.S.J.Carnahan (D-Mo.) in the 82nd Congress. It never left the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

All the Javits-Carnahan Bill proposed was to authorize the President to enter into negotiations with the Soviet Union and its satellites in order to develop peaceful, large-scale, reciprocal exchanges of visitors on principle, and it gave the President a position of moral strength to negotiate from, by providing the funds necessary for our immediate action in such exchanges. We would pay the expenses of the Russian and satellite visitors--$ 1000 each for a two months visit.

down-to-earth realism, this bill may perhaps sound crazy, or worse. Yet, in this fluid, strange, and still dangerous new epoch into which the atom has flung us all, is it being hard-headed or plain block-headed to ignore the uses and power of moral force? It would be silly, of course, to assume that measures like this have power to "sell" democracy in the ideological market, or make friends of Communist Parties, or disarm Red armies. But these measures are not designed to work in such terms. They are designed to destroy the Communist ideology with non-military, i.e. moral force. They incarnate an idea in positive concrete action which is as real and convincing to a Chinese coolie as to an intellectual lotus-eater like Nehru. Military battles are waged against human beings, and they are fought with brute force. Ideological battles are waged against ideas, and they are fought with moral force. It is almost grotesque that the difference should need clarification.

The Javits-Carnahan Bill means action of a kind which not only makes of the Iron Curtain a political issue at home in the Soviet Union and abroad, but makes it in actions which plain people throughout the whole world understand--including the millions in the Soviet Union and the satellites. After all, it is a truth as universal as it is homely that among individuals only those who wish each other well exchange visits regularly and often. Among nations it is no different.

Naturally, the present Soviet Government as the organ of the Party would on principle refuse to participate in action of this kind. The Party has no other choice except refusal. In fact, it would do everything in its power to smear and obstruct our action, for its very existence as a political organization depends on its success in preventing the principle of large-scale social intercourse among nations from prevailing over the Iron Curtain. Only in the actual practice of fundamental principles can the moral strength of Western democracy and Marxist Communism be tested. Principles do not prevail upon men by intellection nor mere indoctrination; they require resolute and successful example.

The kind of action which the Javits-Carnahan Bill and others like it would pursue, is not a threat to the territorial integrity of the Soviet Union any more than it is to that of the United States. Nor is it a ~~danger~~ threat to the American people any more than it is to the Russian or any other people. The quarrel is not between patriotic peoples. Our purpose in this action should be openly proclaimed over all the media of mass communication at our disposal--daily, for however long it takes to achieve it. Our purpose is to smash the Iron Curtain together with Communist Parties everywhere, and liberate not only the Russian and satellite peoples but ourselves, too, from world Communism. To emphasize the ism in this statement of purpose is hardly political sentimentality; it is our choice of the battlefield.

A few words of caution are necessary in conclusion. Action of this kind is not a mere proposal to be offered to the Soviet Government to accept, reject, or haggle over--like the exchange of prisoners at Panmunjom. Success here does not depend on Communist sincerity in negotiation nor on Communist good will. We are not seeking the good will of the Communist Party; it is irrelevant. Only the good will of the people of the Iron Curtain countries is relevant; they are not to be made to volunteer for the visiting process.

The present Governments in the Soviet Union and the satellites must name their candidates for the visiting process. This is to be liberation, not a rescue operation. Visitors are not refugees. The Communist Governments as the administrative organs of the Party must choose their most ardent Communists, if they have enough of them, to fill the visitor quotas it is in our power to set, and they must invite American visitors in return. The Soviet Government could set any quota it pleased for American visitors since it would pay their expenses. We should demand, however, that the Soviet Government join us in bringing to the attention of the Russian and American peoples any vacancies left in the quotas by either side. We ourselves should broadcast to the whole world, every day, over all media of mass communication, for however long it takes to fill the vacancies.

The strategic initiative in this ideological battle is properly ours, and the superior moral strength of our position will enable us to hold it indefinitely. Let us at last have done with our semi-hysterical fear of subversion by Communism. It is a doctrine discredited in the Soviet Union by thirty-five years of bitter experience, and Marxism as an idea still rattles in the empty heads only of "progressives" who are a hundred years behind the times. What we should fear is the dropping of hydrogen bombs anywhere, anytime, now or twenty-five years from now. The least of our fears should be the Russian people. Spies? Agents? What practical use could they serve the Communist Party? What strategic meaning ~~has any~~ have U.S. military secrets now that the Soviet Government also hastens to reveal its own by test explosions? Military secrets and spies are for comic books of the past. The hope ~~of the world~~ for peace is in the Russian as well as the American people.

We must not lose sight, meanwhile, of the possibility of hydrogen war so long as the Communist Party of the Soviet Union remains ideologically ~~unshaken~~ unbroken. Ideological action is not yet a substitute for military preparedness. The ~~atomic~~ military impasse on the ~~military~~ atomic front must be maintained so long as the danger of military operations exists.

The resolute ideological campaign outlined here cannot cost us a cent unless and until it begins to generate real momentum in international relations. It is obvious that not a single U.S.penny can be spent on Russian ~~and~~ or satellite visitors unless and until the Iron Curtain disintegrates and the principle of large-scale social visiting among peoples is accepted by the Soviet Government in actual practice. Furthermore, every U.S. penny would be spent here in the United States.

Congress can, therefore, financially afford to set large quotas from the very start. ~~An appropriate~~ realistic quota would be the number of people, foreseeable now, to fall dead in the first hydrogen bomb attack. In any case, the quotas set by us should be large enough to throw the Communist Party on the moral defensive with regard to the Russian and satellite people. This would be forcing its Governments into the unaccustomed moral position of servants of the people.

On the simple homely issue of neighborly visiting--once we properly assess its moral potential--we can rout the spurious Communist peace offensive and force the Party to explain to the Russian people and the whole world, if it can, why every plain individual in the Soviet Union and the satellite states should not enjoy something he desires very much, namely, a respite from terror and hunger, and an opportunity to see with his own eyes the United States of America, the country which, whatever may be its shortcomings, has been the promised land for every peasant and laborer in Eastern Europe for the last hundred years. On this issue, an issue which personally and directly affects every individual in the Soviet Union and the satellites--for every individual would be eligible for selection by his Government for a two months vacation all expenses paid as the guest of the American people--it is reasonably certain that the Party could be morally isolated from the people and even from the army, a situation which would precipitate an ideological crisis inside the Party and smash it. Not even Mr. Vishinsky could argue that the act of exchanging social visits is an act of ~~war~~ aggression. Nor would the Red Army believe it was an invasion of ~~Mother~~ Russia.

This would be Peoples' Diplomacy, the kind of diplomacy which can turn the horns of the present Western dilemma and toss the Communist Party into the historical past, where it belongs together with Marx, Engels, Lenin, Stalin and their pseudo-biological analogies. In the atomic epoch exchange of people is more important than exchange of goods. Goods would inevitably follow behind people once the principle of the Iron Curtain broke down. But Peoples' Diplomacy requires common sense and morality on our part. Common sense is knowing what to do next. Morality is doing it. This means Acts of Congress, acts of faith in the strength and virtue of the democratic process.

1st Session

H. R. 5852

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

October 20, 1951

Mr. Javits introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs

A BILL

To promote the cause of world peace by authorizing the President for a limited period to enter into agreements for reciprocal travel and neighborly visiting by selected nationals, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

That in order to promote world peace as the fundamental principle of international behavior and provide a basis for mutual understanding, respect, and trust between the people of the United States and the peoples of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and its satellite countries, the President is hereby authorized to enter into agreements with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and its satellite countries for the admission of nationals of said countries into the United States and for the admission of United States nationals into said countries, as temporary visitors, for the purpose of travel and ~~study~~ (neighborly visiting), for a period of ~~one~~ three years following the enactment of this Act. Such system of selection shall be designed to accomplish the admission of persons ~~who are representative of~~ from the various occupations, professions, and skills of the people of the country of which they are nationals.

SEC. 2. Each individual selected for admission into the United States under this Act shall be admitted, notwithstanding the provisions of any other law or regulation relating to the admission of aliens into the United States, as a temporary visitor for a period of not to exceed two months. The United States shall pay the cost of transportation and maintaining each such individual but the total expense so payable in the case of each individual shall not exceed $1,000: Provided, however, That not more than one million five hundred thousand such individuals shall be admitted to the United States annually under the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 3. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act.

82D CONGRESS

Dear Mr. Zawacki:

It now becomes necessary for me to write a letter which will come as a disappointment to you. Our Text Department mulled over your article for some time and decided that it could not make use of it. It then spent some time with the editorial writers who were quite interested in the idea but eventually decided that any editorial comments should come later, perhaps when the Javits Bill is introduced.

Your plan to commingle folks internationally at the visitor level possesses admirable qualities of daring. I suppose we should not be surprised, however, at any phenomenon coming out of Wisconsin. Personally, I doubt that the political climate of 1954 will be one to encourage opening the gates to unlimited Russian visitors. At first glance, nevertheless, I think I would personally be in favor of an attempt of this sort.

Let me thank you for thinking of us and let me apologize for h holding up your manuscript so long. I hope you will not be discouraged by the fact that Life does not see fit to latch on to the visitor plan. If any form of such a plan is to be adopted eventually, it will undoubtedly take a long period of incubation, not to mention a lot of effort by gentlemen like you and Mr. Javits. If you can still be warmly disposed toward us, I would like to be informed of further progress of your idea.

Sincerely yours,

Hugh Moffett

Dear Dr. Zawacki:

Thank you for your letter of October 21st. I read your comments with great interest and will be working on the re-introduction of H.R.5852 with Congressman Carnahan.

I note what you say about co-sponsorship by Representative Zablocki and another Republican Representative. I would be very hap py to have Congressman Zablocki come in on this bill and would apppeciate any suggestions you might have for a Republican co-sponsor. Below are listed the Republican members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee:

Dear Program Director:

Herewith our radio and TV kit, which you recently requested. This kit is stuffed with a variety of spots which we hope sincerely will be of use to you in promoting much-needed education about blindness. It contains, properly indexed and coded for your convenience:

A. A message from us to you
B. Twenty 10-second station breaks
C. Forty general spots of 20, 30 & 45 seconds, 1 & 2 minutes
D. Twelve time and twelve weather spots of 20, 30, 45 & 60 seconds
E. Twelve spots for disc jockeys, various lengths
F. Twelve spots for sports shows, various lengths
G. Twelve spots for newscasters, various lengths
H. Seventeen spots for the fashion editors or women announcers
I. Twelve farm spots
J. Forty spots for the holidays
K. One fifteen-minute narrative; two 5-min. speeches; one 15-min. interview; one 5-min. interview

A few extra spots. And our last annual report.

We want you to know that America's 314,000 blind citizens will be deeply grateful to your station for any help you can give. We are notifying the nearest agency for the blind that these spots have been sent to you, and you may be assured that they are as appreciative as we. Probably you know them and have worked with them. In case you would like to make use of the interviews which we are sending, you no doubt could get someone from one of the local agencies to serve.

We have put enterprise and devotion into this project. We hope that as many of your staff as possible will reach into this kit and give a few seconds of air time to a cause that really has been neglected. You can get no more loyal listeners than blind people.

And please call on us if there is anything more we can do. We are really serious about this, and we know you are.

Cordially,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

This is a humble request for one word from you, namely, the saddest word in the English language. What is it in your opinion?

I'm a student at the University of Iowa, working my way through college not by selling magazines, but by writing for them. My work has appeared in the Kiwanis Magazine, the American Mercury, Popular Mechanics, and others. By now you've guessed that I'd like to build a feature around "The Saddest Word in the English Language."

My plan is to make the article largely pictorial---a photo of each person contacted, two or three salient biographical facts, "the saddest word," as each individual sees it, and his comment if he has any. I will do no interpreting whatsoever of quoted remarks.

The people I am contacting are all leaders in their field, respected for their work and for their character. I typed out the list on the back of this page for you to inspect.

I would immensely appreciate this one word from you. Of course, a phrase will do as well. And if you wish to comment briefly, explaining your choice, fine. What I want most, however, is simply your choice.

Respectfully yours,

Dear Mr. Murrow,

It is my hope that, despite your busy schedule, you will find time as a special favor to answer a question.

The question is:-- What American news agencies exist in England to which I might apply for a job as reporter in that country?

I am certain I have the qualifications. My experience includes nine years as feature writer, book columnist and copy editor with the Worcester, Mass., Telegram and The Evening Gazette.

I am 37. My 4½-years' service in the Army during World War II included a nine-month stint in England and an additional nine months on the Continent.

My wife is an English girl whom I met during the war and married soon after. This, partly, plus an affinity for England, is my reason for seeking a change of assignment.

I turn to you out of a long-standing admiration for your radio and television work and out of a knowledge that, through your long association with news work, you may have a ready answer.

I attach for your passing interest an article which appeared in the Evening Gazette soon after a recent visit I made to England.

I would appreciate your regarding this query as confidential since it is not my desire, at this time, to tell my employers of my aspiration. I am quite happy at my job. But I would be happier in a job of wider scope.

Sincerely yours,

Nicholas Zook

Former City Cleric Founds Two Parishes

A former Worcester pastor has founded the only two Lithuanian Roman Catholic parishes in Argentina, and named both of them after the two Lithuanian churches in Worcester.

Rev. John J. Jakaitis is stationed in Rosario, province of Santa Fe, Argentina, where the second Lithuanian church in that country, St. Casimir's, was recently blessed.

About 10 years ago, the former pastor of St. Casimir's Church in Worcester, organized the Our Lady of Vilna parish, near Buenos Aires.

Fr. Jakaitis was pastor of St. Casimir's parish in Worcester 17 years, leaving in 1930. While here he was instrumental in the building of the parish school, and purchased the [illegible] which is now located Our Lady of Vilna Church.

Arms Cut
West Believes Time Ripe For Red Acceptance

WASHINGTON, June 27 (AP) — The United States, Britain and France probably will propose at next month's Big Four summit talks that Russia consider a formula for reversing the arms race in Europe.

The idea is one which Secretary of State Dulles considered with British Foreign Secretary Harold Macmillan and French Foreign Minister Antoine Pinay during the last 10 days at New York and San Francisco.

Dulles returned Sunday from United Nations 10th anniversary ceremonies at San Francisco.

He said he was gratified at Soviet Foreign Minister K. V. Molotov's response to American demands for compensation in the case of a U. S. Navy patrol plane shot down by Soviet jet fighters between Alaska and Siberia last Wednesday.

Landing on an island, the plane burned. Seven of the 11 crewmen suffered burns or injuries.

The State Department made public Sunday a note Molotov handed Dulles just before both men left San Francisco Saturday. The Soviets said the airplane had violated Russia's "state frontier." The American government said Soviet MIGs blasted it in a surprise assault while it was over international waters. The State Department said Sunday there was "no possibility of error" as to the U. S. plane's location.

Molotov also said there was an "exchange" of gunfire, but the United States said the U. S. plane did not fire.

Regret Expressed

However, Molotov expressed regret at the incident and offered to pay one-half the damage—an unprecedented offer in

ROCCO J. MORANO
Compositor For 27 Years

Death Takes Rocco Morano, T-G Compositor

Rocco J. Morano, 47, of 19 Ingleside avenue, a compositor for The Worcester Telegram and The Evening Gazette, died this morning in his home.

Mr. Morano, formerly a very active area bowler, won The Worcester Telegram and The Evening Gazette Central Massachusetts Bowling Tournament in 1946.

Mr. Morano started working at these newspapers as an office boy in September, 1922, and six years later he began in the composing room. Always interested in sports, he arranged many bowling, baseball and golf tournaments between teams from the composing room and other city teams.

He was [illegible] son of Victor Morano, now of Montescaglioso, Italy, and the late Mrs. Antonia (Vonera) Morano.

He was a member of St. Stephen's parish and the Men's Club and Nocturnal Adoration Society of that parish, the Passionist Fathers Retreat League, Holy Name Society of Our Lady of Mount Carmel parish, Christopher Columbus Lodge, Sons of Italy in America, International Typographical Union, AFL, Worcester Local 165, The Worcester Telegram and The Evening Gazette Relief Association, and the GFB 25-Year Club of these newspapers.

Besides his father, he leaves his wife, Rose (Decaro) Morano; four sons, Donald V. Morano, a seminarian studying at St. John's Seminary in Brighton, C. Kenneth, Joseph F. and Rocco J. Morano Jr., all of Worcester; a sister, Antoinette, wife of Angelo Virz, and four brothers, Frank P., Joseph L., Michael A. and Peter Morano, all of Worcester.

The funeral will be held Wednesday morning at his home followed by a solemn high mass at 9 in St. Stephen's Church. Burial will be in St. John's Cemetery.

Calling hours at his home are 8 to 10 tonight and 2 to 5 and 7 to 10 p. m. Tuesday. The family requests flowers be omitted.

To Execute Alleged Spy

BERLIN, June 27 (AP) —A 27-year-old German accused of spying for the United States was sentenced to death today by Communist East Germany's Supreme Court.

He was Joachim Wiebach, an unemployed East Berlin shop window decorator.

Four other East Germans, also accused of being U. S. spies, were given prison terms ranging from eight years to life, the East German news agency ADN reported. Guenther Krause got life, Willi Gast 15 years, Richard Bauer 13 and Manfred Vogt 8.

I VISITED ENGLAND

Teen-Age Gangs Exist Outside U. S.

By NICHOLAS ZOOK

Teen-age gangs are not an American problem alone. Neither are labor strikes. A recent visit to England revealed that island of strawberry teas and old-world charm has its share of both.

But neither gangs nor strikes can detract from the picturesque beauty that is England in June. It is a gardener's paradise, an antique-hunter's delight and a source of continual satisfaction to the tourist explorer.

We learned of the "gang" problem an hour after we disembarked from the Queen Mary at Southampton.

The gang youths, from 16 to 20 years, are known as Teddy boys, our companion said. Reason is, they have adopted a mode of attire that was typical of the Edwardian era. And Teddy is a derivative of Edward.

We spotted youths in the attire on the streets of Bristol, a majestic seaport city, known as the "city of contrasts," in the West Country.

The black jackets were long and tight at the shoulders. The trousers tapered down to almost a pinch about the ankles. And the youths in this get-up wore their hair long with a backsweep.

Newspapers almost daily detailed the doings of the Teddy boys.

Cause Dance Hall Brawl

Teddy boys incited a dance-hall brawl in Bath, assaulted a city official in Bristol, and threatened a girl with a knife. The Army urged its personnel to refrain from wearing the Teddy boy attire when on leave.

These boys delighted in playing rough. Their favorite weapon was a bicycle chain, serving as a whip or a substitute for brass knuckles.

A psychologist in a newspaper article said, "The Teddy boy is merely a form of rebellion by youth to the complex life in today's civilization."

A greater threat to the convenience of the June tourist was the railway strike which has since been resolved.

Canceled because of it was a trooping of the colors and a guard review in London. Postponed to July were the Royal Ascot races, an event we intended to witness with or without the traditional topper.

A strike by Cunard Line dining room help idled many passenger ships for a time and was a heartbreaker in many respects.

Passengers who had boarded the Queen Mary in the expectation that it would sail June 16 were forced to return to London without their heavier baggage. They sought hotel rooms, which were scarce, and counted their pennies to make them last.

We saw mothers with two and three children weep at word of the canceled sailing. We watched elderly couples struggle along long corridors with baggage which weighed them down.

The Cunard officials, incidentally, did a fine job of arranging other passage to the United States.

Why the rash of strikes??

Full Employment Factor

General opinion was that full employment was a big factor. Jobs were easy to come by, and workers were more confident in voicing their demands.

This was the view of an advertising executive, who dolefully mused on the subject during a train ride from Bristol to London. He was a man in his late forties, with an air of efficiency and prosperity about him.

He said, "It was different in my generation. I worked hard for 12 hours a day with little pay. But I say it was good for me and good for our country.

"I have a secretary who typed a letter for me the other day. The next morning I pointed out four errors in the letter. She giggled and said, 'Well, it was near quitting time,' and she was anxious to be on her way home.

"With this attitude, is it any wonder foreign competition is taking much of our trade abroad?"

There is an undeniable sense of leisure throughout the country which to the American tourist is a pleasant change from the restless pace of the United States.

The average Briton is content to return home from work at 5 p. m., have his afternoon tea and retire for the evening hours into his garden.

And it's the rare Englishman with a small piece of ground who doesn't have a flourishing garden. The soil in the Bristol area is poor, I was told. But care and plenty of rain bring on masses of flowers and thick, green lawns.

A war-time product were "allotments," or small strips of land away from the house which are rented and worked into vegetable gardens. The need for increased food production brought them about during World War II. The idea proved popular anad continues.

As a result, in most communities you see an acre of land here and there, neatly divided into small strips for use of perhaps 30 persons.

Pub Is Social Center

The center of social activity outside the home continues to be the local pub, or public house, with the huge pints of warm beer and the inevitable game of darts.

The weather remains a standby of conversation. We had more days with clouds and rain than with sun. On one occasion we stood in a bus queue on an afternoon when the temperature came close to 70 degrees. It was comfortable by our standards.

The woman next to us turned seen and talked to everybody. There's not much else to say."

with a smile and said, "Boiling, isn't it?"

That's England for you, a country which we should like to revisit some day.

PALSY

Palsy School Clinic at Belmont Hosptial is only four years old and the remarkable improvements in its children are not yet well-known to the community at large, our volunteers are neither numerous nor, for the most part, experienced solicitors.

"However," he added, "these workers are filled with love and admiration for the Cerebral Palsy youngsters of Worcester, for most of these volunteers have seen their courage and their remarkable progress."

51 in Classes

Paul E. Frazier, president of the United Cerebral Palsy Association of Worcester County, stated that "cerebral palsy is a weakness or lack of control of muscles due to some condition in the brain. The damage can happen before, during or after birth and is not contagious but can occur anywhere and any time."

He pointed out that the United Cerebral Palsy School Clinic, through specially adapted classes and specialized therapies, is training 51 youngsters and helping them to learn to walk, talk, play and become self-sufficient.

Mr. Frazier said cerebral palsy facilities in many communities are members of United Funds and expressed the hope that the Worcester Association would become a member agency of the Worcester Community Chest in the near future.

"Until that time, however," Mr. Frazier stated, "this voluntarily association of the public spirited citizens, whose membership is open to all, has freely assumed the responsibility of seeing that cerebral palsy children have some chance for a happy, and self-sustained adult life.

Must Shift Quarters

Mr. Frazier stated that the association had recently been notified that it must make ready to give up its quarters in the otherwise unused Coffey Building at Belmont Hospital in order to provide for the transfer of Brookside Home inmates.

"No other city building adaptable to our crippled children is available," he said, "so we may have to move our classrooms and thereapy centers into the approximately 60-year-old Nurses Home at Belmont.

"Costly alterations would be necessary to fit the old building for classes for the children and, therefore, our organizations which, four years ago, voluntarily assumed the responsibility that belongs to the community at large, is now faced with uncertainties and unpredictable expenses that we simply cannot bear alone. Without city wide support, we cannot shoulder any longer our burden of giving these celebral palsy youngsters the education and improved health that they need."

Start at 6 P. M.

Approximately 500 volunteers who will begin soliciting at 6 p. m. will be identified by a cerebral palsy arm band and will ask that contributions be placed in individual envelopes provided for the purpose. Mailing envelopes will be left at houses when no one is at home.

Workers will report back to their captains as soon as they have finished their assignments. Captains will make reports to ward chairmen and the Worcester Cerebral Palsy School Clinic at 249 Belmont street will be open each night this week until 11.

Checks for contributions, made payable to UCPA Worcester, may be mailed to United Cerebral Palsy School Clinic or to Stanley G. Quackenbush, campaign treasurer, at 365 Main street.

Dear Sir:

Thank you for your letter of November 18.

In saying that I have made no attempt to present the case for the Egyptian or Arab side in the present Middle East controversy, I think you are ignoring the fact that before going to Israel in November, I had already visited Cairo in August and filmed an interview with President Nasser in which he was given every opportunity to express his point of view of the controversy over Suez; and while I was in Israel, another of our correspondents was in Cairo reporting on the situation from there - being very obviously impossible for me to be in two places at once.

I have spent some time in Israel and in Egypt in the last six months and discovered that the broadcasts done from both places caused me to be labeled pro-Egyptian or pro-Israeli, according to the point of view of the listener. This, perhaps, is one of the occupational hazards of my profession.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

As a person interested in world events your programs are of great interest to me as an ex-Near Easterner I have some criticism to make.

Your trips and interviews in Israel were extremely interesting to me. I listened to them with a great deal of care. Now, interesting or not, they were one sided and as far as I can tell there isn't even an attempt to present the case for the Egyptian, or Arab, side. I believe that you should attempt today that. A substitute for you is not good enough, one person should cover both ends of the question for the sake of comparison and contrast.

Now, if things are the same now as they were three years ago I don't think you can go into the Arab countries with an Israeli Visa. If you can't do anything about it I hereby offer my help. I think yours is a special case and it should be treated this way. My father is a Time+Life reporter in the Middle East and he will be more than happy to help. My uncles will be happy to declare you a family guest when in Jordan and that will guarantee you, at least a safe escape.

Seriously I hope you do cover the Arab point of view — it is vital.

Dear Ed:

A very good friend of mine - Bill Frye by name - who produces the General Electric Theatre series, has come up with an excellent story which he thinks would be an ideal television vehicle for you.

I know how severely limited your time is, but since in Bill's opinion this is an unusually good story and uniquely suited to you, I thought you might be interested in reading the script, which he had prepared by William Fay.

If you think there might be a chance of filming a half-hour show for General Electric any time this season, please let me know and Bill will get a script to you in the mail right away.

Best regards,

Harry

Dear Harry:

Thank you for sending me Mrs. Fred Wile's letter which I now return to you.

Will you please tell her that it is with the utmost regret that I must decline to address the United Nations meeting in Los Angeles next fall.

The way my radio and television schedule is shaping up indicates that once again I shall have no time for public speaking.

With best regards,

Sincerely,

Rather than trying to translate to you the contents of the attached letter to me from Mrs. Fred Wile, I think I should send it along to you.

I sincerely hope that it may be possible for you to plan to attend a United Nations ceremony here between October 17 and 24, and will appreciate your letting me know.

Dear Harry,

Following our conversation regarding the desire of the United Nations Association of Los Angeles to bring Edward R. Murrow to Los Angeles next Fall, I am passing on this information to you hoping that you will represent the organization in asking him.

UN Week will be celebrated from October 17-24 and will commemorate the eleventh anniversary of its being. One night during that week, we plan to hold a community-wide celebration, naturally, with civic and state dignataries, newspaper publishers etc. participating.

I'm sure that I need not go into the reasons that Edward R. Murrow is the unanimous choice of the executive committee to be our speaker. In addition to the deep respect we have for him, we feel that he helps to form public opinion and if there ever was a spot where the UN needs some favorable opinion ... it is here in Los Angeles. As you know, we have a lunatic fringe here which is very vocal in its opposition to the UN to the point that UNESCO has been taken out of our schools.

I read in the Trades that Mr. Murrow would be out here this month. If he is we would welcome the opportunity to invite him in person, rather even than by an ' official letter'. At any rate I do hope that you will have the opportunity to discuss the possibility with him and perhaps give him some of the background of our problems out here.

Enclosed, also, is a membership envelope for you and Mary and a pamphlet explaining the AAUN which you might like to pass on to Murrow.

Please, please try to work it out ... we do want him so much.

Best,

Bee Wile

STRONGER UNITED NATIONS!

The Need for The American Association for The United Nations

Peace can never be certain unless it is firmly rooted in moral principles and the realities of today's world. The issues before the United Nations are complex. Knowledge of the facts is indispensable before decision. The decisions we will be forced to make in the months and years ahead may be very grave. Our responsibilities demand understanding, and education on the United Nations is surely one of the greatest needs of our lifetime.

MRS. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT
Chairman, Board of Governors
AAUN

Any one who knows the United Nations, its ideals, its accomplishments and believes in the importance of its preservation and the great potentiality of its future will be interested in the American Association for the United Nations, the most important organization in our country to further United Nations understanding among our people.

THE NEW YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, DECEMBER 18,

EDUCATIONAL TV GETS FORD FUNDS

Bulk of Foundation's Grants of $6,493,840 Will Go to Ann Arbor, Mich, Center

Special to The New York Times.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Dec. 17 —The Ford Foundation has made three grants totaling $6,493,840 in support of educational television.

This was announced today by Ralph Lowell, chairman of the board of the Educational Television and Radio Center here, and Albert N. Jorgensen, chairman of the newly created Joint Council on Educational Television.

The gifts were not part of the $500,000,000 given to colleges and hospitals this week. Two of the video grants, one of $6,263,-340 and another for $90,500, will go to the center, while the third grant of $140,000 will go to the joint council.

"These grants," the officials declared, "will aid materially in efforts directed at the coordination and expansion of educational television and will mean the wider and more effective utilization of the channels reserved for educational stations."

H. K. Newburn, president of the center, said that the largest grant would cover the organization's major operating costs from 1957 through 1959. He added that the funds would quantitatively and qualitatively speed up the center's program service to educational TV stations.

At present, the center distributes five hours of television programs on film to these stations each week. The grant will enable it to double the hours of film by 1959 as well as improve the caliber of the programs, Mr. Newburn said.

The center's staff and activities, he declared, will be increased. He added that the educational stations would be encouraged to participate to a greater extent in the center's activities by producing programs annually on a contract basis.

Mr. Newburn said that some of the funds also would be used to expand radio program production and to engage in more comprehensive activities in research and audience reaction. The $90,-500 grant will be used to continue activities that have been carried on by the staff of the National Citizens Committee on Educational Television.

Activities To Be Shifted

The committee's information services, Mr. Newburn said, now fall more naturally into the center's area. The grant will provide for the transfer of its activities to the center, which, along with the council, will continue to provide information and other services to the committee.

The grant of $140,000 will go to the council, which was built on the Joint Committee on Educational Television. Its headquarters are in Washington, D. C. It was set up to develop on a national basis enlightened support among laymen and educators.

Mr. Jorgensen said that the council would continue working toward the preservation and utilization of channels reserved by the Federal Communications Commission for educational television and radio stations.

He and Mr. Lowell said that the Ford Foundation had shown its awareness of the important work done by the National Citizens Committee in the last three years in developing citizen interest in these media. Raymond Wittcoff, board chairman of this committee, will serve on the center's board of directors.

Dangerous Deadline

A deadline carrying a new threat to peace in South Asia is coming up on Saturday. For on that day a draft constitution approved by the Indian-dominated Kashmiri Assembly, and authorizing accession of the disputed state to India, theoretically becomes effective. Pakistan, protesting this manner of resolving a controversy that has been raging since 1947, has brought the case before the United Nations Security Council. Reporting Indian troops massing along the Pakistani frontiers, Foreign Minister Noon of Pakistan has appealed to the Council: (1) To urge India to refrain from accepting this change in Kashmir's status; (2) to introduce a United Nations police force "into the area at once"; (3) to take steps toward a long-discussed plebiscite by which the Kashmiri people would decide their own political future. India's answer before the Council is tentatively scheduled tomorrow morning. After hearing Mr. Noon's appeal, United States Ambassador Lodge urged the Council "to establish its position on the question prior to January 26."

There is nothing in the history of the Kashmir controversy to encourage hopes that India will make a conciliatory answer to the latest Pakistani charges. Prime Minister Nehru, insisting that military aggression against the state was initiated by Pakistan in 1947, has refused to withdraw Indian troops even though the Karachi government has agreed to simultaneous withdrawal of its own forces. In 1948, the U. N. worked out agreement for a cease-fire and a plebiscite. In 1951, the Security Council adopted a resolution calling for demilitarization and a plebiscite. In 1953, Prime Minister Nehru and Prime Minister Mohammed Ali of Pakistan announced agreement on a plebiscite. In each of those instances there was evidence that Pakistan was hopeful the issue could be resolved through a U. N.-policed free vote of the Kashmiri people. But through the years India has extended its political control over the Kashmiri Assembly, in some cases through ouster and arrest of dissenting members. Thus, it is doubtful that action of the Assembly represents the free will of the Kashmiri people.

There appears to be no practical way by which the United Nations can put a police force in Kashmir, at least before the January 26 deadline. It would be a matter of utmost seriousness, however, if India should attempt to force by military pressure an annexation of the state. The right of genuine self-determination was promised to each Indian state at the time of partition in 1947, and it has not yet been permitted in Kashmir. The Security Council should make every effort, despite past frustrations, to bring such an expression about—or make clear where the blame belongs.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Once again I am writing to you with the hope of obtaining an appointment to see you. It has been since Easter week of 1956 that I was first up to see you, and unfortunately every time I have been up to see you, you were either very busy or out of the city.

During this past Easter vacation I spoke with your secretary and she suggested that I drop you a line about a week before I return for my summer vacation in the hope of making an appointment with you. It is with this hope that I am now writing to you.

I will return to New York City on May 31, and will be at my home in Brooklyn until school resumes in September. If it is at all possible, I would appreciate a meeting with you sometime during June, preferably the early part, as I will be working for most of the summer. I also have a letter of introduction from Mr. Gordon Alderman, Program and Production Director of WHEN-TV, which is on file in your office.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Until now, I've worked with Dave Moore, George Crandall,Liz Scofield and Bob Sammon. They are all charming people who do just what you say they do, in your credit line each Friday evening.

The time has come, I believe, for thanking you personally. Like Estelle Newman, I'm never sure whether I speak on behalf of Ralph or Mr. Lincoln. They have a tendency to merge in my mind. Occasionally, I am caught up short, however, and then they become two separate and distinct personalities. As on the day when I was mulling over the calumny heaped on the head of our 16th president during his lifetime, and remarked to Ralph that Mr. Lincoln could have used a public relations counsel; I was told in no uncertain terms to leave history alone.

When last May while working on the Lincoln College 90th Commencement, I suggested Ralph's name to George Crandall as a logical person for you to visit on Lincoln's birthday, we hadn't thought seriously of the Civil War Book Club. The unexpectedly enthusiastic reaction to our first press release was climaxed Friday night by your visit. I can't remember a time in my life when I was so excited, but the aura surrounding this venture has been so filled with unexpected and thrilling reaction that I suppose I was overwhelmed.

Perhaps, I am prejudiced, but it seemed to me that the idealism which motivates so much of Ralph's work (and mine) was projected in that interview. Of course, we received dozens of calls and wires from all over the country, but I wonder if other viewers were equally impressed.

There were some very funny moments,too. Perhaps someday, you will visit your Book Club, and have a drink from your own glass, and we can tell you about some of them.

But all in all, it was a thrilling and memorable occasion, and on behalf of Mr. Lincoln, General Lee and my own personal hero who wasn't mentioned--Nathan Bedford Forrest, may I proffer my heartfelt thanks.

I have just received a letter from Mr. Kenneth W. Chalmers, our State Conservationist of the United States Department of Agriculture in Colorado conveying to me the information that you are interested later this year, perhaps in May, of putting together a program on the Small Watersheds Program.

We have had great interest in the last year on the Cherry Creek Watershed which lies south of Denver and down to the Castle Rock country which is a fantastically beautiful part of our state which is a very good example of what may be done in the future to preserve our watersheds and our soil erosion. Last summer it was my pleasure to go over 100 square miles of this with our State Conservationist and the interested ranchers and farmers. If you are considering and do have an interest in this subject may I invite you to go over the Cherry Creek Watershed as a possibility for your program.

Mr. Chalmers and all of our Colorado delegation would be most happy to cooperate with you upon this.

Dear Mr. Murrow: Attention: Secretary to Mr. Murrow

On April 7 and again on May 14 I wrote you regarding a plan for interviewing SHAPE and NATO leaders which was extended to me personally by General Alfred M. Gruenther.

Since I have not heard from you I assume you are not interested in a plan for CBS cooperation, and I wonder whether you would have your secretary return to me the photostatic copies of the letters from General Gruenther and Brigadier Cross, Head of the Public Information Division for SHAPE Headquarters. I would also appreciate the return of my personal photograph.

I would have welcomed the opportunity to cooperate with Columbia Broadcasting System on this project, as suggested by Brigadier Cross, for it would seem to be a very propitious time to secure the opinions of the military, political, as well as cultural divisions of NATO in view of the new emphasis on the economic, political and cultural relationships of NATO, and the apparent limitations on the military aspects.

AIR MAIL
SPECIAL DELIVERY

Dear Mr. Murrow:

On April 7 I sent you a letter with enclosures concerning a plan for interviewing the top officers of SHAPE Headquarters and NATO leaders upon the endorsement of General Alfred M. Gruenther and Brigadier Cross, Chief of the Public Information Division of SHAPE.

Subsequent to my communication to you and following General Gruenther's resignation, I wrote to him on April 27, inquiring whether he would still be in Europe during August and whether the plan for interviewing was still feasible. Today I received the following reply from General Gruenther:

> "I see no reason why my retirement some six months hence should cause you to alter your plans. It is quite true that the next several months will be a very busy period indeed for me, with frequent trips about Europe and perhaps a few to the United States; however, should I be absent during your visit, you would, I am sure, find other officials more than willing to cooperate. Once your plans are settled and your arrival date in Paris is fixed, we shall know better what the situation will be during your visit here."

He pointed out however, that since August is the vacation month in Europe, it would perhaps be more practical to interview the SHAPE officers and NATO leaders in July. This change would preclude the inclusion of the coverage of the IFUW Triennial Conference in early August which I mentioned in my letter to you of April 7. However, I feel this omission would be immaterial since SHAPE and NATO coverage are far more important - and especially so in view of current developments.

Would you let me know whether you and CBS would be interested in cooperating with the plan -- or whether you feel I should pursue the coverage on a local basis with our own radio and television stations, and affiliated newspaper.

As I mentioned to you in my previous communication, I would be glad to cooperate in anyway with CBS. In the event you or someone delegated by you would prefer to carry the interviews offered by General Gruenther and Brigadier Cross in behalf of SHAPE and NATO, perhaps I could be of assistance in expediting arrangements in Marly and Paris by providing the necessary introductions, scheduling interview recordings, etc.

He tells me he is arriving in New York June 18 on the "Westerdam" and returns to Holland on June 27, and would be interested in appearing on radio or television during that period. He speaks English fluently, although a native of Holland, and because of his official positions with NATO and the Western European Union is exceedingly well informed on all aspects of the current problems. In the event you are interested in meeting him, I shall be glad to provide you with additional information.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

My friend Wilfred Altmann is in the U.S.A. reporting on American Television for the British Press. In one of his articles he mentions that you recently sent a unit to Calder Hall for "Fission, Fusion, and Abundance".

I am appearing for A.B.C. Television in England in a series called A.B.C. Investigates, which Mr. Altmann calls a miniature "See It Now", and I recently visited Calder Hall and Windscale to investigate the accident in the Plutonium Pile.

It has occurred to me that I might be of service to you as your resident British or European interviewer, and I am wondering whether you would consider this suggestion.

I am hoping Mr. Altmann will be able to see you personally & explain my programme and describe my work, standing etc.

I thought a personal approach in the first instance would be preferable, and could be followed – as necessary – by any other official organisations, such as Television Companies, later.

Needless to say I have made a study of several editions of "See It Now". ABC-TV arranged private viewings for me, since our programme is quite a new venture in British Television.

I look forward with great interest to hearing your reaction.

With best wishes
Yours sincerely,
Simon Kester.

Dear George,

I'd be very grateful if you could arrange to let Ed Murrow have the enclosed letter.

This was sent to me by Simon Kester who is himself the leading investigator in a miniature "See It Now" which our ABC TV Company transmits in Britain.

Kester has seen my reference to Ed Murrow in my column and asked me to let him have this letter.

Many thanks for all your help and I'll be sending you clippings soon. Yours Lionel Attman

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I have your letter of April 26, addressed to Mr. Douglas Moore, Secretary of the Academy. I am taking the liberty of answering for Mr. Moore, as he is out of town for this week.

In Mr. Moore's absence I consulted with the President of the Academy, Mr. Archibald MacLeish, and he asked me to inform you with deep regret that the presentation for the award for Good Speech in Broadcasting can only be bestowed on a recipient who is present to receive it in person. In all our previous awards to recipients of this medal (heretofore restricted to Good Speech on the Stage) this rule was adhered to. This practice, as you know, is followed by all universities who bestow Honorary Degrees.

The ballot with your name was sent to the entire membership after Mr. Deems Taylor had spoken to your secretary and had gathered from her that you would be here and available. Your secretary informed me this morning, however, that he had misunderstood her and that she had not committed you to the date but had simply said that as far as she knew, you were free.

Perhaps we may be fortunate to find you available another year.

With my own personal regret, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

Dear Ed:

In line with our earnest wish to keep you informed with regard to the use being made of the dollars which you and others have given us, it occurred to me that nothing I could send you would do this better than the summary of minutes of our Executive Committee meeting, held in New York on Wednesday, October 23rd.

It is short. May I ask you to please read it?

It seems to me, particularly right now, that it is a good thing that the kind of men who make up the nonprofit, non-partisan American Heritage Foundation are willing to devote their brains, their experience, and also their own dollars, to work of this kind for our country.

Again, our earnest thanks for helping make this important citizenship work possible and for your interest.

Sincerely,

Jack Cornelius

SUMMARY OF MINUTES OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING

THE AMERICAN HERITAGE FOUNDATION

Held on Wednesday, October 23, 1957

at the University Club
One West 54th Street
New York, N. Y.

Mr. John C. Cornelius, President of The American Heritage Foundation, introduced to the Committee for discussion a scrapbook compiled by Mr. Byron Allen, Commissioner of Agriculture for the State of Minnesota. The scrapbook described the Alexandria Experiment - a community-wide, nonpartisan, door-to-door canvass seeking political contributions either to the "party of your choice" or to a bipartisan fund to be allocated to political parties in proportion to the voting turnout of the previous election.

The Alexandria Experiment was a pilot operation testing an overall proposal of Mr. Philip L. Graham, Publisher, The Washington Post, that a nationwide effort be made to get every American citizen to contribute to political parties. According to the plan's proponents, such widespread political financing would give the American electorate a greater personal stake in elections and, by reducing the dependence of elected officials on large contributions, should make for a more healthful political system.

The Executive Committee asked General Timothy A. McInerny to confer with Mr. Graham and to ask him to have a study made by the Brookings Institute, or some similar group, as to the precise way such a project could be executed. General McInerny will also ask Mr. Graham to prepare a written proposal summarizing the study and outlining in detail just how The American Heritage Foundation might undertake such a project.

At the suggestion of Mr. Cornelius, the scrapbook on the Alexandria Experiment will be studied by General McInerny, Mr. Edwin L. Weisl and Mr. Thomas D'Arcy Brophy in advance of our next Executive Committee meeting, Thursday, December 12, 1957, at which time Mr. Graham's proposal will be considered.

Mr. Weisl reported that Supreme Court Justice Tom Clark was concerned with the need for developing a greater respect for law and a better understanding of our judicial system. The Committee asked Mr. Weisl to discuss this matter further with Mr. Clark and to invite him to submit a specific proposal to the Committee at the next meeting.

General McInerny described Senator Lyndon Johnson's interest in the revival of a Freedom Train under the sponsorship of the Library of Congress, with the possible cooperation of The American Heritage Foundation. It was decided to ask Mr. Louis A. Novins, Chairman of our Freedom Train Committee, to present his recommendations at the December 12 meeting.

Mr. Brophy outlined Mr. Robert W. Dowling's proposal that the Foundation undertake an annual "Give of Yourself Week." The Committee expressed an interest in this effort to get more people to devote a portion of their time to worthwhile public service causes, and asked Mr. Cornelius to invite Mr. Dowling to submit a specific proposal in person at our December 12 meeting.

Mr. Cornelius reported on the National Anthem project, by which the Foundation early next year would make available, for the first time, to all our 162,000 schools throughout the nation a high-fidelity recording of "The Star Spangled Banner." Mr. Cornelius pointed out that there was no such high-fidelity recording available at the present time. The records, thanks to the valuable help of Mr. John L. Burns, President of the Radio Corporation of America, will be produced at cost by RCA-Victor, and will be presented free to all schools and at cost to all radio and television stations, sports announcers and other organizations. The Committee enthusiastically approved the project.

An exhibit of the Foundation's nonpartisan register and vote activities in more than 680 cities holding elections this year was presented and explained by Mr. Cornelius and received favorable comment from all present. Mr. Cornelius also noted the progress being made by the Foundation in getting States to re-examine and modernize election laws and methods, some of which discourage voting.

Mr. Cornelius gave a financial report, stressing the need for $250,000 in 1958 to support the Foundation's expanded citizenship activities, particularly the program to get out the greatest possible informed vote in the important Congressional elections. Explaining that several business leaders had already consented to sponsor fund-raising luncheons, he asked for suggestions and help in getting other hosts in key cities.

Attention: Mr. David Lawrence, Editor

Dear Sir:

First permit me to tell you how delighted I am each week when I receive your magazine which I consider the outstanding one in the United States. The facts are beautifully presented with graphic pictures in such a manner that people, who do not want to read everything although they should, obtain from a glance at your Newsgram and Worldgram all the facts in a nutshell.

From various interviews you have successfully created some outstanding scoops and as your magazine is now such an important necessity to every one in business, finance and, most of all, politics, I would like to ask your opinion in a certain matter which you in recent issues started to mention.

In our century of specialization we have only specialists. What we lack is a Michael Angelo, the last genius in a lot of sciences.

I am very much afraid that in the same manner as the French before the war had a Maginot Line complex, we are now getting an oil complex which I fear will prepare a catastrophy. Before the war, the French were so sure nothing could happen to them because of the Maginot Line that they were completely unprepared for the events which actually followed. And so it happened that the heavy guns of the Maginot fortification, which were supposed to ward off a German attack, were finally used on the French Coast to kill allied troops as they disembarked in France. I am afraid we are creating a similar situation with oil.

There is no doubt that Mr. Herbert Hoover Jr. is not only an excellent oil expert, but he also proved excellent statesmanship in getting the various oil companies together and, after long negotiations, we were able to again operate oil fields in Iran. However, a very important fact is overlooked; You are the first magazine to mention it and that is the reason I write my fears to you.

In your issue of March 2nd, page 25, you write:

"At present, no American tactical planes are based at Dhahran, U.S. commanders consider it to be too close to the Soviet Union, only a few hundred miles away."

I think, even in the spring of 1941, it was possible for a German Parachute Division to invade and take Crete. Now 15 years later with the new airplanes it would be less difficult for a Russian Parachute Corps to take the famous air field in Dharan which is not too far from Baku and the Russian Frontier. Furthermore, the Russian Army was in Iran and left in 1945, so a break through is very easy from the Caspian Sea to the famous oil fields.

We talk so much of the importance of the oil fields in Kuwait, Dhahran, Bahrein, but we forget one important thing: the more we stress the importance of these oil fields, and the more we stress the importance of our air field to attack Russia, the more imperative it must be for the Russian General Staff in case of necessity as their first move to knock out the air field and take over the oil fields.

I remember in 1939 and 1940 the Allies were figuring that Germany did not have enough oil and Great Britain received more of the Rumanian oil than Germany. The end was that Germany took Rumania as an ally and stopped the entire discussion of who would get more oil from Rumania.

From the highest possible military viewpoint, we should not stress the importance of these oil fields. The more we speak of the importance from the military viewpoint, the more certain it is that we stand to lose them in case of conflict.

I don't see any way we can defend this area because Soviet Russia has the advantage of the inner line and can chose where to attack and, if you look at the map, I think a thrust with airborne troops and air force in a concentrated manner would be impossible for us to stop.

You write further on page 25: "If war should break out,- however, the pact opens the way for the Americans to convert Dhahran into a fully operational base for combat planes. Giant B52s from rear bases could land on its long runways for refueling, before and after bombing runs over the Soviet industrial heartland."

Obviously, what you write the Soviet knows too and they can also read it now. In trying to protect their own fields in Baku, it is obvious that the first move will be to try to knock us out there.

I feel very strongly that we should increase the production where we have unexpoked oil in a lot of Western and South Western States, or develop much more in Central and South America. For instance, Guatemala, Argentina, B Brazil etc., there is a lot of oil and certainly a way should be found by agreement with governments for exploitation. If Aramco now pays over $260 million dollars a year to Saudi Arabia, a similar advantageous arrangement could be made with Central or South American countries and we would have the security that these oil fields are near to us and could be easily defended.

A way should be found to compensate the interested oil companies for reduced activity in this dangerous location by giving them more rights for domestic production or in Central or South America.

The main fact is: The more we raise the production in Arabian fields so near to Soviet Russia and as their own need for oil will rise, the more it will be a temptation for Soviet Russia to grab this neighboring region.

I think it is high time that we grasp the importance of these facts, otherwise the oil fields which decominate our thinking so much now will take the same ending as the heavy guns of the Maginot Line.

Sincerely yours,

VK:RJV

Dear Mr. Murrow:

At the last meeting of our legislative-action group, we discussed the problems with which we be confronted when disarmament becomes a reality. We agreed that the economic problems involved will be so serious that most careful plans will have to be laid now to overcome the transition period with the least possible disruption of the economy and that, in addition, an intensive campaign of public education and enlightenment will be necessary to make possible the working out of such plans. We believe that because of your very large and unquestioned influence as a commentator, you are in a particularly advantageous position to contribute to this campaign of education and enlightenment and thus to help create a climate of public opinion in which the economic problems and difficulties which will accompany disarmament will become acceptable to the public in the realization that the arms race and the vast waste that goes with it Must be diverted into contructive channels for the benefit of all of us. What we have in mind is best expressed in a letter which we just sent to the President and of which we enclose a copy for you.

We are very hopeful indeed that you will give this serious problem your close attention and that you will find it possible to devote a series of broadcasts to this subject and its overwhelming importance. We are confident that if a start is made by one commentator, it will be taken up by others and the campaign will thus gain in speed and dynamic.

We deeply appreciate whichever way you feel you can make a contribution toward this end.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

The President of the United States
The White House
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. President:

At the last meeting of our legislative-action group, we discussed the problems with which we will be confronted when disarmament becomes a reality. We agreed that the coming of disarmament in the foreseeable future is inevitable because another war would mean mutual annihilation in which there could be no victor. But it also seems evident that one of the main reasons why at this time, actual disarmament would seem a mixed blessing to large parts of the population is the fact that our economy is to an overwhelming extent geared to war production. Under these circumstances, anxiety over the future course of our economy and over the jobs of millions of people now engaged directly and indirectly in war production will obviously make it difficult to rally genuine support for our efforts to bring about disarmament. The reaction of the Stock Exchange to every serious move in the direction of disarmament and conversely to every indication that disarmament is a long way off is sufficient proof of this anxiety.

We, therefore, felt that if we are serious in our desire to work toward actual disarmament and in our belief that its coming is inevitable, it is imperative that we help in creating conditions under which the economic implications of disarmament (as contrasted to the political aspects of the problem) will be acceptable to large parts of the population. We also agreed that this spadework should be started by the Administration now. Various possibilities suggest themselves. One would be to appoint a commission to study how to use, after allowance for some tax reduction, the vast amounts now spent on arms production. There is no dearth of projects which need to be undertaken, but for which funds are lacking now. We need mention only, among many others, school and hospital construction, highways, far more intensive medical research than is possible now, and any number of community projects. In addition, the commission should work out plans to make assistance available to industry as well as workers for the transition period - to industry for reorganization and transformation purposes, to workers for retraining, resettlement and extra unemployment benefits. Vastly enlarged help to newly developing countries in building their industries and markets should be contemplated. Part of this help would create, through expanding exports, more jobs in this country immediately, while the development of markets in foreign countries would also benefit us from a long-range view.

Another step in thus preparing for the transition period should be close collaboration between the Administration and the state governors in order to encourage them to make surveys and plans now. Some states undoubtedly will need special consideration and help from the federal government; Southern California is one of these. Naturally, direct consultation with labor and industry should be part of the planning as well.

After lengthy discussion, we decided to write you this letter, with our urgent plea to give your close attention to these suggestions. For apart from the fact that it will be necessary to create the climate in which disarmament can successfully be carried out, plans for the difficult transitin period must obviously be made well in advance. The time, therefore, is now to lay careful plans in an effort to disrupt the economy as little as possible when disarmament agreement is reached in fact.

We are hopeful that our plea will find your ready response.

Sincerely,

My dear Mr. Murrow:

In the Spring I wrote to you about the formation of this Academy which has brought together the most outstanding scientists in the country concerned with emotional problems who are working together with psychologically trained clergymen of the major faiths. Your heavy schedule necessitated your cancelling several appointments you made with me. Summer and inevitable vacations followed. A copy of my original letter to you is enclosed. I still hope very much that we can get together and I am wondering if you would like to be my guest for lunch at the Lotos Club (5 East 66th Street) at your convenience. If this would not be convenient, I would be glad to see you at your office. I think the Academy might be of real service to you in your work in public affairs. In its first three months of public recognition, almost a thousand psychiatrists and theologians have become members of the Academy and this in itself is a manifestation of the deep interest of people in relationships between religion and emotional problems.

My dear Mr. Murrow:

No doubt you have recently read about this Academy in the N.Y. Times or the Herald Tribune (also the April ninth issues of TIME and NEWSWEEK magazines). The Academy represents an extraordinary development in psychiatry as it has been set up for close working relationships with the theologians of the major faiths. Considering that Freud regarded religion a neurosis and that most psychiatrists in the past have operated with these Freudian concepts, it is most unusual that this Academy has been brought into being.

The enclosed brochure will indicate the eminent clergymen and psychiatrists who have helped to establish this Academy. Dr. Frank Stanton, who has known about the organization of the Academy for a long time, sent Mr. Ted Sack and Mr. Al Wasserman of the Columbia Broadcasting System, to attend our press luncheon last week at which time the formation of the Academy was announced. They probably could tell you more about us.

Because public affairs is one of your major interests, I am bringing the Academy to your attention. I would be very happy to talk with you about this significant development for psychiatry and religion and you might personally like to participate in our work.

Dear Liz:

Thanks for your note of May 16th.

Since they couldn't get in at the Connaught, the Howard Lindsays have decided to go elsewhere, and have, I am sure you will be glad to know, taken care of themselves. Sorry we have omitted to let you know this before.

While we are on the subject of hotels, could you perform another small favor for us? A Miss Edith Behrens of CBS is making her first trip to Europe in 20 years and most ardently wishes to stay at the Connaught because Mr. Murrow recommends it so highly. Could you find out what their rates are for a single room, with or without bath per day or by the week if they do it that way and just to give her a choice (since I think the Connaught might be a little expensive for her) could you check on the rates at such places as Flemming's in Half Moon Street or the Curzon, or any place that would have somewhat of the same atmosphere as the Connaught at a lower rate.

Miss Behrens plans to be in London about the third week in September if that makes any difference.

Thanks for sending us the letter from Irene Panter. We will take care of her.

Love,

K. C.

LONDON BUREAU

16th May, 1957.

Dear Kay,

I don't know if you saw the exchange of cables between Murrow and Howard, wherein Murrow asked Howard to book accommodation at the Connaught for Howard Lindsay, and Howard replied that the Connaught was fully booked and suggested that Murrow list some other hotels we should try.

Since no reply was received from your end we have not taken any further action, but I thought I had better drop you a line in case you thought we had. If you want us to do anything further we shall, of course, be delighted to try, but please let me know by cable as soon as possible.

I enclose a letter we have received for your boss with which you might care to deal.

Love,

Liz

Dear Mr. Angel:

Thank you for your letter of November 18.

Since my crowded schedule does not permit me time to write you at length, answering your question, I hope this transcript of the radio broadcast I did last Friday evening will be of some help to you.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

In your interview of C.S.Hammond, Friday, Nov. 15, you made a remark to him that intimated you are not satisfied with our education system of today.

I am a school prinicpal and come to you as a freshman to a very learned, much traveled person. I am sincerely interested in the continued improvement of my profession. I feel that there are many men such as you, whose opinions and suggestions would help us to improve.

I listen to the suggestions and opinions of many, but I would like very much to know your attitudes. What is wrong with education today? What can we do to improve it?

Thanks in advance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I cannot go back to Israel without expressing my disappointment in not having met you.

I talked to your secretary several times and she told me how busy you were. She also said that you would want to see me at the first opportunity.

I am leaving on June 13th, after having served our cause for more than one year, but unfortunately was unable to engage your help as you promised to give me.

May I now, before signing off, expect to hear from you and at least have a talk with you in order to bring you up to-date and maybe you will find in the future some way of implementing your original intentions.

Yours very sincerely,

Thank you for your letter of November 28th.

I fear we shall have to postpone our meeting until after the first of the year. My plans call for me to be out of the country until Christmas, and the week following I shall, of course, be busy with the preparation of the Year End Programs.

Perhaps we can get together when things have eased up a little.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Since we met in May 1956, I have been following your activities closely and the more I see and hear of you, the more I am convinced of what a wonderful friend Israel has in you.

While you were going after revolutions and armies in South America and in the Middle East, I went to those countries in search of facilities to make our great medical center come true.

You invited me to call on you for any help in our project - well, I ar calling you.

Israel is now even more in need of what we are doing and the Paul Ehrlich Hospital and Medical Center will go a long way to remedy an unfortunate situation.

I should like to meet with you again, anytime at your convenience. Expecting to hear from you,

Very cordially yours,

It was very kind of you to give me some of your time the other day and it was a pleasure for me to talk to you "Israel".

I deeply appreciate your understanding of our problem and when you told me that you would think about it and not let it out of your sight, I was more than gratified. I am sure you will find a way to assist us in letting the American public know about a great enterprise, which is being pursued in spite of what is going on in the Middle East.

Should I, in the meantime, happen to run across a suitable idea I shall make use of your invitation to call you, otherwise I look forward to hear from you.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I hope you recall our meeting on the KLM plane which flew us out from Israel on February 9th, when you talked to me about your experiences in my country, as the first Israeli you met outside its borders.

Although you requested me to contact you here I decided to wait with that until your great show on Israel and Egypt was performed on Television last week. Allow me to congratulate you on a very fine job and I, as an Israeli, was especially proud that our cause was so well presented and objectively judged. I think you did more for Israel than many people who have made it their life-long task. Coming from you as a neutral and as the best-known commentator on current affairs, the impression must have been an overwhelming one on the American public.

My presence here is devoted to a most important undertaking for Israel, in which also Americans have and I hope will have a more substantial interest. A great Hospital and Medical Center with Nurses' Training School, large Research Center and Post Graduate Studies' facilities is being built in Ramat Gan as a private enterprise with public and government recognition. The enclosed brochure will enlighten you as to the object of this Institute and also prove the necessity of constructing it.

Although I know you must be one of the busiest men in this country, I should like to make use of your kind invitation that I should come and see you in New York. Please name any convenient place, date and hour and I shall be happy to call on you accordingly.

Yours respectfully,

Willi W. Aptowitzer, to know that this is an «approved undertaking», and that it will from abroad and encourage them to participate and to contribute pment of medical science in this country. I wish the initiators of ng success in the quick completion of their project".

TZY, Mayor of Ramat Gan, expressed the hope that the new hospital pleted in the near future, and added: «Though the hospital is a private he Municipality of Ramat Gan is a partner to it, and is vitally its success. From my experience in this country, I know with what nts are admitted to Government Hospitals because of bed shortage, at this new hospital will solve the problem for the inhabitants of nd vicinity. We have many outstanding Jewish medical men in s abroad, and we undoubtedly could attract them to this country help even establish a type of Mayo Clinic of our own, if we were le them with proper conditions. It is my sincere hope that this ill earnestly endeavour to create such conditions and thus enable of the world, particularly those from America, to come here aff of the hospital».

Dr. SHERMAN, President of the Medical Association of Israel, brought the greetings of the medical profession in the country and said : «In our times, when medical diagnosis has become a complicated process, requiring many laboratory examinations, X-ray pictures etc, both the doctor and the patient are vitally interested that all this be done in a modern and well-equipped hospital.

Medical treatment has also become more complicated, and only a good hospital makes possible good and proper treatment. The hospital has therefore become a vital necessity for the doctor, as well as the patient. No wonder therefore that the construction of a new modern hospital is an important event for the doctors in as much as it will increase hospitalization facilities and possibilities of modern treatment for the patient. I believe that many physicians will give their assistance to the realization of this magnificent project. The Medical Association of Israel unites in its ranks all the doctors in this country, regardless of nationality, political allegiance or attachment to medical institutions, and its highest aim is to maintain high medical standards in this country. In order to achieve this, all doctors should be linked to hospitals as centres of medical work and progress, of learning and scientific research.

It is my hope that the Paul Ehrlich Hospital - and there are many doctors among its initiators - will be open to every physician and so make a vital contribution to the progress of medicine in Israel.

Professor HIRSH, speaking on the importance of the hospital, said : «We in Israel are accustomed to rapid development, and every day we witness much progress. We are privileged to participate today in the beginning of a new undertaking, the result of the initiative of a small group of people interested in the fate of the sick. It is the intention of that group to build here a new hospital, a research and study centre for doctors from Israel and abroad.

In this country, many of the hospitals bear the names of famous Jewish physicians of past centuries, such as Rambam, Tzahalon, Donolo etc, but no such honor has as yet been bestowed on any Jewish scientist of more recent times. At the suggestion of Prof. Herman Zondek, this hospital and medical centre will bear the name of Dr. PAUL EHRLICH, the great Jewish researcher and father of modern chemotherapy, the man who gave hope to and restored the health of uncounted millions of sufferers.

In the name of the medical friends of this undertaking, it is my wish that all your hopes and plans connected with this hospital be soon fulfilled».

Prof. DUKATCH (formerly of the Medical School, University of Cordoba, Argentine, at present in Israel) of the South American group of doctors connected with the Paul Ehrlich Hospital, stressed the importance of the new undertaking, and wished it full success and quick completion.

Dr. A. SHRONEK was in the chair.

Other speakers at the banquet were Dr. Mishan, Chairman of the Association of Tel Aviv Physicians, and Dr. Rashkes.

The closing speech was made by Mr. D. M. Shibolet, Managing Director, The Paul Ehrlich Hospital and Medical Centre, Ltd., who said :

«On behalf of the management I wish to express our appreciation for your presence at this banquet which has marked today's ceremony at Ramat Gan. I particularly wish to thank the Mayors of Tel Aviv and Ramat Gan, and the leaders of the Medical Association in Israel.

We are happy to know that all of you present here, and all of those who for different reasons could not be with us tonight, are friends and supporters of our project.

We fully realize the extent of responsibility we took upon ourselves by building this hospital, but we are equally aware of the need for this institution and of the many advantages that will result from its creation. I wish to avail myself of this opportunity to thank all of you for all the help you have so far given us, and we feel we can rely upon your further assistance and interest in the future.

We are practical men and we shall start the actual work immediately. We hope that with your cooperation and with the help of national and government health institutions in the country, we shall overcome difficulties ahead of us and will soon celebrate the opening of this new hospital».

f Jewish doctors and businessmen, fully realizing the gravity of the tion in the country at present, have resolved to make their towards the solution of the problem.

ine had a generally healthy population, and yet the available facilities were not sufficient. At the time of the establishment of Israel, the hospital bed ratio per 1000 inhabitants was only 2.6, far cepted ratio in other progressive countries. The establishment of the with it an unprecedented flow of immigrants from all countries a large percentage of whom constituted right from the beginning inues to constitute a serious medical problem. One of the immediate of that was an acute shortage of hospital accommodation in Israel, n the field of general hospitalization.

efforts have been made to absorb the hundreds of thousands of ts, and while tents and huts could readily be put up when money hospital beds could not so easily be added. In spite of all efforts nment, the Kupat Holim, Hadassah and other organizations and ncrease of hospital beds has fallen behind the tremendous demand mass immigration.

of Israel has more than doubled within the six years of the existence the figure having risen from 750,000 in 1948 to over 1,600,000 in 1953. Within the same period of time, the number of beds in general hospitals has also increased by almost 100%, and yet the situation has remained serious as the ratio of hospital beds per thousand inhabitants is far below the average, while the new population is more sick than the average.

The following figures will illustrate the progress made within the past few years and the prevailing shortage of beds in general hospitals.

Year	1948	1949	1952	1953
Bed ratio (per 1000)	2.6	3.03	3.17	3.22

When compared with other countries, Israel falls behind Holland (4.2 per thousand), the USA (4.6 per thousand) Great Britain (5.2 per thousand) Denmark (6.7 per thousand).

In view of the very special character of the majority of the new immigrants, a ratio of five beds per one thousand inhabitants is essential in Israel in order to secure admission to general hospitals without a long waiting period.

Israel at present has 5,300 beds in general hospitals (3.22 per 1,000). With its present population of 1,700,000, and according to the above mentioned ratio, at least 2,500 additional beds would be needed in general hospitals. Even if the ratio were dropped to an average of four per thousand (4 per 1,000), Israel would still urgently need about 1,500 additional beds.

Even if all present plans of different medical organizations in Israel would materialize within the next two or three years, there still would be no hope of reaching the full number of required beds unless some large additional hospital units were built within the next few years.

This country, however, not only needs additional hospital beds. The Outpatient Departments are too few and overcrowded. Doctors, and particularily specialists, could treat many times their present number of patients if they had at their disposal assistants and extensive, properly equipped clinics.

Moreover, the country needs additional modern equipment, large centers of research, teaching, learning, and healing.

Although much progress has been made, miracles performed and shortages successfully fought, the situation still remains serious and calls for remedy.

This is the project

Having faced the problem of hospitalization in all its gravity, the aforementioned group of doctors have set themselves the task of establishing a hospital and medical centre in which they could pool their medical knowledge and experience in order to bring healing and relief to as many as possible of those among the population of Israel who may be in need of it, old settlers and newcomers alike.

Aware of the fact demonstrated by modern medical practice, we realize that adequate hospitalization and good medical treatment can be best provided by large hospitals, properly housed and equipped, so that they may attract the best of the medical profession and nursing staff in this country and from abroad. one, two or four beds. Services, consultation rooms, utility rooms etc. in every department have been planned so as not to interfere with the normal flow of traffic along the hospital corridors.

A system of interconnecting corridors and five large elevators will permit vertical and horizontal communication for transport of patients, food, supplies or equipment in a way which will not cause disturbance to the regular operations of the various departments.

Special arrangements are being made for large underground shelters, with accommodation for all patients and staff in case of need.

The hospital laundry will be located immediately below the kitchen, which will be on the groundfloor of the main building, with separate dining halls for medical and non-medical staff. The hospital will have its own steam heating plant for internal use.

Large carparks will be provided in front of the hospital and the remaining free area will be converted into parkland.

Though constituting an uninterrupted line of buildings, the different parts and units of the hospital and medical centre will be absolutely independent of each other from the outside by way of separate entrances and approaches, while internally connected through the Administration and Admission Wings. Separate entrances will be provided for the school for nurses, their residences, for the main Admission Office, for the administrative wing, for the Circumcision Hall, for the Outpatient Department, First Aid Station, Blood bank, Physiotherapy etc.

In order to enable renowned specialists to serve and teach in the Paul Ehrlich Hospital and Centre in Israel, 12 one-family cottages (villas) will be built in the hospital's neighbourhood to serve as residences for visiting medical personnel from abroad.

When completed, the Paul Ehrlich Hospital and Medical Centre will be one of the largest hospital building of its kind in the country and will undoubtedly be one of the outstanding landmarks of the area both in its planning and general beauty.

C.

The creation of such facilities as described above requires very considerable financing for modern hospital building is one of the most expensive kinds of construction. According to preliminary estimates, the anticipated investment in the enterprise will be about US$ 2,000,000 and I£. 500,000 at an approximate cost of US$ 7,000 per bed (considering the over-all plan of construction, quality of equipment etc., this compares favourably with the per-bed cost in the USA).

Hospital construction ranks high on the list of essential enterprises in Israel. The Israel Government, under the «Law for the Encouragement of Capital Investments, 1950», has listed the Paul Ehrlich Hospital and Medical Centre Ltd. as an «approved undertaking» for investment and therefore enables it to benefit from the extensive facilities and advantages under this law.

As in many large and vital undertakings in this country, partnership with Jews abroad is sought in order to enable the realization of the project. The initiators of the Paul Ehrlich Hospital have turned to many outstanding Jewish physicians and financial groups in the USA and elsewhere and invited their participation as investors in this important medical undertaking. A local group of physicians, construction men and businessmen have already raised in Israel the required amount of IL. 500,000, while the required amount in foreign exchange (US$. 2,000,000) will have to be obtained from abroad by sale of shares.

Not every great hospital in the world, or every vital institution, is profit-earning. Yet, there is every reason to assume and to expect that a hospital, as envisaged in this project, with large medical institutes of high medical standard and which will be open to the public without discrimination, will attract patients and yield a profit.

As facts and figures above have shown, Israel is urgently in need of new hospitals, and we must anticipate that the pressure on hospitals caused by the shortage of beds will continue for years to come. It will suffice to mention that every bed in the general hospitals in Israel was occupied during 1953 more than 316 days during the year, an extremely high degree of occupancy for any country, and bears evidence how badly needed hospital beds are in this country.

There is therefore room and need for new hospitals in the country. Is there, however, place and need for an additional private hospital in the country? The answer is definitely «Yes». There are very few private general hospitals in the country. Their total number of beds at the end of 1953 was only 470 or barely 8.8% of the total of beds in general hospitals in the country.

As the Minister of Health pointed out in his address during the ceremony of laying the cornerstone of the Paul Ehrlich Hospital, the Government welcomes private hospitals and is ready to extend to them every assistance.

The private general hospitals in Israel are known to be earning considerable profits. The bed occupancy in private general hospitals during 1953 was very high, though lower than in Governmental hospitals.

There is only one private general hospital in the same area as the Paul Ehrlich Hospital. As mentioned, the new hospital will be situated near the two important cities of Tel Aviv and Ramat Gan and many suburbs in which only a part of the population receives care from public medical services. A large percentage of the population will gladly avail themselves of hospitalization facilities in a modern private hospital.

By listing the Paul Ehrlich Hospital as an «approved undertaking», the Government confirms that additional beds are needed and will benefit the country, and that this project is a safe form of investment for people from abroad.

אנו מציינים בספוק רב את העובדה כי ההיענות מארצות חוץ היתה חיובית מאד ומעודדת. לא זו בלבד שרופאים יהודים רבים מארצות חוץ, בעלי שם ומבוססים היטב, מוכנים להשתתף במימון מפעל ראוי לעדוד זה, הם אף מוכנים לבוא הנה ולקחת חלק בעבודה הרפואית של ביה"ח.

אף כי אין אפשרות להשיג מספרים מדויקים על הדיבידנדות הניתנות לבעלי מניות של בתי"ח פרטיים אחרים, ידועה היטב העובדה כי הן גבוהות, וכי ערך המניות עלה מאד בשנים האחרונות.

סידורים מיוחדים יעשו להתקנת מקלטים גדולים מתחת לפני האדמה עם כושר אכסון לכל החולים והסגל.

מכבסת ביה"ח תהיה במרתף מתחת למטבח אשר מקומו בקומת הקרקע בבנין הראשי של ביה"ח.

לביה"ח תהיה תחנת קיטור משלו, ותחנות כח מיוחדות לשמוש פנימי בשעת חרום. מגרש גדול יוקצע בחזית ביה"ח לחנית מכוניות, ויתר השטח הפנוי ינוצל לגני נוי וערוגות פרחים.

אף כי הבנינים יהוו שרשרת בלתי מנותקת, הרי כל יחידה של ביה"ח והמרכז הרפואי תהיה לגמרי נפרדת מבחוץ הודות לכניסה מיוחדת, בו בזמן שמבפנים יקשרו את היחידות האגף האדמיניסטרטיבי ומדור הקבלה.

כניסות נפרדות תהיינה לביה"ס לאחיות ולפנימיה, למשרד הקבלה הראשי, לאגף האדמיניסטרטיבי, לאולם המיוחד לברית מילה, למרפאת חוץ, לתחנת עזרה ראשונה, לבנק הדם, למכון לרפוי פיסיקלי וכו'.

כדי לאפשר לרופאים בעלי שם עולמי לבקר בארץ ולעבוד במוסד הנ"ל ע"י נתינת הרצאות לרופאים המשתלמים וע"י נתוחים עדינים, החלטנו לבנות 12 חוילות סמוך לביה"ח אשר ישמשו להם מקום מגורים.

לכשתושלם הקמת המוסד יהיה זה ביה"ח והמרכז הרפואי הגדול ביותר מסוגו בארץ, וללא ספק אחת הנקודות הבולטות באזור הן מבחינת תכנונו, בניתו, וצורתו הכללית הנאה.

השטח שהוקצע לביה"ח והמרכז הרפואי על שם פאול ארליך נמצא במרכז הארץ, גובל עם אזורי עירית תל אביב, רמת גן ובני ברק — סביבה שמרוכזים בה כ־¾ מיליון תושבים. המגרש נמצא בין הכביש הארצי הראשי המקשר את דרום הארץ עם צפונה, לבין הפרק הלאומי הראשון שניטע ע"י עירית רמת גן.

הגישה הנוחה לביה"ח באמצעות כבישים ראשיים מכל הכוונים תבטיח למוסד שטח פעולה נרחב ההולך וגדל, ותאפשר לו לשרת אזור חשוב של ארצנו.

בניני ביה"ח והמרכז הרפואי על שם פאול ארליך ישתרעו על שטח של 21.000 ממ"ר ויהוו יחידה מתוכננת מבחינה פונקציונלית.

הארכיטקט, ד"ר אינג' אלכסנדר וינשטוק ועוזריו מתל אביב, תכננו את ביה"ח והמרכז הרפואי בצורה שתאפשר ניצול יעיל ביותר של השטח, ובו בזמן לקחו בחשבון גם כן את איכותו המיוחדת ויתרונותיו האקלימיים של האזור.

המרכז יהווה 2 יחידות גדולות מקבילות אשר בנין ארוך שישמש אגף קבלה, יקשר אותם, ואשר יכללו את הבנין הראשי של ביה"ח שיהיה בעל 8 קומות, ובמקביל לו ביה"ס לאחיות ופנימיה, אולמי הרצאות, האגף האדמיניסטרטיבי וכו'. בנין ארוך הפונה לצפון ולדרום יכלול את מרפאת החוץ, חדרי הנתוחים, חדרי הלידה, תחנת עזרה ראשונה, בנק הדם, מכון לטפול פיסיקלי וכו'.

בנין ביה"ח יכיל את 10 המחלקות הראשיות שכבר נזכרו לעיל, ובקומתו העליונה — חדרי מגורים עם כח קליטה של 22 מטות לאחיות הגרות בביה"ח (1 או 2 מטות בחדר). על מנת לנצל במלואה את הרוח המערבית פונים כל החדרים בבנינים הראשיים של ביה"ח מערבה, ולאורך הבנינים מרפסות מרווחות הן ממזרח והן ממערב. מרפסות עמוקות וסוככים יגנו מפני קרני השמש וישמרו על קרירות בחדרים.

המחלקות תוכננו בצורה שתאפשר אישפוז נוח לאחד, שנים, ארבעה או ששה חולים בחדר אחד. מרבית החדרים בכל מחלקה יכילו 1, 2, ו־4 מטות. השרותים, חדרי ההתיעצות וחדרי השמוש בכל מחלקה תוכננו כך שלא יפריעו לתנועה במסדרונים.

רשת של מסדרונים פנימיים ו־5 מעליות גדולות יאפשרו קשר מאוזן ומאונך להעברת חולים, אוכל, אספקה וציוד מבלי להפריע למהלך העבודה במחלקות.

ימשכו מחו"ל מומחים רבים שיביאו עמם את נסיונם וידיעותיהם, ויתרמו לקידום מדע הרפואה בישראל.

כמו כן ישאף המפעל לכלול בפעולותיו סידורים מתאימים להדרכה בהשתלמות מתקדמת לבוגרי המכללה הרפואית, ולאפשר להם להתמחות בעבודה מעשית במחלקות השונות של ביה"ח.

במגמה להקל על המחסור המשוע באחיות מוסמכות יוקם ליד ביה"ח בית־ספר מודרני לאחיות מוסמכות, ל־75 תלמידות.

כח הקליטה של ביה"ח על שם פאול ארליך יהיה כ־320 מטות, ב־10 המחלקות הבאות:

1) מחלקה פנימית
2) " חירורגית
3) " אורתופדית
4) " אורולוגית
5) " רדיולוגית
6) מחלקת נשים ולידה
7) " ילדים
8) " עור ומחלות אלרגיות

שטח ביה"ח ותנאי ההענקה:

ביה"ח והמרכז הרפואי על שם פאול ארליך ישתרע על שטח נרחב ופתוח שהוקצע למטרה זו ע"י עירית רמת גן, ובעזרתו האדיבה של ראש העיריה, מר א. קריניצי. גדלו של השטח 40 דונם (40.000 מ"ר), וערכו כרבע מיליון דולר.

כתמורה הסכים ביה"ח והמרכז הרפואי להעמיד לרשות עירית רמת גן 30 מתוך המספר הכולל של המטות בביה"ח עבור נזקקי העיר בהנחה מיוחדת. כמו כן מתיחס הסכם דומה גם לשרותי מרפאת חוץ המסונפת לביה"ח.

אחרות מפגרת ישראל אחר הולנד (1000 — 4,2), ארה"ב (1000 — 4,6), בריטניה (1000 — 5,2), דנמרק (1000 — 6,7).

ההנחה המקובלת בארץ היא כי בהתחשב באופיים המיוחד של רוב העולים החדשים יש צורך ב־5 מטות ל־1000 תושבים על מנת להבטיח אשפוז בבתי"ח כלליים ללא עכוב או המתנה במשך שבועות.

מספר מטות בבתיה"ח הכלליים בישראל הוא כיום 5300 (1000 — 3,22), ובהתחשב במספר התושבים המתקרב כעת ל־1,800,000 וליחס המטות שהזכרנו לעיל, יש צורך לפחות ב־2500 מטות נוספות בבתיה"ח הכלליים. גם באם נפחית את המספר הממוצע ל־4 על 1000 תושבים, זקוקה ישראל באופן דחוף ל־1500 מטות נוספות.

אף אם תתגשמנה תוך 3 — 2 השנים הקרובות כל התכניות של ארגוני הרפואה השונים בארץ, אין תקוה להגיע למספר המטות הדרוש אלא ע"י הקמת יחידות גדולות של בתי"ח במשך שנים מספר.

ארצנו זקוקה לא רק למספר נוסף של מטות בבתי"ח. גם האפשרויות לטפול אמבולטורי משוכלל הן מצומצמות. רופאים מומחים יכלו לשרת מספר גדול יותר של חולים אילו עמדו לרשותם עוזרים ומכונים נרחבים ומשוכללים.

יתר על כן זקוקה ארצנו לציוד חדיש יותר, למרכזים גדולים למחקר, הוראה, לימוד וריפוי.

ולכן, על אף התקדמותנו הרבה והמפליאה יש מקום לשיפורים ולתיקונים נוספים.

וזוהי התכנית:

לאחר שראתה קבוצת המייסדים הנ"ל את מצב האשפוז על חומרתו, החליטה להקים בי"ח ומרכז רפואי בו יוכלו רופאים לרכז את ידיעותיהם ונסיונם במטרה להביא מזור והקלה למספר רב ככל האפשר של חולים בישראל הן מקרב ההתישבות הותיקה והן מקרב העולים החדשים.

הרפואה המודרנית הוכיחה לנו כי אשפוז נאות וטפול רפואי יעיל יכולים להנתן רק בבתי"ח גדולים, בנויים כהלכה ומצויידים היטב, שיהיה בהם כדי למשוך ולרכז את טובי הרופאים והאחיות בארץ ומחו"ל.

אמונתנו היא שרק מפעל גדול ורציני יוכל לתרום לפתרון בעית האשפוז בארץ הזאת. לפיכך תכניתנו היא אחד החזונות הרפואיים של ישראל — בי"ח גדול ומודרני, ומרכז רפואי לידו.

מגמת המפעל והיקפו:

אחת ממגמותיו העקרוניות של המפעל היא לתת אשפוז ושרות רפואי מלא בתחום היכולת הכספית של המעמדות בעלי ההכנסות הממוצעות והגדולות כאחת. ביה"ח יהיה פתוח לכל, ללא הבדל דת, לאום, גזע או מעמד.

הודות להסכם מיוחד עם עירית רמת גן, שעליו נרחיב את הדבור בפרק הבא יוענק שרות רפואי מלא בהנחה מיוחדת למקרים הסוציאליים של העיריה.

ביה"ח והמרכז הרפואי יציבו לעצמם כמטרה הכנסת חידושים שונים ושכלולים בשטח הטפול הרפואי, על מנת לחסוך לזקוקים לטפול מיוחד טרחת נסיעה לחו"ל, על כל הקשיים וההוצאות הכרוכים בה, ובו בזמן לקמץ למדינה מטבע זר שהיא כה זקוקה לו למטרות פרודוקטיביות רבות.

ביה"ח ישאף תמיד להגיע לרמה גבוהה של טפול והשגחה רפואית, וליצור תנאים אשר

אין רצנו הנה בעלת צרכים ותכניות, חזונות וחלומות המתגשמים והולכים, חזון ומחשבה מעשית היו מאז ומתמיד מזיגה מוצלחת אשר הולידה תגליות גדולות, ותרופות רבות ערך. ישראל, בתקופת קיומה הקצרה, למדה להכיר את כחו של החזון, ולהעריך את המחשבה המעשית המשרתת אותו.

המפעל שבתכניתנו להקים הנו אחד מחזונותיה הרפואיים של ישראל, ומאידך גם כן צורך ממשי. להגשמת החזון דרושים לנו כחות בעלי מחשבה מעשית אשר יתרמו מידיעותיהם, נסיונם ואמצעיהם.

אין ספור על הקמת מפעל ללא הקדמה; תכניות ללא הצדקה; הצלחה כספית ללא חישוב ותקציב.

והרי ההקדמה:

קבוצת רופאים ואנשי מעשה היודעים את המצב הרפואי הקיים בארץ, ובעיותיו, החליטו לתרום את תרומתם למען שיפורו, ובעתיד למען פתרון הבעיה העיקרית שבו.

מהי הבעיה?

בארץ ישראל היהודית היה ישוב בריא בדרך כלל, ובכל זאת לא היו אפשריויות אשפוז במדה מספקת כדי לשרת את הנצרכים. בעת קום מדינת ישראל עמדו לרשותנו 2,6 מטות כלליות ל־1000 תושבים, מספר נמוך ביותר בהשואה עם מדינות מתקדמות אחרות. הקמת המדינה הביאה עמה גל של הגירה המונית מכל הארצות, ואחוז גדול מבין המהגרים הווה מן הרגע הראשון, ועדיין ממשיך להוות, בעיה רפואית חמורה. אחת התוצאות המידיות של מצב זה היתה מחסור חריף במקומות אשפוז, במיוחד בשטח האשפוז הכללי.

מאמצים על־אנושיים נעשו כדי לקלוט את מאות אלפי העולים החדשים. אולם בו בזמן שהוקמו בנקל אהלים וצריפים, כאשר ניתנו האמצעים לכך, לא קל היה להגדיל את מספר המטות בבתיה"ח. למרות כל מאמצי הממשלה, הסוכנות היהודית, קופת חולים, הדסה ועוד ארגונים וגופים שונים, לא הדביק תהליך הרחבת האשפוז את הדרישות הגדולות שנבעו מן העליה ההמונית.

במשך 6 שנות קיומה של מדינת ישראל הוכפל מספר תושביה ועלה מ־750.000 בשנת 1948 ל־1.600.000 בשנת 1953. באותה התקופה גדל מספר המטות בבתיה"ח הכלליים, ואפילו בשיעור יותר גדול מכפי שגדלה האוכלוסיה. אך המצב נשאר עדיין חמור, וביחס למספר התושבים נמוך מספר המטות בהרבה מן הממוצע המקובל.

המספרים הבאים מראים את ההתקדמות שחלה בשנים האחרונות בנסיון להשתלט על המחסור במטות בבתיה"ח הכלליים:

שנה:	1948	1949	1952	1953
שיעור המטות:	2,6	3,03	3,17	3,22	(ל־1000 תושבים)

ולמרות גידול זה שהיה לא רק אבסולוטי אלא גם יחסי, הרי בהשואה עם כמה מדינות

בחגיגת הנחת אבן הפנה
נראים בין השאר, שר הבריאות
מר י. סרלין ומר ד. מ. שבולת
ממנהלי הספעל.

הרופאים בתל אביב, ד"ר מישן, וכן לרופאים פרופ. הירש, פרופ. דוקטש, ד"ר עפרון, ד"ר רשקס ולכל יתר הנוכחים. אנו שמחים להדגיש שהננו חושבים אתכם הנוכחים פה, ואת אלה שמסבות שונות לא יכלו להיות נוכחים הערב, לידידי המוסד שלנו, והננו מקבלים אתכם בברכה המסורה — ברוכים הבאים.

אנו מכירים היטב בגודל האחריות שלקחנו על עצמנו בהקמת מפעל גדול זה, אבל אנו גם יודעים את הצורך במוסד כזה למדינה ואת התועלת הרבה שתצמח ממנו לרפואה. משום כך הנני מנצל הזדמנות זו להודות לכם על עזרתכם שהגשתם לנו עד כה, ובטוחני שגם בעתיד נמצא אצלכם אוזן קשבת ונוכל לסמוך על עזרתכם הכנה.

אין מתפקידי לשאת נאום הערב, כי אנו נמנים על אנשי המעשה ובתור כאלה אנו נגשים לבנין המפעל הזה, ומקוים שבעזרתכם ובעזרת מוסדות הבריאות הארציים והממשלתיים נתגבר על כל הקושיים, ונחוג בקרוב את חנוכת הבית לתהלה".

אנו הרופאים שהתחלנו לחשוב על הקמת מוסד רפואי זה, רופאים ממזרח אירופה, מארצות הברית ומאמריקה הלטינית, היינו קשורים במשך כל שנות פעולתנו עם בתי חולים ומוסדות מדעיים בארצות מוצאנו, וקשה לנו להשתחרר מפעולה מדעית זו המהווה חלק חשוב בעבודתנו היומיומית.

רצונם העז של רופאים צעירים (שהמחסור בהם מורגש במדינתנו) מהתפוצות לעלות ארצה, והמטרה לרכז בארץ מומחים יהודים בשטח הרפואה, עוררו את רעיון הקמתו של בית חולים גדול, שיוכל לשרת את הציבור הרחב ושיאפשר קליטת הרופאים מהתפוצות. מטרתנו אינה הקמת בי״ח גרידא, אלא גם כן ייסוד מרכז מדעי להשתלמות בפרקטיקה רפואית לסטודנטים ולרופאים צעירים.

בשם הקבוצה הדרום אמריקאית אני מאחל הצלחה רבה למוסד הרפואי החדש, ומקוה שהקמתו תושלם במהרה לטובת הצבור והמדינה גם יחד״.

את המסבה פתח ונהל ד״ר א. שרונק.

ב אותו ערב התקיים באולמי בית ציוני אמריקה בתל־אביב בנקט חגיגי בהשתתפותם של ראשי העיריות תל אביב ורמת גן, נשיא ההסתדרות הרפואית בישראל ובאי כח מוסדות הרפואה במדינה. מר א. איתן, סגן ראש העיר רמת־גן, ישב ראש במסיבה.

את ברכת העיר תל־אביב הביא ראש העיר מר ח. לבנון אשר אמר: „אני שמח שהמפעל הגדול הזה יוקם ברמת־גן הגובלת עם תל־אביב, ותקותי כי ע״י כך יופחת הלחץ על בתיה״ח בתל־אביב.

כפי שנמסר לי תוקמנה ליד ביה״ח על שם פאול ארליך מעבדות משוכללות, והן תעזורנה אולי להגשמת חלומי — הקמת אוניברסיטה בתל־אביב. הכוחות הרפואיים המצוינים הנמצאים בארץ, ואלה שנוכל למשוך מהחוץ, יוכלו לתרום תרומה חשובה לקידום הרעיון שלי.

אני מאחל הצלחה ליוזמים שהנני רואה בהם גם רופאים וגם אנשי מעשה, ותקותי כי ע״י שילוב שני כוחות אלה יוקם המפעל במהרה״.

ד״ר ל. עפרון, מנהל קופ״ח של הציונים הכלליים, הביע את קורת רוחו מהמפעל החדש ואת אמונתו שביה״ח המודרני הזה יתרום תרומה חשובה להתפתחות הרפואה בישראל.

נאמו עוד ד״ר מישן, יו״ר אגוד הרופאים בישראל; ד״ר רשקס ואחרים, נעל את המסיבה מר ד. מ. שבולת, ממנהלי המפעל בברכו את הנוכחים: „בשם הנהלת החברה למרכז הרפואי ובית החולים על שם פאול ארליך, ברצוני להודות לכם על שכבדתם אותנו בבואכם הערב לבנקט זה הנערך לרגל חגיגת הנחת אבן הפנה למוסדנו, שהתקיימה היום אחה״צ ברמת גן.

במיוחד ברצוני להודות לראש עירית תל אביב, מר לבנון, לראש עירית רמת גן, מר קרינצי וסגנו מר איתן, לנשיא ההסתדרות הרפואית בישראל, ד״ר שרמן, ליו״ר הסתדרות

מר א. קרניצי, ראש עירית רמת גן, הביע את תקותו שהקמת ביה"ח תושלם בעתיד הקרוב, והוסיף: „אף כי ביה"ח הזה הנו מפעל פרטי, עירית רמת גן שותפת לו ומעונינת באופן חיוני בהקמתו. מנסיוני אני בארץ ידועים לי הקשיים בקבלת חולים ממשלתיים עקב חוסר מקום, ותקותי כי בי"ח זה יפתור את בעית האשפוז של תושבי רמת גן והסביבה הגדולה.

יש לנו כחות רפואה יהודיים בכל ארצות תבל, ואנו יכולים לרכז אותם בארץ, ואפילו להקים פה מעין Mayo clinic שבארצות הברית, אילו היה לאל ידנו להבטיח להם תנאים נאותים. אני מקוה שהמפעל הזה ייצור את התנאים הדרושים, וימשוך ע"י כך רופאים יהודים מכל העולם. ובמיוחד מאמריקה, לבוא ולהצטרף לחבר רופאי ביה"ח".

ד"ר מ. שרמן, נשיא ההסתדרות הרפואית בארץ, הביא את ברכת צבור הרופאים באמרו: „בתקופה שלנו, כאשר הבחנת המחלה נעשית מסובכת מאד ע"י הצורך בבדיקות מעבדתיות, בצילומים ובפעולות מיוחדות, מעונינים גם הרופאים וגם החולים שכל זה יבוצע בבי"ח מסודר. גם הטפול בחולים הנו מסובך יותר כעת, ובבי"ח אפשר לבצעו ביתר קלות ויעילות. ביה"ח הפך איפוא לצורך חיוני לחולה ולרופא כאחד. משום כך הקמת בית חולים חדש, המגדיל את אפשרויות האשפוז והיוצר מקום לטפול מודרני בחולים הנו חג בשביל רופאים. אין ספק שרופאים רבים ירימו את תרומתם — מי ברוח ומי בחומר — למען החשת הקמתו של ביה"ח.

ההסתדרות הרפואית בישראל, המאחדת את כל הרופאים בארץ בלי הבדל דת, ולאום, השקפות פוליטיות, או השתייכות למוסד רפואי, מטרתה העליונה היא שמירה על רמה גבוהה של הסטנדרט הרפואי בארץ, לשם כך צריכים כל הרופאים להיות קשורים לביה"ח כלמקום ריפוי משוכלל, מקום לימוד מעשי ומחקר מדעי. אני מקוה שביה"ח על שם פאול ארליך, שבין יוזמיו רב מספר הרופאים, יהיה פתוח לכל רופא ובזה יתרום תרומה חשובה לקידום הרפואה בארץ".

פרופ. הירש ציין את חשיבות הקמת המפעל החדש באמרו: „בישראל אנו רגילים להתפתחות ולהתקדמות מהירה. בכל יום עדים אנו לשלבים חדשים בתהליך זה, המבטא את רצוננו החזק לתחיה ולהתקדמות.

גם היום יש לנו הזכות להשתתף בהתחלת מפעל שיוקם הודות ליזמתה של קבוצה קטנה של אנשים בעלי מרץ המעונינים בגורל החולים, והודות להבנתם ולעזרתם של ראש עירית רמת גן והשלטונות. כוונת אנשים אלה היא ליצור בי"ח חדש וכן מרכז למחקר ולהשתלמות רופאים מהארץ ומחו"ל.

בארצנו נושאים בתי"ח רבים שמות של רופאים יהודים מדורות שחלפו, כגון: רמב"ם, צהלון, דונולו ועוד, אך אנשי המדע היהודים הגדולים של תקופתנו טרם זכו לכבוד זה. לכן שמחנו לקבל את הצעת פרופ. הרמן צונדק לקרוא את ביה"ח והמרכז הרפואי הזה על שם ד"ר פאול ארליך, החוקר היהודי הגדול ואבי הכימו־תרפיה המודרנית, האיש אשר הביא לרבבות חולים מרפא ותקוה חדשה בחייהם.

בשם הרופאים הידידים של המפעל אני מאחל שכל התכניות והתקוות הקשורות במפעל זה תתגשמנה בקרוב".

פרופ. א. דוקטש (לשעבר מורה לרפואה באוניברסיטת קורדובה בארגנטינה. כעת בארץ) ברך אף הוא את הנאספים, ואמר „המפעל הרפואי החשוב והנחוץ שיקום כאן בקרוב בחסותו של ראש עירית רמת גן, ובעזרת ידידים ומתנדבים, יהיה המפעל המתאים ביותר להתפתחותה ולתפארתה של עיר הגנים שכמעט אין לה מתחרה במדינתנו.

ב־27 באפריל 1954 הונחה אבן הפנה לבית החולים והמרכז הרפואי על שם פאול ארליך. בין אנשי שם רבים שהשתתפו בטקס נוכחו שר הבריאות, מר י. סרלין; ראש עירית רמת גן, מר א. קריניצי; ראש עירית בני ברק, מר ר. גרשנקורן; נשיא ההסתדרות הרפואית בישראל, ד"ר מ. שרמן; פרופ. הירש, פרופ. דוקטש ועוד.

את ברכת הממשלה הביא שר הבריאות באמרו: „אני מוכן לתת לכם אשראי למפעל הגדול הזה. תקותי שלא יעבור זמן רב מהנחת אבן הפנה עד לפתיחת המפעל, ואני שמח לשמוע שיש בידכם חלק ניכר מהאמצעים הדרושים להקמתו. כשר הבריאות הנני יכול לומר שאינני ירא מפני התחרות בביה"ח הממשלתיים. אדרבא, ביה"ח המודרני הפרטי הזה אשר הנכם עומדים להקים ישלים את האשפוז בארץ, אשר כבר כעת עומד על רמה גבוהה מאד.

אני שמח מאד לדעת שהמפעל הנו מאושר, דבר אשר ימשוך רופאים מחו"ל, וישפיע עליהם לקחת חלק ולתרום לקידום מדע הרפואה בארץ הזאת.

אני מאחל ליוזמים הצלחה מלאה בהשלמתו המהירה של המפעל".

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,

New York.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Though I know you to be a very busy man indeed, I am wondering whether it is possible for you to give some thought to the subject of this letter. I claim your interest on the very slender premise that we met in London during the war, that I interviewed you and wrote about you in World's Press News for which I was then working, and that I am a journalist. During those wartime years when a very young journalist myself I had the privilege of meeting not only you but journalists like the late H.R.Knickerbocker and Ernie Pyle, Alexander Clifford and Alan Moorehead, Dorothy Thompson and Quentin Reynolds. Later on I went to Egypt where for two years I was press officer at the British Embassy, Cairo. I returned to London and joined Reuters.

In subsequent years on various journalistic and PR assignments I worked in Britain, Italy, France, Germany and Spain. I have had a varied and interesting journalistic career covering 18 years and I am now 35. Last year I began working in New York.

It will perhaps sound sycophantic if I say that for years I have admired your work - what journalist valuing truth has not? - and that during such moral crises as that which was apparent at the height of McCarthyism you represented for so many of us in England a sanity which sustained our faith in America -- especially as this is a request that I may come to see you. I would greatly like your advice and, of course, I would regard such a meeting as an especial privilege.

I am, sir,
Yours sincerely,
Alan Arnold

THE AWARD

Clare walked up to my desk with a long face.

"What's the good word?" I said, trying to be cheerful.

"Read it and weep," she said, handing me a letter. It was from Marty Davis.

"Dear Harry" the letter said. "Thank you for your letter of February 14th and for the kind invitation you extended to Bob and myself. He is extremely flattered, naturally, that your organization should choose to name him Mr. Entertainment for the year but unfortunately he will be making a film in Japan this Spring and we will all be leaving for Tokyo early in April which of course means that he couldn't attend your banquet in New York on April 27th."

I didn't bother to read any further.

"Well," I said. "Two down. Where do we go from here?"

"I don't know," Clare said. "I thought sure Gleason would be able to do it or I would have gotten the letter off to Hope a long time ago."

"What's that got to do with it?" I said.

"Nothing," she said, "except Jackie giving us the bad news so late made us lose three valuable weeks."

"I am hip," I said, "but don't worry. We've done it before and we can do it again."

"I don't know," she said. "It gets harder every year....comedians moving to the coast and all. Why the hell do they go through this rigamorole anyway? Why don't people just send in their money, period?"

"Hush," I said. "You start talking like that and we'll be out of work."

You see, Clare and I are partners in a very fascinating business: fund-raising. The average organization doesn't know beans about raising money so they call in specialists. That's us. We're set up to handle the entire operation; organize lunches, dances, benefits, banquets, telephone appeals, direct mail campaigns, you know, the whole business. We work on a very modest percentage although some of our colleagues work on flat salary. But either way I'm sure you'll agree there's nothing unethical about it. The money goes to charity and everybody's happy and that's that.

Except that six years ago, wanting to make a good impression when we signed on this particular account, Clare and I decided to kick up some dust and get a little newspaper and newsreel attention by holding a lush banquet at the Waldorf and passing out Citations of Merit to some big show-business names.

It's a good dodge and I must admit we didn't invent it. The actors are a pushover, of course. Just tell them they've won an award and they jump at the bait. Then we charge fifty or a hundred bucks a plate and the cash customers pour in, as much to gawk at the celebrities as to help the organization. As I said before it's all for sweet charity and for a long time it's been running like clockwork.

Lately, though, it's been getting tough to line up top-drawer names. About three years ago we put ourselves out on the limb by naming Groucho Marx as Mr. Entertainment and he was a smash. Got a million laughs at the dinner, was quoted in everybody's column, and attracted a lot of attention to the organization, which of course is what Clare and I are most interested in. The next year naturally we had to get somebody more or less as big as Groucho so we invited Arthur Godfrey. But he wasn't having any. He sent us a nice check and frankly I've never been so disgusted by a large contribution. Money we can get pretty easily these days. It was a big drawing card for our banquet that we really needed and when Arthur turned us down I began to worry a little. Next we tried Sid Caesar but when Sid found out he would have to make a speech of acceptance he, too, begged off because he only does bits and sketches and doesn't like to talk in public "as himself" as they say in the trade.

We finally got somebody, of course, and everything worked out fine. But each year it's been getting tougher. Last year we had to go through Gobel, Skelton, Berle, and

Garry Moore before we pinned somebody down. And to tell you the truth I think some of these guys have a lot of nerve saying no to us. After all, they're being honored by a great organization with thousands of contributing members and some mighty imposing names on the letterhead. It's true that there's no voting or anything. Clare and I, we just pick the names ourselves, but even so it's a big thing. We send them a wire first, is how we get the ball rolling. "I AM PLEASED TO INFORM YOU THAT OUR ORGANIZATION HAS JUST NAMED YOU MR. ENTERTAINMENT OF 1956 FOR THE GENERAL EXCELLENCE OF YOUR TELEVISION PERFORMANCES DURING THE PAST YEAR." It has to be television, by the way. Movies or radio or records don't mean a thing in connection with a deal like this. Guy has to be working in television. "PLEASE ACCEPT MY PERSONAL CONGRATULATIONS. DETAILS CONCERNING FORMAL PRESENTATION OF YOUR AWARD SUPPLIED IN LETTER TO FOLLOW." We send the wire out over the signature of our honorary president, you understand, who is always somebody mighty important. We've had General MacArthur, Oscar Hammerstein, and Governor Dewey just to give you an idea. Naturally, being busy men, they don't have the time to handle any of the details of their office, so what they're actually doing is just allowing us to use their names. Like if you were to get a wire from me, Harry Slater, you'd probably throw it away but getting a wire signed General Sarnoff or Herbert Hoover you sit up and take notice.

We send out three copies of this wire. One to the guy himself, one to his agent or manager, and one to his publicity man. Usually it does the trick, or anyway it did up until recently when some of the boys began playing hard to get. If we get a turn-down we make a few quick phone calls, tell 'em to keep our correspondence confidential, and then start all over again with some other target. But as I say I think some of these guys have a lot of nerve saying no to us. A lot of them say they can't fly in from the coast, that they're busy doing their shows every week and so on but if a guy really wants to make a week-end trip he'll do it. One guy said he couldn't get to New York that month and then four weeks later I hear he's sneaked into town to see some broad or something. After all, Groucho had flown in from the coast, although it's true his show is on film and he has more free time than the guys who work-live. Also he had to come here anyway to do a show for Max Liebman and our timing just happened to be lucky.

So anyway, here we were, Clare and I, with rejection slips from Hope and Gleason and banquet-time rushing in on us like the Notre Dame forward wall.

"Comedians are getting tough," I said. "What about singers. How does Perry Como strike you?"

"It would be a pleasure," Clare said.

"Cut the comedy," I said. "Do you think he'd go for it?"

"I don't know," she said. "What about the speech bit?"

"He's not a cretin, " I said. "He can talk."

"But he strikes me as the kind who doesn't like to," she said. Clare's a better judge of human nature than I am so I didn't argue with her. She takes care of the subtler problems we run up against and handles a lot of the detail work. I like to tell myself that I do the big thinking for the two of us.

"He could sing," I said.

"All right," she said. "Shall we send a wire?"

I reached for the phone. "We might lose a couple of days that way," I said. "What's Sol Green's number?" ?

Sol's a publicity man who's well-liked at NBC and specializes in handling Perry. When I gave him the pitch he said "Sounds wonderful, Harry. Can I call you back?"

"I'll be here," I said. He called back in twenty minutes. "Jeez," he said, "I forgot. That very night Perry is getting an award at the Astor. Red Cross or Community Chest or something."

I took Clare to lunch at "21". Figured it would give our morale a little boost. When we got back to the office there was a message to call Ed Sullivan's secretary. I think I had promised Ed an [redacted] exclusive on our award story. You really have to break a thing like this open for everybody but it doesn't do any harm now ?

and then to let one of the boys get a lick at it a few hours early.

I told Ed's girl I had no news.

After we got back, I was looking out the window at some pigeons that were trying to keep out of the rain when Clare said "What about Jimmy Thomas?"

For a long time I looked at the pigeons, going over names in my mind. Groucho, Caesar, Gleason, Hope, Skelton, Berle, Silvers, Como; they were all off the list for one reason or another. Buttons, Cox, and a few others weren't working at the moment. ~~currently. Fred Allen would ordinarily be great for a thing like this but with the Whatto My Line set up the crowd might look a little odd.~~

"Sugar plum," I said, "I think you have hit it. At least we'll give it a try."

Thomas was a new boy. Not as big yet as the old hands but getting good ratings and a great press, which was important. To me, I mean. Personally I didn't entirely dig his talent but I knew a lot of people who did. To me he seemed cast in Godfrey's mold, although he had a youthful, fresh appeal, but I knew a few people who thought he was the funniest thing since Charlie Chaplin.

"Where does Thomas hail from?" I said. "Cincinnatti?"

"Chicago," Clare said.

"Good," I said. "We'll get good breaks there."

"You're chicken-counting," Clare said and she was right. I didn't have Thomas's name on the dotted line yet. I thought about him while I reached for the phone. Jimmy had started out down south as a disc-jockey and had landed in Chicago after the war. His easy-going country-boy charm and his way of handing out a line of gab between records had made him, within three years, the toast of the town so [redacted] CBS finally brought him to New York. But somebody goofed and they had him doing quiz-shows for a couple of years which made him a big favorite with the afternoon crowd but didn't make much of an impression at Lindy's. Finally, though, he had gotten a summer-replacement spot on a kind of last-minute fluke and that did it. He was off to the races. Funny thing about television. In the old days you worked for years to become a star. In TV one good show could do it. And, Jimmy did a good show, I'll have to admit that. He worked mostly ad-lib although he had writers, and his peculiar combination of boy-next-door [redacted] style and sharp wit made him the critics darling. Not since Buttons and Gobel has anybody made it that fast. Within six weeks he was as well-known a name around the country as anybody in the business. It remained to be seen, of course, whether or not he could last, but for the time being he was certainly riding high.

I got his press agent on the line. "Andy," I said, playing it carefully, "I've just heard news that I thought you might be interested in."

"What's that?" he said.

"Been talking to the gang over here and they're very hot to give Jimmy the big one this year. You know, the

Mr. Entertainment award. It's between him and Gleason as it stands at the moment."

"Jeez," Andy said. "It would be a great thing for Jim. When are they voting? When will you know?"

Andy hasn't been in the business long. He used to write or something.

"Oh," I said, "maybe this afternoon, maybe not for a couple of days. Reason I'm calling you now is just to get a line on a few things. Like would Jimmy be available to accept the award on the 27th of April? In case he wins, I mean."

"Don't see why not," Andy said. "He never gets away and he has nothing booked in the way of benefits or anything after, let me see, the middle of March."

"Well," I said, "I'll tell them that over here and we'll see what happens."

"Swell," Andy said. "Very nice of you to call, Harry."

I played it cool and killed a couple of hours to bring Andy and Thomas to a boil. Got some dictation done, went out and got a haircut, and then came back and began doing a little thinking as to the dais line-up for the banquet. I figured it would be the usual: somebody from the mayor's office, somebody speaking for the governor, a couple of columnists, whatever glamour dolls were scheduled to be in town to plug pictures, a couple of other comics or emcees from CBS, Thomas's network, three or four officers of the organization, and a toastmaster. Jessel had done it for us two years before so we probably couldn't get him. Besides he's so busy doing these things you have to line him up a million years in advance like he was the king of England or something.

While I was jotting down some names Andy called back. It was twenty minutes past four.

"I've talked to Jim," he said, "and he's very pleased to be in the running. He would definitely be available on the 27th."

"Funny thing you should call at just this minute," I said. "I [redacted] had the phone in my hand trying to call you. Good news."

"Really?"

"Yep. It was never even close. They love Gleason but Jimmy is hot this year."

"Gee, that's wonderful."

"You bet it is," I said, "but then Jim deserves it. I love his show myself."

"Thanks," Andy said. "I'll tell him."

"You should get the wire from the old man any minute," I said, signalling Clare to get it out on the other phone. "Then in a couple of days we'll fill you in with the minor details."

"Wonderful," Andy said. "I'll let you guys make the first announcement, then I'll follow it up. You let me know how you want to handle it."

"Oh, by the way," I said, "maybe Jim could work a couple of plugs for the organization into the show some time this week."

"No problem," Andy said. "Shoot it over and we'll put it on."

Frankly I pride myself on never overlooking anything. Thomas does one of those chatty shows where you can get plugs in easy. It's tough if you're working with somebody like Hope or Berle.

Within a week we had the dais line-up all nailed down. By going through the old man we were able to get Paley to send Phil Salvers. Phil couldn't be on hand for the whole thing but he committed himself to come in for ten minutes and say a few words. Carmine De Sapio signed on because he likes our organization and because I suggested he could make a brief pitch about his candidate. I like Carmine. He's the kind of a guy who'll usually come through for you. Then we got Rhonda Fleming because her picture was opening the same day as the banquet, Earl Wilson because he prided himself on being the guy who had "discovered" Thomas when he was working in Chicago, Jaye P. Morgan because she had been named the Queen of our Winter Fund-raising Drive and thought she owed us something, Mike Wallace because he was still kind of new to the banquet circuit, was impressed at being invited and wanted to be a nice guy about it, Herbert Bayard Swope because he was on our board of trustees, and two CBS vice-presidents because it was part of their day's work. The other four chairs, as I say, were taken by officers of the organization. They were all part-time officers, of course, as they had their own business to attend to in addition to their charitable activities but they were all ready, willing and able to attend because they got a kick out of hobnobbing with the celebrities.

If I do say so myself everything went off smooth as glass.

The Grand Ballroom of the Waldorf was pretty well filled up the night of the banquet and we had pretty lights and a small band playing dinner music.

We hadn't had any luck getting a topnotch emcee so we finally had to settle for Peter O'Brien from the mayor's office who is pretty good. He's kind of a minor league Grover Whelan as far as I'm concerned but he tells a fair story, the ladies like him, and he handles a banquet with all the ease of a man who has practically lived on [redacted] chicken, peas and ice-cream with cherry-sauce for the past three years.

The feed was pretty good and about nine forty-five I gave O'Brien the high-sign and sent the man over to adjust the microphone. I felt fine. The pictures had been taken already, the money was all in, I had had a couple of drinks, and all in all life was rosey. Tell you how good I was feeling; I actually enjoyed the speeches and when you've sat through as many as I have, brother, that's something.

While I was watching the guy adjust the mike I noticed that Andy Slean, Thomas's man, was approaching my table. He came over and hunched down next to me.

"Say," he said, "Jim was just wondering---who did the voting that got him this award?"

I've always thought it was pretty corny in stories where people say their blood ran cold but believe me that's the way I felt right then. I personally always had figured Thomas as kind of a smart aleck type and I was afraid that his question meant trouble.

"Why, what do you mean, Andy?" I stalled.

"You know, who decided that he's this year's Mr. Entertainment? Was there some kind of a vote? Jim just wants to know in connection with his speech."

I started to say "That's what I was afraid of" but I held my tongue. "Well, " I said, "you know how these things work. There's no actual vote. It was just the Committee. Same way we do it every year. Like for Groucho and the rest of them."

"Who's on the Committee?"

"Well, uh---I mean it's not a formal committee or anything. We just discuss it up at the office and we do a lot of thinking as to who's the most deserving guy and like that."

"I see," Andy said. "Okay, thanks. I'll tell Jim."

I figured there was no sense running after him.

"What were you two whispering about?" Claire sais.

"Listen, " I said. "Wasn't it Thomas who made that speech about fluoridation on his show a few weeks ago?"

"Yes," she said. "Why do you ask?"

"I don't see the Thomas show too often. Does he think he's some sort of a---like a--you know, and Edward R. Murrow?"

"Yes, maybe a little. But what's up?"

"The jig. Sloan just came nosing around to find out how we actually do the deciding about the Award."

"So?"

"So I told him."

"Why didn't you lie?"

"I don't know. What good would that have done? They could check later."

"Are you afraid Thomas is going to mention something about it in his speech?"

"Two minds," I said, "with but a single thought. The papers would eat it up. We'd be out of work in the morning."

Claire put her hand to her head and just stared at the tablecloth.

~~Then something~~ At that moment O'Brien rapped for order, cleared his throat and said "Good evening, ladies and gentlemen. Can you hear me?" A man at a nearby table shouted "Yes!" "Not you, Charley," O'Brien laughed, "I said ladies and gentlemen." You had to hand it to Pete. He was fast on his feet.

After he handled a few formal introductions and announcements Pete introduced Mr. Salzberger, our chairman, who lumbered to the microphone, spilled a glass of water, discussed finances briefly and sat down.

Pete then told a few stories and got the crowd in a good mood. Me, I didn't laugh.

After that it was Carmine, whose remarks had something to do with the opportunities in our great nation for young men with something fresh and worthwhile to say although he had a little trouble working in praise for both Jimmy Thomas and his candidate. Then came Rhonda Fleming who said she couldn't really think of very much to say because she wasn't a practiced public speaker but that to prove just how much she loved ~~him~~ Jim she was going to give him a big kiss right then and there and she did and the crowd ate it up. Thomas wasn't exactly displeased either. I mean, after all.

She closed with a few words about the organization and only said "worthy cause" twice which is less than par for the course.

Then Earl said a few words and I do mean a few words because he isn't much of a talker, which is true of a lot of writers, but he spoke sincerely anyway and did an okay job. Then O'Brien put Phil on because he had to get out early and he was [redacted] great, of course, as always. We should have given him the award. He's not the type that ask questions.

"It's very wonderful to be here at the---" he said and then he looked at a small card in his hand and said "the Waldorf." It broke everybody up because he was pretending not to know where he was, you know.

"I think it's a fine thing that you're giving this well-deserved citation to Jimmy Thomas," he said, "although frankly I think there is one other man to whom the award could have gone---myself."

Phil actually is a very shy, modest guy, you understand, but sometimes he does these jokes where he seems to be bold or brazen and the people eat it up. [redacted] Anyway he went on like that for about eight minutes and he even had Thomas laughing which is pretty good because being the guest of honor at one of these affairs is a little unnerving and you are apt to be kind of distracted during the speeches and what-have-you. I was hoping Thomas would choke.

At long last we were heading for the home stretch and O'Brien picked up the large shiny plaque that we had had made up. [redacted].

"As you all know," Peter said, "the Mr. Entertainment Award that this organization presents every year is one of the most respected in the annals of show business. Extreme care is given to the selection of candidates for this great honor and when a man is privileged to have his name engraved on one of these plaques, it is a tremendously significant thing.....both to the man involved, to the organization, and to...uh...those of us who support this worthy effort."

I looked at Clare and smiled to hide the fact that I felt sick.

"We all know," he was saying, "the tireless devotion and unflagging zeal with which show people contribute their time and talents to one charitable cause or another. It has been said that an actor is the only man in the world who will time and time again give away the only thing he has to sell: his God-given ability."

I didn't quite see what that had to do with Jim's getting the award but the crowd seemed to be lapping it up and besides I suppose Thomas had done his share of benefits although I must say he had never done anything in particular for our organization before. But be that as it may O'Brien was warming to his task, as they say.

"This young man," he said, "who came out of the great city of Chicago just a few years ago has done what very few men in our history have been able to do. He has won the heart of New York, the respect of its people, and the admiration of its leaders. New York is proud to consider Jimmy Thomas an adopted son."

At this there was a great wave of applause.

"And how has he accomplished all this?" O'Brien asked. "By consistently telecasting good clean entertainment," (more applause) "by bringing a smile to many a troubled countenance, by giving unselfishly of his time and...uh...talent...and...uh...by showing the world what is meant by good clean American entertainment."

The audience applauded again. Clare and I exchanged glances.

[redacted]

"Jimmy Thomas," O'Brien said, plunging into a brief biography, "was the only child of Alfred and Agnes Thomas of Baltimore, Maryland. As a boy he attended school in Baltimore, became interested in dramatics, and finally started his radio career on a Baltimore station. His professional progress was interrupted by a three year stretch in the United States Navy" (more applause) "after which he migrated to Chicago and began the phenomenal success story that has reached its climax, so to speak, here in this room tonight. But I am certain that, in another sense, this is not the climax of the career of Jimmy Thomas. For he is yet a young man. He has horizons before him. Uncharted seas to sail. Battles to win. And great honors to... uh...attain. No, it will be many a year before Jimmy Thomas reaches the climax, the apex, of his climb to fame and the full love of...uh...his fellow Americans. And we know he will...uh...do all that we...uh...so confidently predict for him here tonight. At this time... it gives me extreme pleasure, Jim, to present to you this plaque---" Thomas rose to his feet and stood, somewhat sheepishly, next to O'Brien. "---it gives me extreme pleasure to present to you this citation for meritorious entertainment service to the people of America during the past twelve months and to officially proclaim you, acting as I am on behalf of this great organization, Mr. Entertainment of 1956!"

The whole audience leaped to its feet and gave Thomas a lengthy ovation. When it subsided he bowed looked directly at and said, speaking slowly, "Thank you, Mr. O'Brien, ladies and gentlemen, and distinguished guests. I know this has been a long evening for you and I'm not going to take very much of your time now with a speech or anything remotely resembling a speech. I just want to say that I am deeply touched by the great honor you have tonight bestowed upon me. I suppose you had expected that I was going to get up here and do jokes---" At that there was some scattered applause and a little light laughter so [redacted] Re did [redacted] a few jokes, but then he got back on the track. "But I just want to say," he said, "that I am truly grateful to you,...to all of you,..for the kind words said here tonight...and for this very handsome plaque. I know what your organization stands for and what its ideals are. And I like to think that those ideals are somehow embodied in, or connected with, this particular award."

I looked at Clare. She looked kind of funny. Like she almost had tears in her eyes or something.

"Those of us in television" Jimmy said, "sometimes are apt to get so interested in the very doing of our programs that we almost forget the audience, strange as that may sound. It isn't that we're unaware of the audience, it's just that the simple mechanics of our work sometimes induces in us a peculiar kind of---well, you might call it..selfishness. And that's why it's particularly heart-warming to receive some demonstration such as this of the fact that you don't hold that selfishness against us, that you do have some measure of charitable feeling towards us, and that you look to us to bring some pleasure into your lives. Despite what you may hear, we are interested in you, of course. Sometimes I wish I could go into your homes physically and do my program. At [redacted] times I feel that the camera stands in the way of our getting to know each other and it is, as I say, an evening like this and an event like this, that does bring me face to face with you and that enables me to thank you very sincerely and very humbly for your response and your affection. I..." he paused and scratched his head with that peculiar country-boy gesture that made him seem so folksy [redacted] [redacted]..."I guess I just finished my speech, folks, so...so I guess I'll just sit down. Thank you again, from the bottom of my heart."

Well, that's about all there is to this little story. When you started reading it you probably figured me for a cynical bastard who just wanted to give you the low-down on the citation and plaque business but that isn't my angle. I mean as we all left the Walforf that night Jimmy Thomas was happy, the audience was happy, the treasury was bulging, and Clare and I were set for another year. Don't give me any of that ends and means malarky. I like my work very much. Wouldn't change it for anything. Oh, and one more thing. This year when you're taking care of the Community Chest and the Red Cross and the March of Dimes and the rest of them, remember the organization, too, will you?

Dear Mr. Murrow:

General Johnson, Commandant of the Army War College, has informed me that he has invited you to participate in the third annual National Strategy Seminar which the College is conducting during the period June 11-14, 1957. It is an occasion which I think you would enjoy and one to which I know you would make a substantial contribution.

General Johnson and I regretted that you were unable to attend the 1955 and 1956 Seminars and hope that your busy schedule will permit you to be with us this year. You may be sure of a warm welcome from the entire faculty and student body.

Looking forward to seeing you at Carlisle Barracks in June, I am

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

This enclosed report of an informal meeting of the non-academic members of the Advisory Committee of the Arts Center Program, is the first of a series of reports on the progress of our enterprise which I hope to send out every month to all the members of the advisory committees of the various schools to be housed in the Center.

I will be glad to receive any comments or pieces of advice which any of you may be kind enough to send me.

Report of Luncheon-Meeting for Advisory Committee of Arts Center Program on January 4, 1957

At a meeting of the Advisory Committee on the Arts Center on January 4, the members raised the question of the relationship of the Arts Center to the Lincoln Square Center for the Performing Arts. In the course of the discussion it became evident that to some of those present the nature and aims of the instruction to be given at the Columbia Center were not plain. In order to dispel any confusion that may still exist on the subject, we have drawn up the following statement. We hope it will make clear that the two projects are in no sense rivals, that they have different objectives which they plan to reach by different routes.

The Arts Center is to be primarily and essentially an educational institution. It has two different but related aims. In the first place, it proposes to develop in amateurs an intelligent appreciation of the arts and a clear understanding of their methods. We believe that to accomplish these purposes the amateurs must acquire a first-hand knowledge of the processes of creation in music, in painting and sculpture, acting, play production, etc., as well as of those in architecture.

In the second place, it will base the training of students who may become professionals on a broad knowledge of the humanities and an understanding of the society to which they belong. The work of an artist without roots in this world is bound to seem superficial and egocentric to his audience. We expect further to enrich the education of these professionals by encouraging continuous social and intellectual intercourse between the practitioners of each of the creative arts with all of the others to be housed in the Columbia Center.

The program of the Lincoln Square development has in view other aims and other methods. The three large auditoriums it plans to build - the Opera House, the Music Hall and the Repertory Theatre - have no educational features. There is to be no provision for the teaching of architecture or painting and sculpture at Lincoln Square. The educational facilities that it will offer are designed for immediate practical education of performers in the dance, in acting, in play production, in song and on all the musical instruments.

Although the two projects, when thus defined, are obviously unlike, the leaders of each have promised to explore all possible methods of mutually beneficial cooperation. Columbia has already agreed to contribute on permanent loan some of the treasures of its Brander Matthews Dramatic Museum to the Union Museum and Library of the Performing Arts planned for Lincoln Square. Negotiations now under way may reveal other methods of cooperation and the avoidance of duplication.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Because of late there have been no meetings of the various advisory committees of the Arts Center Program, I am taking this opportunity of bringing you up to date on the recent substantial development of our plans for the building. The progress has been very encouraging.

LINCOLN SQUARE

Delay on reaching a final decision as to the best possible site for the Center has been responsible for a natural impression of inactivity. For some time we seriously considered the advisability of making the Center a part of the Lincoln Square Development. Mr. John D. Rockefeller III, the executive head of the project, invited representatives of the University to confer with him on the subject. Although some members of our overall Advisory Committee favored the move, most of the heads of the schools and departments to be housed in the Center opposed it. Their reasons seemed so cogent to the Administration of the University that it discontinued negotiations with Mr. Rockefeller. He expressed regret at Columbia's decision, but understood the reasons that prompted it. Both he and the University agreed to explore methods of cooperation between the two projects when they have been completed.

THE JUILLIARD SCHOOL

The Administration considered for a time buying the buildings of the Juilliard School, which expects to move to Lincoln

Square. The University architect, Frederick Woodbridge, inspected the building and reported that it could be remodeled without great expense in a way to provide facilities for all the units to be contained in the Center, except the School of Dramatic Arts and two of the theatres originally planned for the building. The School owns a plot adjoining the building on the north on which the theatrical units could be built.

Although this plan for a Center might have cost less than the erection of an entirely new building, the Administration tabled it for a number of reasons. In the first place, the Juilliard School will not be able to vacate its present building until its new quarters at Lincoln Square are completed, which may be an extended period of time. In the second place, the feeling is strong and almost universal that the Arts Center should be on the Morningside Campus or at least immediately adjacent to it.

NEW PLANS FOR THE BUILDING

For the above reasons we have decided to build the Center adjacent to the campus, the new plans for which are rapidly taking definite shape. The first plans, drawn by the architects Moore & Hutchins, were based on statements of needs submitted by the various schools and departments concerned. They proved to be so ambitious that the cost of a building embodying them would have been prohibitive. Consequently, under the direction of Vice President Courtney Brown, we have approached the problem in a different way.

I am now conferring with the heads of the various schools to obtain their advice as to the most desirable way of fitting their needs to the reduced space now available to them.

NEW SITE

Since the site tentatively discussed for the Center, Amsterdam Avenue between 116 and 117 Streets, has now been assigned to the projected three-building East Campus Development, another site adjacent to the old one has been selected for study. The architects are now drawing plans for a structure to be built on this area, based on the revised allotments of space. Since the University must still buy two buildings on this plot, its exact situation must for the moment remain confidential. Mr. Moore has promised to finish one perspective view and a single page of description of the Arts Center.

The study of elevations and preparations of a rendering suitable for reproduction will be ready in about a week.

THE LARGE THEATRE

Although the new plans exclude the large theatre from the Center, it is provided for. Space on the new site is to be reserved for this theatre, which becomes a separate project.

THE AUTUMN DRIVE

The apparently unavoidable delays in getting our project "off the ground" we confidently believe are at an end. By next fall we shall be equipped with all the facts and other materials necessary to gain the interest and secure the support of possible donors. The Development Office, with the advice and aid of the Advisory Committee, will then be able to launch a too-long delayed drive for financial support with strong hopes of success.

Sincerely,

Oscar James Campbell

Dear Les:

This time I answer your letter. I have had to decide sometime ago that there was just no possibility of my doing any speaking dates with this radio and television schedule I have. I had a call from a very good friend of mine, Mr. Milton Callner. He is very much interested in Brandeis University and would like to know if you have an available date any time in June.

This is not a free job -- they are willing to pay for it. If you have a free date and could come out at that time, what would be the price? I would certainly appreciate hearing from you on this.

Best regards and behave yourself!

Your very high regard for Captain Avary confirms the commendation which we received from others in considering him for the position in Afghanistan. However, it has been decided that Mr. Richard Forhan, until now Regional Director for Pan American in the Middle East, will occupy this post.

Your interest in writing us in connection with Captain Avary is very much appreciated.

Dear Captain Avary:

Since my return to New York there has been considerable accelerated activity in connection with the Civil Aviation Development Program for Afghanistan and we are at this very moment concluding the formal arrangements with ICA for the PAA Technical Assistance phase. I was greatly impressed with the interest and sincerity of purpose which you expressed in heading up this particular project. Therefore, while this may come as somewhat of a disappointment, I must inform you that Mr. Richard Forhan, until now Regional Director for Pan American in the middle East, has been selected to occupy the position of Executive Vice President and General Manager in Aryana Airlines.

Please rest assured that full consideration was given to your experience and years of service with Pan American which were favorable in all respects. In addition to Vice President Leslie, we received letters of commendation from various of your former associates.

In view of the selection which has already been made, I can simply state that we shall continue to bear in mind your interest in the Technical Assistance Program as and when additional projects develop.

Sincerely

General Thomas O. Hardin
Director, Technical Assistance Programs
Pan American World Airways

Dear General Hardin:

Thank you very much for your fine letter of January 10th, which I received on my return from Bangkok yesterday.

It comes as no surprise to me that Mr. Richard Forhan has received the appointment to head up the Afghanistan Project. As early as last Summer he expressed great interest in this Program to me, and I know you have made an excellent choice. Mr. Forhan is a highly qualified man - and a great personal friend of mine - so I am indeed happy that he has been chosen for this assignment.

The Technical Assistance Program can be compared to the Olympic Games. It is a great honor and distinction to be in the competition. Only one man can win the "gold medal" in each event. I am in no way disappointed by the results of the selection for the Afghanistan show because I know there are other Projects coming up where top honors will be awarded. So, General Hardin, my morale is exceedingly high and I will keep myself in top form for the next event on your Program.

Since our very pleasant meeting in Karachi, it is highly significant that the full impact of American Foreign Policy has swung to and focussed on the Middle East. The Government of the United States - wisely and with great force - has said to the world that in this critical area Soviet Russia can and will be blocked. Technical Assistance Programs will obviously play a major role in proving to the peoples of the Middle East that the Western way of life is their salvation - because it has Right on it's side.

To me, the selection of men for the Technical Assistance Program has never been a tougher assignment for you than at the present time. These men must not and cannot be selected just because they have had vast and varied experience in the field of aviation. Nor because they are fed up with their present jobs, attracted by the good Project salaries or want to do a little pioneering for a change. Your men must be fired up with the all-important fact that we are in a life and death struggle against a World threat of Communist penetration. Their technological experience will then be the weapon used to defeat Soviet Russia in a cold War on foreign soil that must - through their consecrated efforts - be won by the West. Any man not fully inspired by the consummate and fiercely patriotic role which he must play in the Technical Assistance Program doesn't belong on one of your Teams.

I am fully aware of the fact, General Hardin, that you know all these things - perhaps far better - and certainly at closer range than I. What I do want to convey to you is the straight, sincere fact that I know them too and believe in them with everything I've got. I'm your man, General. With deep respect and greater confidence than ever, I await your orders.

Sincerely yours,

Edwin D. Avary

January 9, 1957

Dear General Hardin:

I trust you will not consider this letter an impertinance.

Recently, while coming back from Rangoon, I had an opportunity for a prolonged conversation with Captain Ned Avary who is with Pan American. He is a friend of many years standing.

In the small hours of the morning, Avary talked with me at length about his desire to become associated with the Technical Assistance Program in Afghanistan. Having spent much of my adult life watching Americans working abroad in both military and civilian capacities, I was struck with Avary's enthusiasm and his appreciation of the importance of the mission.

Being personally unfamiliar with Afghanistan and its people I cannot, of course, venture an opinion of how well he would get on in that area, but he is in my view the type of American who will adjust quickly to foreign surroundings and be a credit to his country.

This note is written on my own initiative, and not at Captain Avary's request.

Respectfully yours,

General Thomas O. Hardin, Director

For your information I am taking the liberty of enclosing a copy of my application to General Hardin for the position of Project Director of the forthcoming Technical Assistance Program in Afghanistan. I cannot tell you how much your interest and help mean to me. Put simply,-you are one of the few men I have met in the past year who instantly knew what I am driving at. We know it is good.

My crew and I all felt lousy about your missing bag the other night in Rangoon. We delayed the take off for Bangkok and tore that DC6B apart. But it wasn't on board. Sincerely hope your mission to Rangoon was not too seriously affected by this.

Trust you had a good trip home and will look forward to our meeting in Kabul. In the meantime, thank you for your inspiring straight talk and a Very Merry Christmas to you and your family.

December 3, 1956

General Thomas O. Hardin
Director, Technical Assistance Programs
Pan American World Airways
135 East 42nd Street
New York, New York

Dear General Hardin:

I wish to confirm in writing my verbal statement to you of November 30th in Karachi that I strongly desire the appointment as Project Director of the Technical Assistance Program in Afghanistan. The project in Afghanistan presents a challenge and appeal which calls for an unusual combination of pioneering spirit and professional maturity. I firmly believe I possess these qualifications to a high degree.

I am 45 years old and in my 20th year of service as a Pan American Pilot. At the present time I am based in London, England where I am assigned to the Around-the-World Service as a Senior Check Pilot. During the past two years I have observed with great interest the inauguration and development of the various Technical Assistance Programs in Turkey, Pakistan and Thailand. I knew that sooner or later the right Project for me would present itself - and Afghanistan is it.

After graduating from Stanford University with a Bachelor of Arts Degree in 1932, I immediately reported to Randolph Field, Texas as a Flying Cadet. In June, 1933, at the age of 21, I graduated from Kelly Field, Texas and was commissioned 2nd Lieutenant in the U.S. Army Air Force. I then spent four years as a Fighter Pilot with various tactical units of the Air Force and had the honor of serving under such great Air Force men as General Arnold, General Spaatz and General Eaker. In 1937 I joined Pan American Airways as Copilot in Brownsville, Texas.

During my career with Pan American Airways I have flown 15,000 hours on all of their routes, in every type of equipment from the old flying boats down to our present day Douglas and Boeing Aircraft.

Sixteen of my 20 years service have been at foreign bases and I know, like and get along well with people abroad. I speak Spanish and Portuguese fluently, and have a social knowledge of French.

For 13 years I lived in Rio de Janeiro, and was intimately associated with the growth of our South American routes, from the old dawn-to-dusk boat days to the present New York to Buenos Aires around-the-clock services. I personally flew most of the South American East Coast routes when they were up for CAA night approval. In Rio de Janeiro my own professional progress closely paralleled our PAA route development. From Copilot I went to Captain and Senior Check Pilot in that area. In 1946 (at the age of 34) I was appointed Chief Pilot and Senior Operations Representative for PAA in South America. Panair do Brasil was then undertaking Trans-Atlantic and European Operations with their new Constellations and, in 1948, I was placed on loan from PAA to Panair do Brasil as Operations Manager of their International Services. In 1950, the Panair show completed, I returned to PAA and had the honor to fly President Trippe and his party on the first Boeing Stratocruiser to go to South America. In 1953 I returned to San Francisco to fly the Boeings on the Pacific run and in 1954 was assigned to London, England.

I sincerely believe that I am now ready for the Technical Assistance Program. If I receive the appointment as Project Director of the Afghanistan Project, it will be the culmination of every personal and professional desire that I possess, and I will approach this assignment with deep humility and great confidence.

Thank you for your consideration of this application.

Sincerely yours,

Edwin D. Avary

I have had a talk with this chap who proposes a joint production effort with joint ownership and financing. This would involve producing a half-hour dramatized version of a man's life with the individual appearing for the last five minutes. Bailey-Watson estimates that an original pilot to be made in England would cost about $12,000.

I do not think this is something we have the time or energy to undertake, although I do believe the idea would be saleable.

Dear Ed:

This is to introduce Larry Baker of WBZ-TV in Boston. He has been our producer-director for religious programs on Channel 4 over the past three or four years. He has been a tremendous help to me, giving generously of his time and talent, both when he was getting paid for it and when he was not. Together we have worked out some rather interesting productions for the local audience and while I have no desire to lose him to CBS in New York, I do think he should be given the opportunity to release that talent in a less limited field. He has a fine background in the theatre and I can personally recommend him without reservation. I'd be most grateful if you could sit down with him for a few minutes to explore the possibilities.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am taking the liberty of writing you and enclosing a letter of introduction from the Reverend Walter L. Flaherty, Radio-Television Director for the Archdiocese of Boston and advisor on these matters to His Excellency, Richard J. Cushing.

Father Flaherty and I were not only business associates while I was staff producer-director at WBZ-TV in Boston, but personal friends as well.

In September I resigned from WBZ-TV and since that time have been here in New York. Primarily producing and or directing on a free-lance basis in closed-circuit television.

Although I find free-lancing interesting, it was not my original intention on arriving here. I most earnestly would like to make a permanent association at this time.

May I have five minutes of your time in order to benefit from your excellent advice? I enclose a resume.

Thank you very much.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

It is my pleasure to inform you that the National Executive Committee of U. S. National Student Association at its recent December meeting appointed you as a member of its National Advisory Council.

The National Advisory Council of USNSA is a group of distinguished educators and other persons interested in education who serve to advise the USNSA staff on an informal basis. Though the National Advisory Council does not meet as a body, we attempt throughout the year to utilize the services of the National Advisory Council in consideration of various programs, projects and activities of USNSA.

I am enclosing for yourinformation a copy of the 195-56 Summary Report of the activities of USNSA. It includes a 1955-56 program summary, a report on our Ninth National Student Congress held at the University of Chicago last August and a projected program for 1956-1957 year.

Knowing of your interest in activities of students and particularly of your activities in the National Student Federation of America, which was in a sense our predecessor organization, the National Executive Committee felt it particularly appropriate that you should become a member of our National Advisory Council. I certainly hope that you will be able to accept this position.

I hope that I will have an opportunity in the near future to meet with you and discuss further the activities of USNSA.

American students worked toward the formation of a national organization through which they could exchange ideas and express their point of view on issues which affected them as members of the educational community, as citizens in a changing world, and as leaders in an uncertain future.

Twenty-five such students travelled to Prague in August, 1946 as the American delegation to the first World Student Congress, which had been organized by the national unions of students of Britain and of Czechoslovakia, the latter still being outside the Iron Curtain at that time. The "Prague 25," as this group has come to be called, represented ten universities and nine national student organizations. There were four representatives from the National Intercollegiate Christian Council (the YMCA and YWCA), four from the National Catholic Youth Council, and one from each of seven smaller religious, professional, and political student organizations. The student bodies at ten universities had elected representatives; these were Harvard, Texas, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, Fiske, Wisconsin, Chicago, Wayne, Hunter, and the University of California at Los Angeles.

This group, while it represented a very wide cross-section, realized it could not be considered the official voice of the American student community. Impressed by the work being done by national unions of students in other countries, they developed the idea of forming a national organization in this country which would be based on a democratic representation of student opinion and would be non-partisan and non-sectarian.

During the Christmas holidays of 1946, 700 official delegates from 294 schools and 16 national student organizations and youth groups met for three days in Mandel Hall at the University of Chicago to discuss the formation of such an organization. This Chicago Student Conference elected a National Continuations Committee under the chairmanship of Jim Smith of the University of Texas, one of the "Prague 25." This Committee handled all the arrangements for the Constitutional Convention, including the drafting of a proposed Constitution.

The Constitutional Convention was held on the campus of the University of Wisconsin late in the summer of 1947. Here some 750 delegates representing 1,389,000 students in 356 colleges throughout the United States wrote the Constitution and planned the program for their organization, the United States National Student Association, USNSA.

The delegates to this first Convention also made what was probably the most significant single decision in the history of USNSA: membership in the organization was to be limited to student bodies as represented through their democratically-constituted student governments. This guaranteed that all those who were to have a voice and a vote in USNSA would be the elected representatives of the entire student population in member colleges and universities. Although a number of national youth groups at the Constitutional Convention advocated that USNSA allow membership by organizations as well as by student bodies, the majority of the delegates recognized that those active in many of these groups were not always the most representative students on a campus. The acceptance that USNSA has won among student and with national educational groups (USNSA is the only student organization to be a constituent member of the American Council on Education) is based on the fact that, by its structure, it reflects accurately and consistently the thinking of the students on the member campuses.

During the nine years since the Constitutional Convention, USNSA has developed a gradually widening program of education and service to the American educational community. Primarily, its efforts have been directed toward improving student leadership, creating a greater awareness among students of the issues and problems of American education, assisting student organizations, particularly student government, in developing a more mature and effective role in campus life, and providing a voice for American students in national and international affairs as they affect them in their role as students.

HOW USNSA IS ORGANIZED

The basic unit of USNSA is the student body. The student government is the channel through which the Association reaches this large group. Well over 90% of all accredited colleges have some type of self-governing body which by virtue of its composition and constitution is recognized by both the students and the administration as representative of the student community as a whole. USNSA is neither superior to nor independent of the student government at an individual member school; rather, USNSA is an integral component of that body. So long as the representative character of these student governments is maintained, USNSA will continue to be representative.

All policies and programs of USNSA are established by the annual National Student Congress (see Section II). Each member school may send one or more voting delegates to this meeting, according to the school population. Emergency policies may be enacted by the National Executive Committee between meetings of the Congress, but these policies are subject to review by the Congress.

Each of the member schools belongs to one of the nineteen regions of USNSA. These regions have their own constitutions, officers, dues, and programs of intercollegiate cooperation. The latter include conferences, workshops, clinics, newsletters and region-wide meetings or assemblies.

Each region has one representative on the National Executive Committee (NEC) and this is usually the Regional Chairman. Larger regions (more than 40,000 students represented) have a second member on the NEC. This body meets twice each year (December and August) to review the operations of the Association and to hear reports from the national staff.

The national staff is made up of the six elected national officers and appointed administrative personnel. The national officers are elected by the National Student Congress for one-year terms. They must be students at member schools and accredited members of the Congress at the time of their election. Five of these officers take a year's leave of absence from their studies to serve. The President is the official spokesman of the Association and is responsible for general operations. The Executive Vice President shares the administrative responsibility and coordinates the programs which are carried out by the other four Vice Presidents, each of whom has an area or "Commission."

All the various research, action and programming of the Association is divided among four general areas, called "Commissions," the operations of which are explained more completely in the following pages. Specific projects are assigned to subcommissions which are located at individual member schools.

USNSA is financed through membership dues, special grants from foundations, the sale of publications, and gifts from interested individuals and corporations.

A number of adult educators, former student leaders, and distinguished citizens serve on the special advisory boards of USNSA. These boards are appointed by the NEC and are kept continually informed of Association activities. A complete list of these advisors is given inside the front cover.

membership

Although a large membership is not the primary aim of the Association but, instead, a deep commitment on the part of the leaders of the student world to face the problems of American education, it is imperative that these leaders be given some incentive, be allowed to meet periodically to discuss mutual concerns, and be heard by other members of the community. At the present time, USNSA is the only organization which can do this on a national, non-partisan scale.

It is encouraging, therefore, that from September 1955 through June 1956, fifty-three colleges and universities affiliated with USNSA. Ranging in size from less than 200 (at Pennsylvania's Alliance College) to over 14,000 (at the University of Washington), these new members represent some 94,000 students. In this same period, six schools disaffiliated.

The 309 schools belonging to USNSA at the end of the academic year represented 713,000 students, the largest membership in the nine-year history of the Association.

contacts with the campus

In a continual attempt to maintain close contact with the students they represent, the national officers visited nearly two-thirds of the member campuses during the year, as well as a number of non-member schools. They met with students, faculty and administrators for conferences on campus problems, for evaluations of student government, and in informal discussions. Information and suggestions gathered in these campus visits gave the USNSA staff a picture of American student life, the trends and problems being faced, which was not available in such complete detail to any other group.

This information was helpful in planning Association programs and in expressing the student point of view on important national and international issues. Especially valuable was the extensive travel of the Student Government Vice President through the South, visiting member and non-member schools from Texas to Georgia. Only by such first-hand research could the Association gather all the facts in this tension-torn area; the use made of this information is evident in almost all phases of USNSA programming.

publications

The Student Government Bulletin, published monthly from October through May, remained the primary "thought" publication of the Association and the only periodical devoted exclusively to the problems of the student.

The USNSA NEWS reached student body presidents, campus newspaper editors, deans of students and other educators each month with information of national and international news of interest to students.

Special supplements to the NEWS were issued to give expanded treatment to topics of particular importance. These supplements included:

"Peron's Secret Files on Students" — a report by Luigi Einaudi, Harvard junior and USNSA representative to Latin America in late 1956 who, a few days after the overthrow of Peron, went through the offices and files of the "strictly secret administrative police organization" maintained by the Ministry of Education of Argentina.

"Timetable for Tension" — a report on the rioting at the University of Alabama, compiled by USNSA from first-hand accounts, special material from the Student Body President at the University, and reports from students in this country and abroad. This was distributed to every university in the world, along with USNSA's resolution from the Eighth National Student Congress which expressed its unalterable opposition to all forms of discrimination in education.

Special publications included a report of the Ford Foundation-supported research study which USNSA conducted to determine the nature and potential influence of student governments and student leaders. This report, "Student Government, Student Leaders and the American College," was sent to every member student government, to almost every dean of students in the country and to a selected number of educators. It was reviewed in educational publications and discussed as part of several national meetings (for further information on this report, see page 10).

Ray Farabee, Student Government Vice President, past student body president at the University of Texas

In connection with National Brotherhood Week, USNSA and the Anti-Defamation League released "Toward A Democratic Campus," which was designed as a manual for campus human relations programs. Written in part by two former officers of USNSA, it is a significant contribution in a critical area.

student government information service (SGIS)

With the addition of a full-time Research Editor to collect material, maintain files and answer requests, the Student Government Information Service was able to expand its services to member schools. The SGIS files contain the most complete and up-to-date material available anywhere on student activities.

From September 1955 to June 1956, approximately 650 requests for information were received from 184 different schools. (See Section III, page 37, for further information.)

academic freedom week

The Eighth National Student Congress unanimously called for USNSA sponsorship of a national Academic Freedom Week on member campuses "to further understanding of academic freedom, its historical contribution to society, its function within an urban-industrial culture and its importance to students and faculty."

Academic Freedom Week was set for April 9-16, with the theme "Toward a Basic Definition." With the assistance of a $3,000 grant from the Fund of the Republic, the Association prepared a kit on academic freedom and on campus programs in particular which went to all member schools. A special mailing was also sent to college editors.

Several campuses had highly successful programs during this week; they included: University of Michigan, Fordham College, Los Angeles City College, University of Minnesota, and Harpur College. Almost all USNSA campuses sponsored some type of observance during the week.

Student-faculty conferences were held in Cambridge, Chicago and New York. National student religious groups endorsed the program in letters to their campus affiliates and in other publications.

On the basis of this program and other research by the staff, USNSA will publish a booklet on academic freedom and its relation to the student early in 1957.

national brotherhood week

Brotherhood Week is sponsored nationally by the National Conference of Christians and Jews. In cooperation with this group, USNSA encouraged campus programs from February 19-25. The Human Relations Subcommission (at Allegheny College, Pa.) worked on preparing a special kit to assist member schools in planning meaningful programs.

fourth international student relations seminar

Designed to provide a nucleus of informed leaders in the college community who will be prepared to assist on all levels of USNSA international programming, from campus projects to representing American students overseas, the annual International Student Relations Seminar was held this summer in Cambridge, Mass., from July 1 to August 17, when it joined the Ninth National Student Congress in Chicago.

Eighteen students from USNSA member schools all over the country participated in the program. Using the facilities and research material of the International Commission offices of USNSA and of Harvard University, the Seminar participants studied the basic history and problems of international student relations, developments in the student movement around the world, the role of USNSA in this movement, and the relation of all this to the American student and his campus.

The Seminar was directed by Peter T. Jones, a Harvard Law School Student and a participant in the 1954 Seminar. Guest speakers at the two months' course included: William Y. Elliott, Professor of Political Science, Harvard University; Benjamin Cohen, Under-secretary of the United Nations; John Carter Vincent, former U. S. diplomat, and a number of student leaders from this country and aboard.

A selections committee, made up of Kenneth Holland, President of the Institute of International Education, Stamos Zades, Director of Student Activities at the City College of New York, and Stan Glass, President of USNSA, chose the following participants on the basis of demonstrated leadership ability, background in international affairs and scholastic achievement:

Mary Alice Bauer, Radcliffe College
Robert Biggs, Eastern Washington College
Patricia Brown, Mount St. Mary's College
John J. Buckley, School of Foreign Service, Georgetown University
Rosaly DeMaios, City College of New York
Irv Drasnin, University of California at Los Angeles
John A. Hill, University of Minnesota
Daniel Idzik, State University of New York, College for Teachers, Buffalo
P. Charles Jones, University of Wisconsin
Henry Kirschner, University of Texas
Richard Levin, University of California at Los Angeles
Patricia McEvoy, College of New Rochelle
Marianne Meylan, University of California, Berkeley
Manning Muntzing, University of North Carolina
James F. Pomroy, Allegheny College
Richard Quanrud, University of Minnesota
Robert G. Wilson, Harvard University
Anne Woodard, University of Michigan regional seminars

Shorter seminars, covering the same areas as the summer-long national seminar above, were organized in thirteen of the nineteen USNSA regions. Assisted by a special grant, regional officers, in cooperation with the International Commission of USNSA, were able to provide partial travel "scholarships" and living costs for twenty to thirty delegates from member schools in each region to attend these seminars. The staff at each seminar, which usually took place on weekends, was made up of former and present USNSA leaders who had had considerable experience in the international student movement.

foreign student leadership project

In October 1955, USNSA received a grant of $128,000 from the Ford Foundation for a Foreign Student Leadership Project. This is a three-year program which will bring student leaders to this country from Asia, Africa, the Middle East and Latin America for one year's study of democratic institutions as they exist on the American campus.

The project is especially designed to interest students who have or are expected to have positions of responsibility in their local student community and who will most probably go on to assume leadership in their countries.

Nine USNSA member schools were selected to participate in the project. These particular schools were chosen because of their established foreign student programs and the effectiveness of their student governments, both of which had to be developed to the point where the overseas student would receive the most useful and dynamic experiences.

Chosen for the first year of the program were:

Allegheny College ..... ANIS IBRAHIM, Indonesia
Dartmouth College ..... HAMED AMMAR, Tunisia
Macalester College ..... JUAN AGUSTIN PALAZUELOS, Chile
Rutgers University ..... JOSEPH B. K. ULAYENEZA, Uganda
University of Chicago ..... SABURO SUZUKI, Japan
University of Idaho .... ABDULLAH ABU MAPPUDJI, Indonesia
University of Michigan ..... TSUTOMU KANO, Japan
University of Minnesota ..... WISAKSONO NOERADI, Indonesia
University of Minnesota ..... KOKI OTSUKA, Japan
University of Oklahoma ..... SALAHELDIN AL MURAD, Iraq

The first students arrived in August, 1955 and attended the Ninth National Student Congress before undertaking their academic programs.

James T. Harris, former President of USNSA (1948-1949) and subsequently a Ford Scholar in Egypt, is director of the project. He is assisted by an advisory board of prominent educators.

national expressions of student opinion

In accordance with a resolution of the Eighth National Student Congress, the International Affairs Vice President prepared a detailed statement of USNSA's stand on various aspects of the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act as it affects students and educators. After making arrangements with the staff of the Immigration and Naturalization Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee, the Association was not able to testify because of changes in the Subcommittee due to the death of the chairman. Through the USNSA NEWS, however, the Association did call to students' attention the recommendations of President Eisenhower in a special message to Congress in February which strongly urged changes in the Act which coincided with those recommended by the Eighth National Student Congress.

In protest against cuts in the budget for the U. S. Government International Education Exchange Program (otherwise known as the Fulbright Program), USNSA wrote to members of the Senate Committee on Appropriations. USNSA advocated increased support of this program. Later, the Senate voted to restore the cuts in the $20 million program.

international student cooperation

In the spirit of a resolution passed by the Eighth National Student Congress that "the unity of the world student movement should be achieved through the International Student Conference (ISC)," USNSA continued to support the programs of this Conference as they were administered by the Coordinating Secretariat of National Unions of Students (COSEC). The ISC-sponsored meetings and seminars which USNSA representatives attended are listed on page 5.

Five American students were appointed by the National Executive Committee in August, 1956 as the USNSA delegation to the Sixth International Student Conference which took place in Ceylon in September. The members of the delegation were: Stan Glass, Chairman, retiring President of USNSA; Clive Gray, retiring International Affairs Vice President; Bruce Larkin, newly-elected International Affairs Vice President; James Edwards, former President of USNSA (1954-1955); and Luigi Einaudi, Harvard senior and former member of the National Executive Committee.

Visiting student centers in Asia Harry H. Lunn (above center, below in dark coat) carried out a goodwill mission designed to increase practical international student cooperation international student delegations

Asia

An American student, Harry H. Lunn, Jr., former President of USNSA (1954-1955), was elected to a five-man international team which visited university and student centers in Southeast Asia from November 1955 through March 1956 under the sponsorship of the International Student Conference and at the invitation of the national unions of students in Asia. Also on the team were representatives of Italy, South Africa, Guatemala and the Gold Coast. They visited every major student center in Burma, Malaya, Indonesia, Hong Kong, the Philippines, Cambodia, Vietnam, East Pakistan, Thailand, and Ceylon. Travelling some 45,00 miles, the team met with thousands of students, educators, and public officials. The delegation's task was to undertake a goodwill tour on behalf of the more than fifty national unions participating in the International Student Conference and to collect information about problems facing student organizations and education in this ten-nation area.

A comprehensive report of this mission was published by the Coordinating Secretariat under the title "Independence and the Student."

Latin America

A delegation of five students representing USNSA went to Latin America in the Summer of 1956 on a goodwill mission. They visited Puerto Rico, Panama, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, Paraguay, Uruguay, Argentina, Chile, Brazil, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala, Mexico, and Cuba.

The team included: Luigi Einaudi, Harvard senior, participant in International Student Relations Seminar (1955), chairman of the New England Region of USNSA (1955-1956); Gloria Kingsley, City College of New York senior, student body president (1955-1956), chairman Metropolitan New York Region of USNSA (1955-1956); Richard Elden, Northwestern graduate, June 1956, member of editorial board of Northwestern Daily, participant in U. S. college editors' tour of Russia in 1954; Ralph Della Cava, Fordham graduate, June 1956, vice-president Fordham student government, participant in International Student Relations Seminar (1954), and Marian McReynolds, Rosary College sophomore, member of student senate, participant in Illinois Region International Student Relations Seminar, Spring 1956.

A complete report of the delegation's work will be distributed to USNSA member schools in the near future.

Out of a tour arranged for ninety American students by USNSA in the summer of 1948 there developed the low-cost travel program of the Association which made it possible for some 460 students to spend two to three months in Europe during the past Summer.

The program is administered by Educational Travel, Inc., a separately incorporated department of USNSA which is managed by a small professional staff. Officers of USNSA serve as the Board of Directors.

USNSA offered a variety of itineraries in 1956, which provided all the basic costs and accommodations (including trans-Atlantic passage) for prices ranging from $650 to $1025. These tours were arranged in cooperation with the national unions of students in Europe. Members of the unions served as hosts for the USNSA groups in each country.

For the first time, an automobile tour was organized. A Volkswagen was assigned to groups of four travellers who then drove through Europe on a planned route, rendezvousing with the other cars each evening at pre-arranged places. This tour, which was made available to some 35 students combined a flexible schedule with the savings of group travel.

One of the most complete (seven countries) and least expensive ($720) tours ever offered to Europe was the Hobo Tour. Organized for the first time this past season, this economy tour made it possible for 172 students to see the best of Europe at a minimum cost.

USNSA participated in the International Student Travel Conference in Oslo in October, 1955. This was one of a series of meetings organized by the Coordinating Secretariat (COSEC) to promote practical international student cooperation.

student activities research study

In the summer of 1954, USNSA received a grant of $29,000 from the Ford Foundation for a research study into the degree of student participation in college planning. This project, called the Student Activities Research Study (SARS), was conducted by a staff of professional sociologists with the assistance of an advisory board of prominent educators. In November 1955, the results of this year-long study were published by USNSA in the report "Student Government, Student Leaders and the American College." Based on findings from 73% of all the accredited senior colleges in the country, this report was the subject of a two-day evaluation by leading educators who met in Philadelphia on November 25 and 26, at the invitation of the national staff of USNSA.

From the research report:

areas of student concern and responsibility

Out of a list of 30 topics relating to students and the affairs of their college, the following are the top ten: at left, according to elected student leaders, basing their evaluations on actual time spent discussing these topics by student government, student committees and similar groups; at right, the deans' lists, based on what they thought "students were capable of dealing with":

1. social policies (i.e. dances, Campus Queens, big weekends)
2. charity drives
3. student discipline
4. training college leaders
5. size and use of activities fees
6. honor program
7. better use of existing campus facilities
8. traffic program
9. library policies
10. evaluation of teaching

1. promoting student participation in extracurricular activities
2. planning charity campaigns
3. problems of student apathy
4. conducting freshman orientation
5. selecting speakers for campus programs
6. participating in course and teacher evaluation
7. governing rushing and hazing policies
8. leadership training
9. supervising coordination of religious activities
10. handling safety programs

On the whole, this much can be said about apathy. Both Deans and student body presidents see it as their major problem. But in most colleges the proportion of the student body that voted in the last all-campus election was quite high (around 69% in most cases). Apathy is apparent in regard to public affairs (the student's relation as an informed citizen to the world outside) and to the curriculum (his relation to course content, level of teaching and the general quality of education).

student-faculty-administration relations

"The student appears to be struggling with the administration, not the faculty, for while we find suspicion directed toward the former, we find general respect and appreciation directed toward the latter. . . . Most student complaints referred to faculty aloofness and the lack of close personal contact with the faculty. . . . Every student responding considered it desirable to have a close extra-classroom, extra-office relation to faculty members; no student expressed the desire to see much of administrative officials outside of their offices." BUT . . . "Faculty members tend to become pained, or even a bit frightened, when they find out what students consider to be the ideal student-faculty relationship. Those who have commented on the students' use of phrases like 'partners in education' are unanimous in rejecting it as unrealistic and impossible."

characteristics of the student leader

From a survey of student body presidents, student newspaper editors, inter-fraternity council presidents and presidents of senior men's honorary societies:

The greatest number are seniors (89%), are 20 or 21 years old, white (95%), Protestant (74%), and single (89%). 88% had not yet seen military service.

More support themselves primarily by their summer or school-time earnings (40%) than by family aid (33%), the remainder relying primarily on such things as the GI bill, scholarships and loans. The largest number live in fraternity houses (36%). . . . Most are affiliated with a fraternity (83%).

The student leader's average grade is the respectable "B" (64%). Their most popular majors (between 13% and 18% majoring in each field cited) are in English, the social sciences, education, business and pre-professional training. Most plan to go on to graduate or professional school.

The greatest number (27%) would like to have their own professional office if they could. Many would like to work in business or industry (24%) and others in a college (13%), the remainder in a variety of positions.

Quotes from the SARS Evaluation Conference

ALGO HENDERSON, Professor of Higher Education, University of Michigan

"Student government is one of the dimensions of college life in America which differs from that of colleges and universities in other countries. It is a strong contribution to the overall growth and development of young people in this country. Because student government exists by permission of the trustees and therefore may be limited in its effects, thoughtful attention must be given by the faculty to assist student government to realize a worthy role in higher education.

"The study is an excellent report, clearly written, objectively stated. If I find any weakness to the study it is that it does not make sufficiently clear any fundamental educational theory and philosophy of student government. All of college is an educational laboratory, and the program of student government is as much a part of the educational program as the curriculum.

"Underlying student government are certain pervasive values, the type of values the student achieves as his basic philosophic attitude in undertaking responsible leadership. There is a need to mobilize all college experience in order to achieve these value objectives.

"That student government can be a concept related to the heart of education: this seems to be the implicit basic philosophy of the report. Without such a philosophy, student government becomes activity for activity's sake."

K. WALLACE LONGSHORE, National Affairs Vice President of USNSA during the preparation of the research report (1954-1955)

"Student governments will not get greater freedom until they go out and find ways of capably accepting it. It appears that faculty, administration and students are more interested in the process than in where they are going and what they are doing.

"The most important finding of this report is that student government today is pursuing a program that has little educational value. This is because many of the activities of student government are superficial. Student government will never play its part in the educational community until it gives the student a philosophy to explain and vitalize all its activities.

"If you deal with superficial things, then it is easy to behave in an irresponsible manner; but if you are serving the basic reason for being on campus, it is not. And this basic reason revolves around the cultivation of the mind. Every student must be concerned with this. Student government should be organized to serve that goal."

EDWARD K. GRAHAM, former Chancellor, Women's College, University of North Carolina

"The study cites a problem; and it raises questions. The student is a constituent part of the college community, and that community has to bring together all of its resources. The major resources which the college has not yet used is the student body.

"The study tells what has been done and what is presently being done in the field of student government. But it is more important for the questions which it raises than for the facts which it brings out. The question is: where do we go from here?

"The trouble (with student government) is that people are bored to death with it. The cure for boredom is the establishment of goals. Student government is one of the great hopes that has risen in the past ten years."

"Good student government may vary in form, but everywhere its establishment depends on the partisans, those who grasp the vision of student government as it may and ought to be. Now is the time for decisions on the part of USNSA. The campuses expect something right now; they have high hopes. This report must be brought to the attention of every student government group. If student governments do not re-evaluate themselves from scratch, then the study has defeated its own end. It must stimulate to new awareness."

Educators and students at the SARS Evaluation Conference

Over 1,000 students, educators and overseas guests met at the University of Chicago for ten days in late August for the Ninth National Student Congress. Approximately half of these were delegates from member schools, elected by their student bodies to represent their point of view at this meeting which reviews the activities of the Association for the preceding year, and establishes the policies and programs for the next year.

The theme for this Congress was "Student Leadership in American Education." The import of this concept on all phases of student life was considered by the delegates in workshops, commission meetings and plenary sessions. On the following pages are extracts from the major proceedings of the ten-day meeting, including the principal addresses and the most significant resolutions.

section II

9th national student congress

"Greetings to the thousand young delegates meeting in the Ninth National Student Congress and welcome to their guests from the rest of the free world.

Through your leadership in the field of student government and through campus opinion you have a great opportunity to make your significant contribution to higher education. I know your deliberations during the Congress will develop new approaches to meeting today's problems and you will not lack vigor in suggesting them when you return home. As you exchange ideas with your guests from other national student unions, you will discover new ways of bringing into our social and cultural life the 35,000 students from other nations overseas currently studying in American colleges. This will promote international understanding and bring us closer to our goal of a dynamic peace.

Best wishes for a successful Congress."

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER

from the keynote address the student in america

by HAROLD TAYLOR

President of Sarah Lawrence College

I have known this organization at first hand since its founding, since the first hardy little band of veterans back from the war wanted to put the point of view of the American student into some kind of organized form, to let America know that students had a point of view, that they were a large group of people with a special stake in their country's future and with ideals as to how American society should be arranged in the post-war world. They were young and idealistic, two things which go so well together. They were intelligent in their wish to make a national organization which could not only speak for the American student, but could allow American students on hundreds of different campuses to speak to each other, to let each other know that they existed, and that they held beliefs and opinions about education, about the world, about America.

Those early organizers had the wisdom to realize that if their Association was to be a real organization for students, it had to be one run by students, making student mistakes and correcting them by student experience. They wanted to avoid the paternalism of the student considered as the representative of college presidents and other assorted adults, or of the student youth movements where the movement was moved by people who were neither young nor students. They chose their advisers among people whom they knew would only give advice when asked and would be too busy to have the time to interfere even if they wanted to . . .

I have seen your leaders in more recent years sort out the tangled political strands of student movements, and act in a sensible, dignified and democratic way to prevent the international student movement from falling into the hands of the communists. The story of the way NSA student leaders handled the International Union of Students at a time when that Union had international political power and financial backing is a model for enlightened democratic action . . .

I think of you today as representatives of the student in America, as those who provide an outline of the student's place, the dimension of his responsibility . . .

But what does it mean to be a student? Who is he responsible to, and for what?

To be a student is an honorable and highly respected position to occupy. In Burma, in Indonesia, in Ceylon, in Africa, to be a student is to accept the responsibility for becoming a leader of your country, of being educated to bring your gifts to the country's service at a time when education has not been able to catch up with the incredible demands for educated men and women who can build new countries.

But is the student in America in a very different situation? Is there not a shortage of educated and informed leadership in our country? . . .

A student is a person who is learning to fulfill his powers and to find ways of using them in the service of mankind. The student at his best has a purity of motive which is the mark of his true function. He wants to know the truth, to know what is good, not merely for his own or for other peoples' advantage, but in order to achieve his maturity as a student. He is granted the priceless advantage of looking openly at the world to discover its secrets. He is given the rare privilege of withholding his assent to the claims the world makes for its own particular brand of truth, and he can decide what he thinks on the basis of the evidence, not on the basis of pressure, because this is in fact what it means to be a student, and what the world asks the student to be. For a little time before he brings a life which will gradually involve him in more and more commitment to tasks and duties which are not central to the concern with truth and ideals, the student lives in a world of discovery and of possibility where nothing is yet completely settled, where everything, including the achievement of greatness, is still actively possible . . .

I asked, a while ago, who is the student responsible to, and what is he responsible for? I am about ready to try some answers.

The student is responsible for his own education. Unless he takes that responsibility, he will not become educated. A college can provide the buildings, the teachers, the books and the equipment, but these are the environment of higher learning, not the learning itself. The student must bring to his teachers an interest in learning, not the learning itself. The student must bring to his teachers a respect for what the teacher can give him, a readiness to learn and a will to become educated. Without that, the teacher does all the work and the student learns merely to accommodate himself to the system by whatever means he can devise.

The student is also responsible for other students and for the quality of the life they lead together. The student is in fact a young adult, should be treated like one, and if so treated, will usually behave like one. If he is given the responsibility for planning and organizing the life of the campus, if he is made responsible to the University for the government of student affairs and for the development of educational and social policy, he responds. Everyone here in this room knows the amount of responsibility students are capable of taking in university administration and the results that have been achieved by student groups in action. College students are in fact adults, many of them are married, some have children, some have held or are holding jobs, some have written stories, poems, novels, newspaper articles, others have travelled throughout the world. They belong to an international community of youthful adults, a community whose common characteristic is the fact that all its members are involved in the process of learning to find their place in the world in which they live . . .

The student is of course responsible to his University. But beyond his University, he is also responsible for carrying out his obligations to the world of scholarship and humane learning. Therefore he is responsible for educational planning. I believe that students should have a central role in the development of educational policy. They are the ones who know at first hand the qualities and values in the education they are receiving, and they have at their disposal a gold-mine of information to be used for the improvement of American higher education. But too often in the structure of the University community, there is no place where their informed judgments about educational questions can be put to work in a creative way. For the most part they are excluded from curriculum planning, and excluded from the formation of social and educational policy, when we have in our hands the evidence of the National Student Association, among other organizations, to show what can be and has been accomplished by the work of students on educational problems. This evidence runs all the way from the organization of international projects in student leadership, to the development of new forms of student and community government, to the formation of policy on matters affecting academic freedom and the defense of civil rights and civil liberties . . .

There are at present 2½ million students in American colleges and universities. Within five to ten years there will be 4½ to 5 million there. Everywhere in America where education is discussed, two problems constantly harass and disturb the educators and the public:

Where will the money come from to support double the present number of students and to supply the buildings, the salaries and the equipment to educate them?

Secondly, where will we find the teachers?

These two problems are so immense and so crucial for the future of American society that they demand the concentrated attention of the United States Government, the state legislatures, business and industry, the professions, the educators, the students and the country at large.

What can be done?

First we need a national scholarship program even more bold and imaginative than the G.I. bill which brought 8 million American men to college at the cost of 14½ billion dollars. The new programs of scholarship aid developed by the corporations will help, but they can only scratch the surface of the basic financial problem. Certainly the universities themselves cannot finance additional scholarship programs of their own. They can, however, administer a national scholarship program in such a way that the independence of higher education from Federal control could be as well preserved as it was under the G.I. bill.

We need the help of foundations, corporations, and individual donors all over the country for libraries, classrooms, laboratories, dormitories. We need state and government loans to increase the available facilities and to found new institutions of all kinds. We need to stay with the financial problems and work at them day by day through every agency of the country until they are solved. If one business corporation alone can spend a billion dollars for its own five-year expansion program, the complete combination of government, business, labor and education should be able to spend enough to handle a problem of infinitely more serious proportion.

But if we have the money, where do we find the teachers? I suggest that as one part of the answer we look to the present student body for help.

Suppose for example we included as part of a Federal scholarship program the offer of a complete subsidy for the top three percent of all graduating seniors in the year 1956 to cover all their expenses for graduate study in becoming college teachers. Suppose in addition we began to include on university campuses the appointment of particularly promising juniors and seniors to lead discussion groups of freshmen and sophomores, to serve as assistant teachers who had a regular part in the educational program, and suppose we give these new young faculty assistants some direct responsibility for teaching. This would mean a shift in educational planning away from the idea of teachers providing information to passive listeners and towards the active participation by student bodies as a whole in the teaching and learning process. I would predict that out of this combination of new recruits from the American student body and new subsidy for promising young teachers to continue their education would come a wealth of new talent for the teaching profession of the future. Even without the national subsidy, I believe that on every college campus where some form of undergraduate apprentice teaching program was installed, a new and vigorous growth of interest in teaching and learning would spring up with significant effects on the quality of the educational program.

"...for in the quality of our brotherhood and in the scope and to give and to learn from giving

by ALLARD LOWENSTEIN

President of USNSA, 1950-1951

We are the privileged and antiseptic generation. We move in the backwater of great events, well-clothed, well-housed and well-fed. Struggle is not our hallmark and greatness is not our necessity. We are become lazy on the victorious sacrifices of our older brothers and on the non-fulfillment of gloomy prophecies.

Somewhere where we are not, destinies are upended and centuries disturbed, but in our pleasant world opportunity knocks again and again; and it is the merest shadow that somehow the great things are no longer ours to do about. When immensity spawns futility the petty and the fleeting become the ultimate, and the rest recedes into mystery and irrelevancy. We are a people whose national energies and imagination and courage flourish in crisis, and we rejoice now that crises are past and life demands less national virtue than it used to.

Our course some still forebode about disaster, but for us vacations are longer, diseases fewer and suburbs multiply. And anyway, to warn of many dragons and have few St. Georges available with the warnings is to speak negatively at a time when everyone knows the need for positive thinking. So although a few warners and mourners still prattle about Asians or atoms from their convertibles their timing is out of joint; and most of them come to relax too, because the prettier wives, who, with less effort, produce healthier children and more nutritious meals, marry unaware of or undaunted by epic premonitions. If destiny wishes to rendezvous with this generation, she will first have to find us.

But how soon we may know the folly of playing hide and seek with the fates. How short-lived this luxury of indolent unconcern may be; and how grim its cost, if one generation's evasions become its children's doom. For moderation warped into negation today is patience exhausted into violence tomorrow; opportunity frittered into languor in youth is usefulness mired into mediocrity later on; courage watered into convenience in school is conscience undecipherable under expediency afterward; prosperity lapsed into arrogance abroad is admiration glided into envy and then embittered into resentment everywhere. And thought smothered by comfort collectively is opportunity frittered, courage watered, moderation warped, and souls unstirred; thus greatness flabs into fatness and vision fades into hindsight.

Even if God spares civilization after such undoing, He does not restore to individuals the years when challenge and nobility grizzled into stupor and waddled toward waste. The undemanding bravery of war generations and the stoic unrest of depression generations came of people even as ourselves. But new occasions teach new virtues; and now less strikingly, more patiently, and more urgently, we shall have to energize and discipline ourselves that these times of national calm become funds of growing individual strength, and the quietudes of transient respites are not as invitations to final calamity. It is time long since that helpfulness galvanized and kindness liberated became symbols of our unparalleled and unearned great national luck; that energies turned contagiously to the intangibles of building worth in the vast, if illusory, security so gratuitously provided by our abundance; that generous impulses and high instinct were nourished by a society arrived at unimaginable technological achievement.

Wise and good men have long thought that if humanity ever came to be as well off as humanity has come to be in our here and now, the human grandness which privation can prevent would assert itself triumphant as the golden rule in d depth of our willingness g lies the key to the nature of the future..."

the golden age. The dreams and hopes which sustained our harried ancestors through centuries of misery, now at last at hand, in anguish ask honor to the great ideas revealed or evolved during the upward struggle of man from the trees and caves.

The irony of God's wisdom has made present imperatives of ancient ethics. For in the quality of our brotherhood and in the scope and depth of our willingness to give and to learn from giving lies the key to the nature of the future. We do not so much as deserve to survive if indifference palsies grandness into pettiness and national success, measured materially, blinds us to troublous fact outside our borders and inures us to bypassed humanity outside private little groups.

In the strange new war for men's allegiances, limited violence threatens an aggressor with wider damage elsewhere, however his armies fare; and unleashed violence threatens aggressor and victim alike with obliteration. So new weapons take priority; and the Lord in His goodness has given us the material to win, if we but grasp the stakes and rouse the will. In our wealth we have the wherewithal to be more nearly generous; in our content we have the incentive to awake in ourselves our finest; in our democratic concept we have the vehicle best suited to carry men's chiefest hopes. Must we grinning lose first the world and then the future before we finally understand that all the vast material gifts cannot by themselves preserve themselves or their masters?

Survival of man may ever be in balance, and survival of freedom will long be in doubt; but we cannot but have the faith of men who know the love of the Lord for His creatures that if we seek to master privation and inequity in our midst and in our time, He will help us to see realized the gentler, crisper world men could be heir to.

student body presidents' conference august 17-21

The sixth annual Student Body Presidents' Conference offered 208 serious student leaders the opportunity to gain skills in and understanding of the complex responsibilities which they would face on returning to their campuses this fall.

Representing colleges and universities in 38 states, they met in workshops (according to the size of their schools) and exchanged ideas with fellow student body presidents. A number of educators and outstanding student leaders served as discussion chairmen.

Some of the topics covered included:

what "rights" do students have; do faculty and administration have?

how to set up constitutions, committees, meetings, elections, leadership training projects and other practical programs.

what is the goal of student government? what do students expect of their elected representatives?

"Student Judiciaries and the Problems of College Discipline" was discussed by Dean Leston L. Love of the University of Mississippi. K. Wallace Longshore, former officer of USNSA, delivered the keynote address on the findings of the recently published study Student Government, Student Leaders and the workshop for deans and faculty advisors august 21-23

Forty-one deans and faculty members participated in a three-day workshop during the opening sessions of the Congress. This program, which was planned with the assistance of the Association's adult advisors, was probably the first national meeting of educators to be arranged and staffed by students.

Believing that the solution of the critical problems facing American education depends on confidence and cooperation on the part of all members of the college community, USNSA organized the Workshop in order to bring students and educators together to share experiences and to gain new insights into this complex area.

Participants discussed "Where is the co-curriculum going in American education," took part in analyses of case studies in student-faculty-administration relations, and sat in as observers at Congress sessions.

The sessions were chaired by K. Wallace Longshore, former officer of USNSA, and Dean Christine Conaway of Ohio State University. Students from a number of member schools presented the case studies at the panel on student-faculty-administration relations.

conference on foreign student affairs august 17-21

The second annual Conference on Foreign Student Affairs (COFSA) brought together some forty-two overseas students and thirty-four American students to discuss the role of the foreign student on the American campus.

Meeting at Chicago's International House, the three-day meeting was marked by frank and thorough analysis of the contribution the student from abroad can and wants to make to the development of higher education in this country, along with broadening his own educational experience.

Several official observers from international organizations, such as the Asia Foundation, Institute of International Education and the American Friends Service Committee, served as resource persons and speakers.

Speakers included Moses Hirschritt of the Department of State, Clarence Pickett of the American Friends Service Committee, and foreign student advisers from Florida, Indiana and a number of other leading universities.

American College, the report of the research study financed by the Ford Foundation and conducted by USNSA.

A panel of student body presidents opened a theme-setting discussion of "New Dimensions of Student Government" with a presentation of successful programs in the areas of foreign student programming, curriculum evaluation, student government retreats, programming for the student legislature, and action on federal and state legislation affecting students.

The conferees used the practical case study approach to reach the more significant aspects of their role as student leaders and the future of student self-government in democratic society.

Both member and non-member schools were represented by deans and faculty advisors.

Among the member colleges and universities represented were Stephens, Spring Hill, Simmons, Fenn, Mundelein, American International, Douglass, Buffalo State Teachers', Allegheny, Barry, Columbia, Baylor, Manhattanville, Hollins, and the Universities of Chicago, Notre Dame, Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio State, and Detroit.

At the request of the educators attending this Workshop, which was frankly experimental, USNSA will sponsor a similar meeting at the Tenth National Student Congress.

Overseas students participating represented India, England, Thailand, Gold Coast, Israel, Pakistan, Denmark, Iran, Chile, Germany, Greece, Jordan and some half dozen other countries.

Organized at the request of foreign students who attended the first such meeting organized by USNSA in 1955. COFSA is planned and directed by a committee of overseas students working in cooperation with the Campus International Administration of USNSA. The third meeting of COFSA will be held at the University of Michigan in August 1957.

excerpts from major resolutions (as edited and abridged from the official texts) basic policy declaration defining student government

Student governments are an integral part of the academic community since they represent the best organizational structure to accomplish the involvement of all students. Student governments are, therefore, concerned with every aspect of the well-being and development of the student, for instance, the university's intellectual independence, development of democratic mores, and growth of the national and international student community.

Mutual advice and consultation among faculty, administration, and student government will enable institutions of higher education to make a more significant contribution to the well-being of mankind.

implementation of basic policy declaration defining student government

Student Government, Student Leaders, and the American College is sufficiently accurate as an index to trends among student governments in the United States to be used by student leaders as a source for study. This position is taken even though we recognize that the report represents a limited sampling from the varied complex which is the American college scene. Moreover, we emphasize that the normative situations described in this report are not the optimum ones. Nevertheless, the report has value in that it serves to acquaint the student leader with the universality of problems facing student government today.

Drafts of resolutions are presented and debated in Commission sessions before reaching the Plenary floor

We mandate the USNSA Vice President for Student Government to recommend that Student Government, Student Leaders, and the American College be used as a starting point for broader programs of self evaluation in the light of the above.

We further mandate the Student Government Vice President to formulate a set of materials which may be used in campus conferences among students, faculty, and administrators. Such conferences should attempt to evaluate the role of their respective student governments in the light of the goals of higher education and in the light of the interdependence of the three elements in the educational community.

effect of increasing enrollments on academic policies

In the years to come, enrollments in American institutions of higher education will rise to a degree unequalled in our history. This fact provides American education with an unprecedented opportunity to reach and to influence an increasingly large portion of the American population and to raise American intellectual and cultural development beyond its present high level. At the same time, higher education is faced with many serious problems which will be intensified by the increasing pressure of rising enrollments. USNSA in expressing its concern for the problems confronting our colleges and universities asserts the following:

(1) Regardless of the number of individuals seeking education, USNSA believes that education at all levels should be available to all according to their ability to gain significantly from the educational experience.

(2) USNSA encourages the introduction or continued use of measures of students' proficiency in basic verbal skills as one criterion of students' ability to profit from his educational experience. If the educational institutions are unable to expand rapidly enough to keep pace with the rising number of applicants, USNSA would advocate that institutions of higher learning temporarily adopt a more academical admissions policy rather than either limiting enrollment through increased cost to the student or attemping to educate students through the use of inefficient facilities.

(3) Under the pressures of increased enrollment it will be necessary that every college student be maximally prepared for his college experience. USNSA, therefore, encourages the adoption of practices in institutions of secondary education which would develop high school graduates' ability to best profit from their college experience. First, USNSA advocates an increased flexibility in the practices affecting students' transition from high school to colleges; that is, exceptionally gifted high school students should be encouraged to develop their abilities on the level of college work, and they should apply their ability to proficiency examinations which would enable them to carry advanced work in college. Second, USNSA recognizes that the educational abilities and interests of individuals differ and therefore encourages increased emphasis on the role of the vocational high school and a re-examination of the assumptions used in the different states with regard to compulsory education at the high school level.

(4) Increasing enrollments will intensify the need for financial aid to students. USNSA urges support of any program of Federal, state or corporate aid to students which would preserve the integrity of the institutions and provide opportunity to qualified students to attend institutions commensurate with their ability. USNSA recognizes the vital contribution of state and city-owned institutions of higher education and also urges continued expansion in this area.

(5) It is evident that under present conditions the supply of college teachers will not meet the demand for their services. First, to help meet this demand, USNSA urges that every possible step be taken to increase the salaries of teachers to a level commensurate with their preparation for the positions and their importance to our society. Second, USNSA advocates the introduction of programs which will increase the number of both undergraduate and graduate students in the teaching role, particularly as leaders of discussion groups. Such programs would be aimed toward decreasing the work load of our teachers and promoting interest of undergraduate students in the teaching profession through contact involved in the teaching experiences. USNSA believes that television and other mechanical devices for teaching should be used only as a supplement to, not as a substitute for personal contact with an instructor. USNSA recognizes, however, that it may be necessary to use these techniques to instruct special groups when the alternative to this application is no instruction at all.

(6) The challenge of rising enrollments presents the opportunity to examine critically many long-accepted aspects of our educational system. For example, USNSA encourages an increased flexibility in the area of educational scheduling, taking into account the special goals and abilities of the individual. USNSA advocates that the system of awarding credit for hours spent in class be re-evaluated. USNSA believes that the length of class periods should not be fixed inflexibly but, rather, determined by the nature of the subject matter of the course. Undergraduate students should be able to take courses for which they have sufficient background. Finally, USNSA advocates the introduction of programs by which the undergraduate students may take courses which are applicable to graduate degrees.

(7) USNSA believes that each of the several kinds of institutions existing in our educational system contributes significantly to our educational process. In the light of increased enrollment, USNSA asserts the following:

a. USNSA encourages the expansion of programs of junior colleges, providing that these colleges are able to carry out a dual role. First, they should provide for the students who desire only two years of college education. Second, they must adequately prepare other students for entrance to four-year colleges after they complete the junior college program.

b. USNSA encourages further experimentation with general college programs having in mind that these should not conflict with the student's opportunity to pursue a specialized education.

c. Recognizing the differences in the educational needs and interests of various students, USNSA advocates increased emphasis on the role of vocational training beyond the high school.

d. USNSA believes in the broadening of the role of the state teachers' college to include greater emphasis upon the liberal arts. Therefore, these colleges will not only contribute by educating large numbers of liberal art students, but also by providing our primary and secondary schools with teachers who have had the advantage of a liberal arts background.

(8) USNSA urges that all possible efforts be made to raise the academic standards in institutions which are not now eligible for accreditation so that these institutions can carry their share of the enrollment load.

USNSA recognizes that an educational community unifies those who teach, learn, and administer in the common purpose of improving reciprocal educational experience, and thus their aims are best served when this unity is realized and expressed in their mutual relationships and respective activities.

The functioning of the educational community requires an awareness of mutual responsibility, understanding, trust, and respect in order that all its members actively contribute to the development of policies and programs; this purpose can best be achieved only through continuous cooperation within the educational community.

USNSA believes that such cooperation should include joint participation of students, faculty members, and administrations in the planning and execution of academic, administrative, and co-curricular policy. The degree and form of such participation will necessarily vary from policy area to policy area and from campus to campus depending upon the interests and abilities of participating groups, but the basic principle should remain that of cooperative planning and implementation.

Recognizing that the primary responsibility of the student is to attain the highest possible intellectual achievement, USNSA believes the following considerations to form a basis for the development of constructive relationships on individual campuses:

(1) ACADEMIC: Student body representatives should have effective and active participation in the cooperative planning of policy. Committees composed of both students and faculty members provide a desirable means of interaction between these groups. Course and program evaluation with subsequent recommendations to administration and faculty are two typical subjects with which such committees should deal.

(2) ADMINISTRATIVE: Student participation in the formulation of the administrative policies and decisions is recommended. Subjects in this area include criteria for admissions, discriminatory practices, and financial policies affecting the student. Student leaders should both present student views and suggestions to the administration and explain administrative actions to the student body.

(3) CO-CURRICULAR: In this area, students should play a major role in initiating policies compatible with the purpose of the educational community. Programs which will supplement the efforts made in the academic field to contribute to fulfillment of the goals of higher education should be emphasized.

Fundamental to cooperation in these areas is a mutual understanding of viewpoints, actions, and responsibilities on the part of students, faculty members and administrators. The achievement of such understanding requires a constant interchange of ideas on all levels of contact between members of the three groups.

Student participation in the campus community can be effective only if it is active and mature. When these responsibilities are met, the expression of student opinions should be regarded as serious and sincere efforts to cooperate with the faculty and administration in the pursuit of their common goals.

Literally hundreds of resolutions, amendments and minority reports are considered and voted upon by the delegates basic policy declaration on military manpower

In the present state of world tensions, the United States must maintain strong armed forces. Insofar as manpower for military purposes is drawn from his age group, the student is vitally concerned with military manpower policies; further, military planning is in a state of flux which makes continuing policies affecting conscription impossible.

USNSA recognizes that the national security of the United States should be of great concern to every citizen, and that in times of national emergency each citizen has an obligation to serve in the defense of his country in the most effective manner he can. A program of military training must be geared to immediate international tensions and subject to regular review for possible revision or termination. Compulsory reserve programs integrated with selective service and compulsory military training must be viewed as temporary measures and undesirable as permanent institutions within our country.

A manpower policy consistent with our democratic tradition, the requirements of national defense, and the variety of needs related to the development of our society must contain the following principles:

(1) A military manpower program should allow qualified students to choose the time for the fulfillment of their military obligations which will be most compatible with their vocational needs. Graduate and undergraduate students in all fields should be deferred from active military service until the completion of their schooling.

(2) A military manpower program allowing alternative ways of serving the country must be so designed that each alternative insures that no qualified person may avoid his service obligation or bear less than his full share of the national defense.

(3) A military manpower program should provide that those students to be employed in areas designated by the government as critical to the national defense should be allowed to follow a reduced training course, followed by a period in the stand-by reserve, upon completion of their schooling. USNSA recommends that teaching should be added to the list of those occupations now designated as critical.

(4) Legislation for selective service should recognize the privilege of conscientious objection on religious or humanitarian grounds.

The Ninth National Student Congress directs the National Staff to maintain such contact as is necessary with the Office of Defense Mobilization and other governmental bodies to implement this declaration.

political activity on campus

Whereas it is now generally recognized that legal partisan political student groups perform a valuable service in developing political leadership and increasing an awareness of political responsibilities among students, and

Whereas the operation of these partisan student groups on many campuses is either prohibited or drastically restricted because of legislation or school policies,

Therefore, be it resolved, that USNSA goes on record as approving the repeal or modification of legislation or school policies which restrict the legitimate operation of recognized legal partisan political groups on campus.

speakers on campus

While giving full consideration to the wisdom, discretion, and legal right of the university administration, USNSA is fully in accord with the principle of free speech and has faith in the intellectual ability of the American college student to discriminate and analyze various and diverse theories.

Be it resolved that to limit opportunities to hear various viewpoints would be inconsistent with the educational responsibility of the university, acknowledging that an exception exists in the case of private schools which have clearly stated educational policies that are made known to students previous to admission. In the latter situation, USNSA urges the institution to recognize the student's right to decide upon the speakers he wishes to hear.

Be it further resolved that the university has the responsibility for upholding this freedom against any external force that would obstruct the pursuit of knowledge; it should interpret to the general public the importance that freedom plays in education for life in a free society.

resolution on academic freedom

In accordance with the USNSA basic policy statement that the "purpose of a university as a democratic community is to perpetuate and enlarge the sum total of human knowledge, to disseminate this knowledge, to cultivate a spirit of continuing inquiry, and to serve as a matrix for participation in the process of democracy," it is vital that the academic community remain unhampered in its pursuit of knowledge and the conclusions therein derived. We further recognize the imperative need of a university to preserve the democratic way in which our academic freedom survives.

In its positive value, academic freedom must include the responsibility of the educator to stimulate inquiry and creative thought and the obligation of the student, as a student, to participate fully in independent inquiry and criticism.

USNSA adheres to the principle established by the American Association of University Professors that "removal can be justified only on the grounds established by evidence, of unfitness to teach because of incompetence, lack of scholarly objectivity or integrity, serious misuse of the classroom or of academic prestige, gross personal misconduct or conscious participation in conspiracy against the government." We also believe past or present association with persons are not in themselves sufficient basis for removal from academic position. However, membership in an organization which advocates the violent overthrow of our constitutional process would require an investigation of the individual's integrity and professional competence.

These charges against the individual's integrity and professional competence must be validated by a tribunal of one's peers rather than submitted to uninformed emotional pressures. We caution that such a tribunal must confront the individual with his accusers as well as with full specifications of all charges against him.

USNSA believes that full cooperation should be given the committees legitimately carrying on investigations. Realizing, however, the dangers of investigating individuals in the academic community, we believe that an educator's refusal on constitutional grounds to reply to questions concerning views, affiliations, and associations is not justifiable cause for dismissal.

If we fail to uphold courageously these principles guaranteeing our basic American traditions of free thought and inquiry, we face a lapse into a conformity dangerously verging on political and social sterility. USNSA affirms its conviction that the fear and conformity pervading the academic community will be overcome by a resurgence of freedom.

academic freedom week

Whereas Academic Freedom Week has become an important institution on many college campuses, and

Whereas the observance of Academic Freedom Week has become a valuable media for promoting intelligent thought and action in this area, and

Whereas USNSA desires to promote such discussion and action in as many college communities as possible,

Be it resolved that an Academic Freedom Week be sponsored by USNSA.

A number of prominent educators and advisors serve as Congress resource personnel and so keep informed of USNSA policies and programs intercollegiate athletics

The rewards, money and publicity held out to the winning teams, especially in football and basketball, and the desire of alumni and civic groups to see the institutions in which they are interested reap such rewards, have had the most powerful influence in bringing about the present athletic scandals.

The control of intercollegiate athletics is almost completely out of the hands of students and is, in many cases, no longer under the control of the universities themselves.

Facts concerning the athletic program scholarships issued and other subsidies, are not available for examination by student bodies or the public.

To eliminate inequities in the practices that exist in college athletic programs, the Ninth National Student Congress feels standards should be established and maintained:

(1) Voting membership on athletic policy committees should include representatives of the student body, administration, faculty, alumni associations, and the athletic director.

(2) Academic entrance requirements, maintenance of scholarship, tutoring services, and other academic practices should be identical for athletes and non-athletes.

(3) Grants-in-aid standards in an athletic conference should be equitable among all schools.

(4) All grants-in-aid to athletes derived from institutional funds and/or non-institutional donations should be distributed through regular university channels, as determined by the athletic policy committee.

(5) All part-time jobs for athletes should be supervised and controlled by university officials. No athlete should receive an undue amount or remuneration for services rendered. This policy should be implemented both on an athletic conference and school level.

(6) Grants-in-aid to athletes should be based on financial need and scholastic standing, rather than athletic ability alone.

(7) Maximum grants-in-aid should consist of no more than tuition, room, board, books and required university fees on a one semester renewable basis for a four-year undergraduate course. Amounts given should be determined by individual conferences in light of individual school's costs of the same.

(8) All records of remunerations given to athletes should be kept by the university or college and should be open to public scrutiny.

The USNSA Ninth Congress mandates the Student Affairs Vice-President to aid in the implementation of the above proposals by making them known to NCAA, the regional athletic conferences, the university and college athletic policy boards, and student governments.

desegregation:

The 1954-55 rulings of the Supreme Court have declared segregation in public schools unconstitutional. The problem of implementation has been relegated to local authorities with the good faith that compliance be prompt and just. At present, various stages of progress have been reached. However, in some instances, a prompt and reasonable beginning for complete compliance has not been made. Furthermore, in some instances, the accomplishment of desegregation has been retarded through overt, explicit actions by various individuals, organizations, and governmental agencies.

Segregation in education by race is unethical and unwise. It is now also unconstitutional. The USNSA, pledged to seeing the elimination of such segregation, urges the swiftest possible integration of the races at all educational levels, in all parts of the country. In the face of ethical concepts, legal requirements, and global ramifications, there can be no justification for delay in the implementation of the Supreme Court decision.

Groups thrown unwillingly together may well, at first, find unpleasant incidents unavoidable, and unavoidable tensions unpleasant; but it is the teaching of experience and morality that longstanding hostilities and misunderstandings are best dissipated in time by just such integration. The areas to be desegregated contain a wide variety of historic, economic, and ethnic patterns, and within these areas the impact of integration will vary accordingly.

We recognize that prejudice is a great persuasive antagonist where there are economic privations, ignorance, cultural disparities, and conspicuous physical dissimilarities; that family attitudes and ancient community justifications can easily overwhelm the colorless brotherliness which is the instinct and should be the heritage of all children; and that racial tensions tend to increase as the percentage of the minority group to the whole increases. Thus, historic and community factors in some parts of the country have produced racial attitudes of long duration which include among the vast majority of the white population an enthusiasm for separation by race which is equalled in passion only by the resentment felt by minority groups who have suffered the humiliation and loss of opportunity which such segregation entails. Where these passions are highest the transition will be hardest and the need for patience and goodwill greatest.

The USNSA reaffirms its acknowledgment of the concept of equality of opportunity for all people and remains unalterably opposed to all forms of discrimination in education which are based on race, religion, or national origins. To realize the objective set forth in the preceding statement of principle, we of the USNSA pledge ourselves to the education of the university and college community and to the education of the larger community of which we are a part concerning the problem of integration and its possible solutions.

This program will necessarily encompass action on the national, regional and local levels toward the ultimate achievement of integration. USNSA stands for immediate steps toward desegregation in higher education. USNSA urges all school boards and other appropriate authorities in whose districts segregation in elementary and secondary education still exists to undertake immediate action toward "a prompt and reasonable start" in full compliance with the Supreme Court decision of May 1954. USNSA disapproves of the attitudes of those institutions which cannot point to constructive action toward integration. USNSA stands opposed to all actions, legislative or otherwise, which in effect frustrate and prevent the obligation and right of local communities to progress toward compliance with the decision of the Supreme Court. Accordingly, USNSA stands vigorously opposed to:

(1) legislation designed to eliminate public education;

(2) economic, social, and political coercion against persons or organizations favoring desegregation;

(3) formation of school or residential districts in such a way as to perpetuate or encourage segregation in education;

(4) discriminatory practices concerning faculty on the basis of race, religion, or national origin in regard to employment, promotion, or the granting of tenure.

The facts of desegregation were presented by Southern student leaders and by guests such as Miss Autherine Lucy of Alabama

NATIONAL ACTION

(1) The Congress mandates the Educational Affairs Vice President to continue the special subcommission on desegregation. The subcommission is instructed:

a. to gather and disseminate to all member schools and interested parties pertinent information concerning integration;

b. to collect data, including monthly reports, from campuses where integration problems exist;

c. to cooperate with groups working for desegregation including religious, civic and student organizations.

(2) The Educational Affairs Vice President, in conjunction with the Desegregation Subcommission, shall make and execute plans for an interracial conference of Southern schools for the purpose of discussing and furthering understanding of the problem of integration:

a. all Southern colleges and universities will be invited to this conference.

b. the Educational Affairs Vice President will procure the necessary funds with which to finance this conference.

(3) Through the regional organizations, the Educational Affairs Vice President will be responsible for planning and implementing effective programming regarding integration.

(4) In order to make assistance available to educational communities working with problems of desegregation and integration, the Congress mandates the Educational Affairs Vice President to establish a staff, composed of the President of the Association, the Educational Affairs Vice President, a resource person to be selected for his special experience in this field, and three other persons to be selected by the National Staff, which will operate as follows:

a. In conjunction with the other material sent out by the subcommission, literature should be distributed explaining the services made available by the staff.

b. Upon receipt of a request for assistance from a school, the staff would travel to the local campus. After acquainting themselves with background information, they would consult with students, faculty, and administration members, rendering such advice and services as might be desirable. The staff should also suggest future courses of action to be taken in continuing plans for integration.

c. Follow-up material would be disseminated periodically, including evaluation sheets to determine the efficacy of the staff's aid.

(5) The Congress instructs the National Office to establish an integration seminar, similar to the international seminar at Cambridge. The cost of the seminar is to be financed through a foundation grant administered by the Educational Affairs Vice President, who is responsible for securing the grant.

(6) The Congress instructs the national office to convey our desire for the establishment of a United States Presidential Commission composed of citizens of various backgrounds, including students, to study methods of implementing the Supreme Court decisions of 1954 and 1955 on desegregation.

(7) The Congress urges as a further aid to desegregation the strengthening of the Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department.

(8) The Congress instructs the Educational Affairs Vice President to establish an inter-regional program of student exchange with the purpose of studying the problem of student exchange with the desire to work toward integration. The program will be financed in any feasible manner, and will be for the purpose of enabling students from the North, East, and West to attend schools in the South and vice versa; and then, returning to their respective schools in the South and other regions, these students would disseminate the information gained during these programs.

(9) The Educational Affairs Vice President will make a general report to the National Student Congress, outlining progress made in this field during the past year.

REGIONAL ACTION

(1) The Congress recommends that each region of USNSA act as a coordinating agency within its own territory for the purpose of holding discussions and exchanging information on desegregation and integration.

The hours-long plenary sessions are marked by idealism mixed with practical politics and enthusiasm directed by serious concern

(2) The Congress recommends that the regions establish desegregation subcommissions to cooperate with the Educational Affairs Vice President.

CAMPUS ACTION

USNSA realizes that each campus is unique and thus must deal with its own problems individually; USNSA strongly urges that within the framework of their own student governments, campuses:

a. Make a study of local community and campus problems, taking into account local ordinances, state laws, and campus regulations;

b. Participate in an inter-racial exchange of cultural programs, debates, discussions, joint student government conferences, religious and political meetings, and athletic contests;

c. Work toward integration in all on-campus and off-campus activities and facilities;

d. Form groups of interested student, faculty, and administration personnel who will give concerted attention to integration;

e. Encourage the student groups to work with interested civic groups;

f. Encourage the preparation of prospective teachers to teach as members of integrated faculties.

g. Promote favorable attitudes toward integration on secondary levels through college leadership and contact with high school leaders;

h. Encourage non-discriminatory practices in community facilities, projects, and cultural programs.

NOTE: The following definitions are used in the above resolution:

Integration is the process of change in attitudes and actions of persons who previously judged other individuals on the basis of racial and/or ethnic origins, and who presently are learning to accept people on individual merit without regard to ethnic background.

Desegregation is the elimination of social, economic, and legalistic barriers between racial and ethnic groups.

declaration of policy on international student cooperation

United States National Student Association reaffirms as its chief goal in the field of international student relations the promotion and maintenance of international understanding. In pursuance of this goal, USNSA has sought and will continue to seek to establish friendly and reciprocal relations with national unions of students and other educational organizations in all parts of the world.

While USNSA seeks to achieve this understanding and fellowship largely through the promotion of practical cooperation on common student problems, it recognizes that this program is meaningful only so far as it rests upon the basic principles of the Association. These principles of mutual respect and equality, the right of students to an education commensurate with their intellectual abilities, opposition to all forms of discrimination and support of academic freedom and autonomy of the university, give spirit and significance to the practical cooperation of USNSA and guide its efforts toward obtaining the widest possible measure of international understanding.

USNSA will continue to represent these principles both nationally and internationally. In so doing, it will continue to make non-partisan stands on issues involving students in their roles as students. While USNSA believes that the substance of international student relations is cooperation on practical problems which face students in all parts of the world, problems which affect the student as such should not be excluded from discussion at the International Student Conference (ISC) merely because these problems have political implications.

USNSA notes with pleasure the continued growth of participation in ISC. The presence of 54 national unions of students at the 1955 Birmingham Conference made it the largest representative ISC ever held. USNSA believes that the unity of the world student community should be achieved through the ISC because of the world-wide, representative, non-partisan nature of ISC which makes possible cooperation between national unions of students of diverse orientations. USNSA believes that the ISC is in itself a conference of cooperation open to the participants of all national unions of students.

USNSA reaffirms its support of the principles of academic freedom and university autonomy, and notes with approval the actions of the ISC in conducting through appropriate channels a world-wide survey of the violations of and progress toward the attainment of these principles and encourages the continuation of these surveys. In addition, USNSA supports the recommendation of the ISC that the Coordinating Secretariat (COSEC) cooperate in the giving of assistance of a technical nature toward the establishment of strong national unions of students.

USNSA will welcome and consider proposals for practical cooperation with national unions of students throughout the world, preferably through the medium of the ISC. In particular, the USNSA takes cognizance of the potentialities and usefulness of practical program of cooperation in areas of the world sharing common experiences and meeting local problems, especially insofar as such programs contribute to cultural exchanges as an aid to building international student unity and understanding. Where cooperation is not now feasible through the ISC, USNSA believes that national unions of students in the countries concerned are the appropriate means of communication and cooperation. Discussions of all such proposals must be initiated and continued under circumstances of good faith and determination to observe the meaning and intent of any agreement for the execution of projects and programs.

USNSA observes that the IUS has maintained its partisan political orientation and its unrepresentative character, being composed largely of partisan minority groups which are consistently made to appear in IUS publications and meetings as of a representative character. The USNSA also takes particular notice of the changes in the IUS policies and actions since the Eighth National Student Congress, but realizes that these changes do not constitute a basic shift of the partisan political views of the IUS, which continues to pursue its fundamentally partisan political objectives. For these reasons, therefore, the USNSA believes that the IUS does not constitute an appropriate medium for international student cooperation.

USNSA President, Harald C. Bakken, of the University of Minnesota: history major, Phi Beta Kappa, he resigned as President of the All-University Congress at Minnesota when elected to serve as chief executive officer and spokesman of USNSA for 1956-1957 basic policy on international academic freedom

We believe that freedom is indivisible. Oppression and tyranny in any form constitute a peril to all liberties. Political and economic suppression, dictatorship of class or party may assume different forms and manifest themselves in different ways, but they all tend toward a common end—the absolute subjection of the individual in every aspect of his life as scholar, citizen, and man. Tyranny is by nature total and moves inexorably toward totalitarian control and the denial of every liberty, right, and dignity.

As students, however, we feel a particular responsibility toward those rights which comprise the academic freedoms: the right to teach; the right to study; the right to engage in honest research; the right to organize as members of the academic community in the pursuit and defense of academic aims; and the right of every student to pursue his education in an atmosphere of university autonomy and equal educational opportunity without restrictions based on race, sex, national or social origin, economic status, political convictions or religious belief. These conditions are basic to the discharge of a university's responsibility to the truth.

The denial of these freedoms—the use of the university as an instrument of political indoctrination and the expulsion of students and professors who have asserted these rights common to us all—is a crime not only against the individual but also against the academic world. We recognize that we are bound to our fellow students in every nation by bonds of friendship and by our loyalty to a common tradition.

Each student must support and defend a heritage universal to all students. This concern with the rights of students as students cannot be limited by national frontiers. Like the academic community itself, it is international. As students we are citizens of a single commonwealth of the mind.

immigration policy

Certain provisions of the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952 (McCarran-Walter Act) have had a substantial effect in limiting the access to this country of students seeking to study or visit, of educators and scientists seeking to exchange information, and of scholars seeking to teach temporarily or to become citizens. To the extent that these provisions are not necessary in the interest of national security, USNSA feels that they are an unwarranted barrier to the development of knowledge and international student understanding and urges their repeal.

We believe that an amendment providing liberal waiver of these barriers for visiting students and scholars is urgently needed. A less complex and cumbersome administrative process for such action is essential to the prompt and fair consideration of such cases either as special classes or entering aliens or on their individual merits. In these cases, mere membership or association should not be a factor barring entry. Moreover, USNSA considers that Chapter 3, Section 221, requiring fingerprinting, creates unnecessary misunderstandings and restricts student exchange, and therefore urges the repeal of this section insofar as it affects temporary non-immigrant students, educators and scientists.

USNSA feels that the exchange of students and scholars is necessary for promoting the international advancement of knowledge and of mutual understanding. Therefore, it urges the repeal of those sections of the Act which limit the entry of scholars to accept teaching or research positions for a limited time, as well as the clarification and liberalization of the sections concerning part-time and temporary employment by foreign students. Finally, in view of the importance of encouraging the entry of intellectual leaders into the United States, USNSA urges that the non-quota status held by immigrants engaged in college and university teaching and research prior to the enactment of the McCarran-Walter Act be restored.

USNSA believes that such modifications of the Act with regard to students and educators and the simplification of the administrative procedures prescribed in the Act would be a major step toward intellectual progress and international understanding. USNSA directs the National Staff to work for the adoption of the revisions stated above.

educational exchange

The Ninth National Student Congress approves of the broad progress made by the International Commission in the field of educational exchange under the mandate of the Eighth Congress. It notes that the United States National Student Association has always believed in the free exchange of students not as an end in itself but rather as a means of furthering its fundamental objectives of promoting international understanding and fellowship. In serving this purpose the Association has sent students, travel and information teams, fraternal delegations, and official representatives to many parts of the world and has encouraged and assisted in bringing large numbers of overseas students to this country.

The Congress approves of the program of progress made under the four specific recommendations of the Eighth Congress in the field of exchange as follows:

(1) Foreign Student Leadership Project: Following the successful application for funds for a four-year term to implement the program, the Association solicited applications in Asia, Africa, the Middle East and Latin America with the result that ten students from these areas will be studying in institutions of higher education in the United States during the 1956-57 academic year. The Congress is gratified by the substantial support evidenced for this program in these areas and on a large number of campuses in the United States.

(2) Latin American Exchange: The Congress notes the inclusion of Latin American students in the initial year of the foreign student leadership program as requested in the resolution of the Eighth Congress. It also expresses its appreciation that a goodwill delegation of United States students visited Latin America during the summer of 1956.

(3) Exchange with the Soviet Union: The Congress notes with approval the efforts of the International Commission to arrange an exchange program with the Soviet Union, in particular through its survey of all member colleges and universities, which revealed that twenty-eight institutions would be willing to undertake a program of academic exchange as outlined in the mandates. It is pleased that the principle of long-term academic exchange has been accepted but regrets that the Soviet Union pointed to United States immigration regulations, including fingerprinting regulations, as grounds for not implementing an exchange program at this time.

(4) Relations with Students in Exile: The Congress notes the increased opportunities fostered by the Association for contact of United States students with students and various organizations of students exiled because of their allegiance to democratic principles.

Considering the success with which exchange in general and specific mandates in particular have been implemented by the Association during the past year, the Ninth Congress reaffirms the basic principles underlying the exchange programs as enunciated by the Eighth Congress.

National staff elected at the Ninth National Student Congress: upper left, Clifford Sheats, Wayne State University, Executive Vice President; upper right, Bruce D. Larkin, University of Chicago, International Affairs Vice President; lower left, James F. Pomroy, Allegheny College, Student Government Vice President; lower right, Ann Beckner, Denison University, Educational Affairs Vice President; also elected: P. Charles Jones, University of Wisconsin, Student Affairs Vice President

While programs of exchange alone cannot bring about the solution of international tensions, USNSA does believe that exchange programs can contribute to the rectifications of misconceptions and misunderstandings resulting from ignorance and prejudice.

In this regard the Association believes:

(1) The most fruitful types of contact are free exchanges of ideas between participants who have a sincere desire for understanding.

(2) Exchanges are most effective when they provide a maximum of contact over an extended period of time. Long-term academic exchanges embody a more fruitful approach than short term exchanges, particularly when they are sufficiently flexible to permit participants to gain a representative view of the areas visited and the people concerned.

(3) Programs should be so developed that the danger of intentional or unintentional distortions of the original aims through publicity or propaganda will be minimized.

Assurance of an adequate level of compliance with these factors as determined by the International Vice President must be obtained prior to the initiation of any program. The International Vice President is also instructed to take specific measures to encourage and assist the member schools and regions in promoting and planning such exchange.

USNSA authorizes its International Vice President with the approval of NEC to expand the Association's present program of exchange as a means of reaching as wide a range of students as possible commensurate with the underlying principles and objectives of USNSA, and furthering international understanding and fellowship. With these general principles as guides we feel that special emphasis should be given to the following areas of activity:

In informal Congress sessions are developed experiences which reach far into tomorrow, into all parts of this country and of the world

(1) Considering the success of the initial year of the Foreign Student Leadership Program, we concur in the plans of the director of the program and the International Vice President to expand this program to include a larger number of students. Such an expansion of program further recognizes the vital role which the student leaders of Asia, Africa, the Middle East and Latin America now assume in the development of their countries.

(2) Consistent with the principle of mutuality that we believe should underlie exchange programs whenever possible, the Congress directs the International Vice President to investigate the possibilities of making the foreign leadership program reciprocal so that the United States students may study in the areas from which present participants in the program now come.

(3) In addition to the two programs mentioned above, the Congress feels that it is important that with USNSA's general principles of exchange as guides, the International Vice President investigate possibilities for other forms of exchange of students with the countries in Asia, Africa, the Middle East, and Latin America to the end that the students from these areas and in the United States may establish friendly and mutually cooperative relationships with each other.

(4) The Congress continues to feel that in areas where present tensions exist and where we have had little contact in the past, such as Eastern Europe, the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China, attempts should be made in strict accordance with USNSA's general principles to realize successful student exchange with these areas in the form of practical programs. These should emphasize long term academic exchanges and take into account those non-student factors which might legitimately postpone the realization of some of these programs.

(5) The International Vice President is directed to continue to develop programs which will serve to increase contact between USNSA and the various exiled students and student organizations whose allegiance to democratic principles has forced them into exile.

In determining whether to undertake any exchange program, the International Vice President should consider whether the Association is the most appropriate agency for the sponsorship of a particular program and, if not, whether he should encourage other appropriate organizations to undertake such programs.

The International Vice President is authorized and urged to take such steps as are necessary for the implementation of programs along the lines suggested in this resolution. In particular, he should attempt to organize USNSA exchange programs through the agency of the student governments at the various member campuses.

program summary 1956–1957

As USNSA approaches its tenth year, its programs reflect the thinking of the student leaders on the issues which appear to them to be pivotal, the points on which American education is gradually turning.

The program of USNSA is established by the National Student Congress, either through direct mandates to the national staff or by establishing policies which the staff and the regional officers are committed to implement.

participation in the international student conference

USNSA will continue to represent the American student at the International Student Conference (ISC) which will hold its seventh annual meeting in 1957. During the year, USNSA will participate in international student seminars, exchange programs, technical conferences and other programs of practical cooperation sponsored by the ISC and administered through the Coordinating Secretariat for National Unions of Students (COSEC). The President of USNSA, with the advice of the International Affairs Vice-President, will appoint the official Association representatives to these meetings.

USNSA will send official representatives to student meetings abroad, or will designate Americans studying in these countries to represent it, at the invitation of student groups or universities. Such representatives will be in Japan, Israel, Iceland and Canada during the coming year. In one case, Iceland, the American delegation will be returning a visit from students of that country. This particular group of students was selected by student government at the University of Minnesota, in cooperation with USNSA.

international student relations seminar

Approximately fifteen outstanding students will be selected from applications submitted from member campuses for an intensive nine-week seminar in international student relations sponsored by USNSA during July and August of 1957 in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Designed to develop a select group of individuals on member campuses who will be able to contribute to the development of USNSA international programming on all levels, campus, regional, national and international, the annual international Student Relations Seminar (ISRS) is supported by a special foundation grant. All participants are awarded scholarships to cover their expenses.

Leading student leaders, educators and journalists from this country and abroad lecture at the seminar and take part in discussion of the history and contemporary developments of the international student movement.

Graduates of the first five seminars have represented USNSA abroad, served as national officers of the Association, held a number of regional offices, and filled staff positions in various international student organizations, such as World University Service.

campus international program

A full-time staff member, the Campus International Administrator, will coordinate the international policies of USNSA with the campus programs of member schools. Basically, this will be done in three major areas:

1. assisting campus organizations, student governments in particular, in planning effective international programs; through international relations clubs, living groups, and the campus press, greater awareness is created among the general student body concerning the on-campus potential for increasing international understanding;
2. informing member campuses of the programs and policies of USNSA in relation to its overseas contacts; at the same time, getting a consensus of student opinion on issues on which USNSA will be expressing a position on their behalf;
3. interesting qualified students in participating in the international activities of USNSA, such as the International Student Relations Seminar.

The Campus International Coordinator prepares special material to assist member schools in observing UN Day and Pan-American Day. In 1957, the third annual Book Drive will be held from March 4-8 under the direction of the Campus International Administrator.

campus tours by foreign delegations

USNSA, in cooperation with member schools, arranges a number of tours for foreign student leaders each year who come to this country under the sponsorship of various foundations, governmental agencies, or private auspices. The Association also acts as a liaison between foreign student organizations in this country and member schools in sponsoring cultural tours and speakers' programs.

overseas publicity program

Under a special foundation grant received in 1955, USNSA is preparing a series of articles for distribution abroad interpreting American student life. A full-time researcher-writer will work on the project during 1956-1957 and will cover such areas as desegregation and the American college, the financing of higher education, religion on the campus, and student political activities.

representation at UN and UNESCO

The International Affairs Vice President will serve as a member of the U. S. National Commmission for UNESCO, a group of 60 private organizations established by Congress to work with the State Departent in promoting understanding of UNESCO in the United States.

USNSA is the only student organization to be represented in the Non-Governmental Organizations (NGO's) of the United Nations. Miss Irene Lefel, a Barnard student, will be the USNSA representative to this group which is a consultative arm of the UN.

subcommissions

Asian Subcommission, University of California, Berkeley, Calif. Compiles data on student life in Asia, cooperates on Asian projects on the campuses, and works toward practical programs to build fellowship and understanding.

International Correspondence Exchange Subcommission, College of St. Rose, Albany, N. Y., handles requests from students abroad desiring to correspond with American students.

campus evaluations

The Student Government Vice President will spend most of his time travelling to member schools. On many of these campuses, he will work with student leaders in one- or two-day evaluations of their student governing systems, providing services, information and liaison which will supplement the schools' regular contacts with the national office. Topics covered in these campus visits will vary with the particular needs of the school but, in general, will cover leadership development, the philosophy of student government, student-faculty-administration relations, elections and intercollegiate cooperation.

research

A year after its publication, the USNSA-directed study, Student Government, Student Leaders and the American College, remains the most significant research project in this field. Campus, regional and national meetings of both students and educators will be using this report as the basis for discussion and programming. The full significance of the study will be apparent only after their work has been finished. A condensed edition of the report is being prepared by a member of the original research staff and will put the findings of the study into hands of every interested member of the educational community.

regional clinics

Through correspondence with regional officers and attendance at regional meetings, including special seminars or "clinics" on student government problems, USNSA will promote wider intercollegiate exchange and poling of resources for the improvement of self-government on the campus. On the West Coast, the Student Government Vice President will take part in a panel on "Educational Problems of Student Government," along with two deans. Three regions, New England, New York State and Metropolitan New York, will sponsor a seminar on "The Role of the Student in Higher Education."

publications

A manual of committee organization and administration titled, Making Your Committee Work, will be the first in a proposed series of publications dealing with the major problems faced by student government. Subsequent booklets will cover finance, elections, coordinating activities, student participation in college planning, and freshman orientation.

subcommissions

Honors System, Trinity College, Washington, D. C. Conducts research on the subject of honor systems.

educational affairs

USNSA will sponsor the fifth annual Academic Freedom Week on its member campuses April 1-7, 1957. Under a $4,000 grant from the Fund for the Republic, special material will be prepared by the Educational Affairs Vice President and the Academic Freedom Subcommission to assist student governments, campus newspapers and other student organizations in planning programs to arouse student awareness of the issues involved.

A national advisory board of prominent educators, civic and religious leaders, journalists and outstanding citizens will be invited to work with the staff in developing significant participation on as wide a base as possible.

human relations

Plans will be made for a national conference on human relations for student leaders. This will keynote the campus human relations program which will be supported by a foundation grant and will be primarily an action program A USNSA-directed Human Relations Institute will oversee the program, provide the nucleus of advice and leadership in the solving of campus problems in this area.

southern schools conference on desegregation

The first intercollegiate conference in the South on the problems of desegregation will be sponsored by USNSA in the Spring of 1957. Selected member and non-member schools will be invited to come together for several days of lectures and discussions aimed at pin-pointing the major difficulties growing out of integration. It is hoped that this pioneering conference will be an incentive to further programming and action by Southern college students. Reports and recommendations of the Conference will be distributed to colleges, educators and interested organizations and will be summarized in the working papers for the Tenth National Student Congress.

rising enrollments

USNSA will cooperate with Massachusetts Institute of Technology in a special conference on the problems of increased college enrollments, scheduled for March 30-31. Material will be prepared and distributed by the Educational Affairs Vice President on the responsibilities of student leaders to prepare now for the multiplicity of problems which will be created by expanded demands on classrooms, living space and social facilities at American colleges.

subcommissions

Academic Freedom, University of Pennsylvania (Women's Student Government), Philadelphia, Pa., Aims of Higher Education, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y.; Desegregation, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C.; Human Relations, Allegheny College, Meadville, Pa., Legislative Activity, Catholic University, Washington, D. C.; Military Manpower Counselling, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn.; Rising Enrollments, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge, Mass.

student economic welfare

The Student Affairs Vice President will continue to evaluate the effectiveness of the USNSA-sponsored Student Discount Service. In addition, he will prepare information on other projects such as student loan funds and cooperatives. The work in this area will be concentrated on establishing the real economic needs of the American student and encouraging on-campus or intercollegiate programs to help alleviate the most pressing ones. In addition, individual regions will prepare handbooks for high school students listing all the scholarships available in their area.

student service programs

Through such activities as its participation in the various meetings of the deans of students and similar groups, USNSA maintains liaison between the student and the administrators who direct the co-curricular life of the college. The President of USNSA has been invited to be a member of three panel discussions at the annual meeting of the American College Personnel Association in April. To accurately represent the point of view of American students, the officers will continue to maintain close contact with the campuses; through personal visits, surveys and reports from regional and campus officers a detailed picture will be available of the situation in regard to student health services, including mental health, counselling services, supervision of housing, admissions and food services, and the role of the college union.

student press

The second Editors' Conference will be held in conjunction with the Tenth National Student Congress in Ann Arbor. The Conference, which will open on August 17, will be planned in cooperation with the editors of a number of campus newspapers who attended the USNSA-sponsored Editors' Conference in 1956 and requested that the meeting be made an annual event at which they could meet and discuss their mutual problems. Editorial freedom and responsibility, the role of publication boards, relations with student government, financing and censorship will be among the topics to be discussed.

social and cultural programs

The Student Affairs Vice President will plan a program of intercollegiate cultural exchange, including art tours, joint sponsorship of special programs, and other activities designed both to increase communication between the colleges and to enable students to secure cultural advantages which would not otherwise be available to them for reasons of finance or distance.

intercollegiate athletics

The Student Affairs Vice President will work with "the NCAA, regional athletics conferences, the university and college athletic policy boards, and student governments," as mandated by the Ninth National Student Congress (see Intercollegiate Athletics Resolution, page 24), to devise a realistic policy for the elimination of the practices which have aroused so much controversy and criticism among students and the general public.

subcommissions

Student Unions, University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wisc.; Economic Welfare, City College of New York, New York, N. Y.; Social, Cultural Clearing House, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C.

Assistance and encouragement is given to student governments by USNSA in planning special projects. Results of some of these projects were exhibited at the Ninth National Student Congress and include academic freedom programs, U. N. Week, honors systems and election reforms.

student government information service (SGIS)

SGIS is a clearing house for information on all phases of American student life. A full-time Research Editor collects material from colleges, student groups, educational organizations and other sources from which are prepared answers to requests for information from USNSA member schools.

Letters listing specific areas or problems on which the student government wants information or assistance should be directed to:

REBECCA KOELLING, Research Editor

Rackham—site of the plenaries

tenth national student congress

Marking the completion of the first decade of USNSA's existence, the Tenth National Student Congress will meet at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor from August 20 through 30, 1957. This will be the major policy-making meeting of the Association and will bring together student leaders from all parts of the world, as well as the official representatives of over one million American students.

Outstanding student leaders of the past ten years will be guests of the Congress, along with a number of prominent civic and educational leaders. They will evaluate the contribution of USNSA to the American educational community, especially in the field of student leadership development.

Invitations to the Congress will be sent to all accredited colleges in the United States in the early Spring. Student bodies at member schools will select their delegates during the coming year. Colleges which are not members of USNSA may send as many non-voting observers as they wish. Extensive orientation programs have been planned on both the campus and regional level to insure a maximum of representative and articulate student participation in the workshops and legislative sessions.

student body presidents' conference

The seventh in a series of annual three-day conferences for newly-elected student body presidents will be sponsored by USNSA from August 17 through 20 at the University of Michigan. Under the direction of the Student Government Vice President of USNSA, a board of student body presidents, representing colleges and universities of various sizes and structures, plans the content of the meeting. All accredited colleges in the United States and its territories are invited to send representatives.

workshop for deans and faculty advisors

Running concurrently with the opening days of the Tenth National Student Congress, a special three-day program for educators will bring students, faculty and administrators together in informal sessions to discuss their common problems. Also, by participating in the Congress itself as observers, the adult educators will have a first-hand view of the student leader as he confronts the basic problems which face him and his college.

conference on foreign student affairs

Students from this country and abroad will meet for three days prior to the Congress to discuss the role of the foreign student on the American campus. This is the third such meeting to be planned by the Association and is the only conference of its kind designed especially to take up the problems of the overseas student and his relation to the American campus and students of the American campus.

This report is designed to provide member schools, Congress participants and other individuals and organizations with the highlights of the major activities of the United States National Student Association. Complete copies of the reports of the National Officers and official minutes and texts of all resolutions passed by the Ninth National Student Congress and the National Executive Committee are available from:

Dear Ralph:

I received a letter from Nicholas Balint, Publisher of Inter-Allied Publications saying that he had written Axel Grunberg about the possibility of putting Dr. James T. Shotwell on THIS IS YOUR LIFE.

In order to give you the whole story, I am enclosing a carbon copy of the letter written to Mr. Grunberg. I know from experience that you get a lot of these, but thought I could only pass it on to you.

I know the people involved, and they are 24-carat.

As ever yours,

Mr. Axel Grunberg, Producer
THIS IS YOUR LIFE
62-53 Hollywood Blvd.
Hollywood 28, California

Dear Mr. Grunberg:

After talking to Mr. Tom McDermott of Benton & Bowles today, may I call to your attention, as a prospective subject for your THIS IS YOUR LIFE television program, a personage of international renown whose life has been truly spectacular in the cause of peace?

In 1918, in close cooperation with President Wilson and with his great friend the Liberator-President, Thomas G. Masaryk, Professor James T. Shotwell of Columbia University helped to found democratic Czechoslovakia. Since the engulfment of that small country by the Communist oppressors, Dr. Shotwell has followed up that early achievement by engaging in the exciting and rewarding enterprise of saving the lives and careers of thousands of Czechoslovak nationals who with his help and encouragement have managed to escape from that beleaguered country.

Some of them escaped, you may recall, by airplanes, seizing them in daring midair gunfight. Others dashed through the guarded border on the "Freedom Train", others again on a home-made tank, and an engineer and his family even used an amphibious conveyance. There are approximately 30,000 refugees whom the American Fund for Czechoslovak Refugees Inc. helped to resettle in free countries, 5,000 of which came to the U.S.A. Many of these escapees are now U.S. citizens, and some of them are suitable and available for participating in the show.

As Chairman of the American Fund for Czechoslovak Refugees, Dr. Shotwell's personal experiences in aiding the desperate struggles of these brave fighters for liberty have brought him close to the realities of political conditions in many countries. As a humanitarian, championing the rights of the individual seeking freedom from the authoritarian state, his life has indeed been drama-packed.

Dr. Shotwell is now President-Emeritus of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, and his work as a promoter of peace is acclaimed not only at home but abroad. As a philosopher and author, by his lectures and writings he has prepared us to know our place in a world of stress and uncertainty, and as a courageous fighter for peace. He has travelled far and wide, helping to clarify the fundamental issues mankind has been facing. Under his direction over 200 experts, including thirty-five wartime cabinet ministers, were assigned the ~~immense~~ ~~ink~~ task of writing 150 volumes about the economic and social history of World War I. At the Paris Peace Conference he was our best qualified representative. A quarter of a century later he helped to draft the UN Charter in San Francisco.

Dr. Shotwell's outstanding service as an educator is recognized throughout the world. During his 50 years as a teacher of history at Columbia he helped to build that University to its present eminence as the nation's leading educational institution. There are few educators in America who have exercised so much influence on their students' thinking and acting as Dr. Shotwell. Many of these, now in key positions in American national life, still maintain that Dr. Shotwell's philosophy of life, his example and teaching have inspired them throughout their lives and have guided and directed them toward the various successes they have achieved in their own careers.

Among the multitudes of Dr. Shotwell's friends and admirers there are many prominent Americans who will always remember him with gratitude, affection and respect. I am taking the liberty of enclosing a selection of material which gives some indication of the high regard in which Dr. Shotwell is so widely held, and which you might be interested in reading. Among these are: Excerpts from congratulatory letters and telegrams sent to Dr. Shotwell by prominent Americans on the occasion of his 80th birthday; a dust jacket of his recent book, THE UNITED STATES IN HISTORY, published by Simon and Schuster; a few clippings from the New York Times and from the Saturday Review; and a pamphlet by the late Thomas J. Watson, former Chairman of IBM.

A preliminary investigation has brought out that it is safe to assume the following people would, if requested, be willing to appear and pay tribute to Dr. Shotwell on a possible "THIS IS YOUR LIFE, PROFESSOR SHOTWELL" program:

The Hon. Carlos P. Romulo, Ambassador of the Philippines
The Hon. Paul Martin, Canadian Chief Delegate to the UN
David Sarnoff, Chairman, RCA
Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Chairman of Governors, Am. Ass. for the UN
David Rockefeller, Executive V.P. of the Chase Manhattan Bank
Edward R. Murrow (On whose "Person to Person" show Dr. Shotwell appeared.)
The Hon. Herbert H. Lehman, U.S. Senator from New York
Dr. Grayson Kirk, President, Columbia University
Tom Watson, Jr., President of IBM
Dr. Joseph E. Johnson, President of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace
James B. Carey, President International Electrical Workers Union
Helen R. Reid, Proprietor, N.Y. Herald Tribune
Norman Cousins, Editor, Saturday Review
Lincoln M. Schuster, of Simon & Schuster, Publishers, N.Y.C.
Dr. Jan Papanek, former Ambassador and Chief Delegate of democratic Czechoslovakia to the UN, and two-three refugees, whom Dr. Shotwell helped to escape and to re-establish themselves as free citizens in the U.S.A.

A three-fold purpose could be accomplished by carrying out this program:

1. An exciting and inspiring human story would be presented with the above "supporting cast" of well-known Americans.

2. Through the presentation of a most devoted fighter for Peace you would dramatize this gravest of the issues our generation is facing; thus helping our people to understand the responsibilities the U.S.A., as leader of the free world, bears in these difficult days.

3. You can help, if you wish, thousands of democratic, anti-Communist Czechoslovak refugees who are suffering in various camps in Europe, by appealing to your viewers for financial contributions to the American Fund for Czechoslovak Refugees, Inc. This is a voluntary humanitarian agency, acknowledged by our federal and state authorities and sponsored by outstanding Americans. In doing this you would help those refugees to survive and to resume a new life in free countries.

In appreciation for the contribution that THIS IS YOUR LIFE has made to the many good causes it has helped, and that it would be making to this specific cause in particular, as a part of the show Dr. Shotwell would present, as a token reward to you or the sponsors of the show, a beautifully painted oil portrait of the late Liberator-President of Czechoslovakia, T.G. Masaryk.

This portrait was rescued from the National Museum of Prague at the time of the Nazi invasion, and hidden in Yugoslovia. From there it was smuggled out and carried to Israel and kept by the relatives of the original donor, a patriot and humanitarian of pre-Nazi and pre-Communist Czechoslovakia. Now the portrait has been sent to the U.S. with the instruction to donate it to fund-raising purposes by the American Fund for Czechoslovak Refugees.

As a friend and admirer of Dr. Shotwell, and also as a former editor in Czechoslovakia and as a former refugee myself, I shall be happy to cooperate with you in carrying out this program in case this project interests you.

I shall be looking forward with interest to an early reply.

Sincerely,

Nicholas G. Balint

Personal-Confidential

November 26, 1956

Dear Ed:

This is a "Person to Person" request hoping that you will forgive me for intruding on your crowded schedule.

After a confidential talk with Dr. Shotwell and Dr. Jan Papanek I mailed a letter to the producer of Ralph Edward's THIS IS YOUR LIFE show of which a carbon copy is enclosed. I sent this letter to Mr. Gruenberg upon the advise of the Benton and Bowles people who are handling the sponsor's account and who liked the project very much. However, there was no reply from Hollywood.

In the meantime, the tragic Hungarian events placed new responsibilities on the shoulders of the American Fund for Czechoslovak Refugees, for in co-operation with the State Department and private organizations, the Fund in addition to the Czechoslovak refugees, is now helping the Hungarian escapees too. Therefore the money we are hoping to raise through the appeal is even more badly needed now than at the time when we approached the producer of the show.

Dr. Shotwell is Chairman and Dr. Papanek is President of the American Fund for Czechoslovak Refugees. The Fund's humanitarian activities show an impressive record: it helped 30,000 refugees to resettle in free countries, 5000 of them in the United States.

I wonder whether your busy schedule would permit you to cast a friendly eye on this matter, and to give us some advise or help in contacting Ralph Edwards which would enable us to carry out this project. I assure you that all of us will deeply appreciate any consideration you may give to this matter.

Hoping that everything is well with you and that I'll hear from you soon, I am

Cordially yours,

Nicholas

Dear Ed:

This will introduce Mr. William Wilson who worked with me while I was acting as Public Relations Director for Governor Stevenson.

Mr. Wilson worked as the Governor's television director and adviser during the primary campaign and as one of our television advancemen during the election campaign.

Both Governor Stevenson and I have a very high opinion of Mr. Wilson. He showed at all times an intelligence and industry and was extremely adept at working with the various technical people in local television stations.

Mr. Wilson has told me that he would like your advice as to the course he should follow in developing his experience in the television industry. I know how busy you are but if you could find a few minutes to talk with him I should appreciate it.

Many thanks for everything you did to help Adlai during the campaign. Your counsel and assistance were invaluable.

With best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Just a line to tell you how much I appreciated your visit to Baltimore, and your excellent and well chosen remarks Saturday evening, February 2nd.

It was indeed unfortunate that the program was so hackneyed before they came to the so so main event of the evening.

I was particularly impressed with your remarks about our great Judge Soboloff and his remarks as to your reference.

May the good Lord bless you with good health so that you may continue the fine job that all freedom loving Americans are so proud of you for.

GOVERNORS' CONFERENCE

1313 EAST SIXTIETH STREET

CHICAGO 37, ILLINOIS

March 24, 1958

TO PRESS, RADIO AND TELEVISION REPRESENTATIVES:

Attached is a tentative and preliminary outline program for the Fiftieth Annual Meeting of the Governors' Conference at the Americana Hotel, Bal Harbour, Miami Beach, Florida, on May 18-21.

The Fiftieth Annual Meeting is going to be one of the best Governors' Conferences we have ever had. It will be held at a beautiful site, the program will be most timely and interesting, and Governor LeRoy Collins and his Florida Host State Committee are making excellent arrangements for the comfort and enjoyment of all those who attend.

We hope very much that you are planning to be with us, and we are also enclosing a reservation request form so that you can conveniently send the information required for assignment of hotel accommodations.

The business sessions and other functions of the Fiftieth Anniversary Meeting will be held at the Americana Hotel, and it is the desire of the Host State to accommodate as many guests as possible at the Americana. However, to provide for overflow and for those who may wish alternate accommodations, special arrangements have been made with the Colonade Hotel which is on the oceanfront, less than a block from the Americana.

The Host State has advised us that preferences between Americana and Colonade Hotels will be honored on a first-come, first-served basis. Of necessity, guests requesting reservations after either hotel is fully reserved will be assigned to the other hotel. The rates for both hotels are shown on the reservation form.

Please -- we urge that you complete and return the form to us at this office, 1313 East 60th Street, Chicago 37, as soon as possible so that we can make every effort to obtain the accommodations you wish.

Looking forward to seeing you at the Fiftieth Annual Meeting of the Governors' Conference, and with kindest personal regards, I am

Very sincerely,

Dear Brother Frank:

Three cheers for Mr. Lar Daly who appears to have had a most distinguished career!

I tried to reach you by phone when you were counselling with Governor Faubus, but was unable to do so. I hope you had fun.

Please let me know when next you are going to be in town again.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Frank Bane

PERSONAL AND VERY IMPORTANT

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

Shame on you! I have a letter today from a gentleman by the name of Mr. Lar Daly. I do not know him, that is, not yet. But he says he is a neighbor of mine here on the south side of Chicago.

He says, furthermore, that you, the CBS, the NBC, and all the rest of you folk have done him wrong. He goes on to say that he has appealed all the way to the Supreme Court of the United States and that that august body has thrown the question out contending that it is moot -- whatever that is. He has written to all the Governors, and he has written to me demanding that I personally and individually do something about this -- before sundown!

I am attaching the biography which he sent me, content in the knowledge that if you will just read it, you will see that the matter is corrected immediately.!

Believe me to be your obedient servant.

Very sincerely,

Frank Bane
Executive Director

P. S. This should lighten your day.

LAR DALY (Biography) June 22nd, 1956

Born, Lawrence Joseph Sarsfield Daly, Gary, Indiana, January 22, 1912. Son of Lawrence and Winifred (Glavey) Daly, natives of Ireland. "Lar" is short form of "Lawrence", popular in Ireland, England and Scotland 50 years ago. Father, grand-uncle and great grand-father were known as "Lar".

Mother died when he was 5. He and brother, John Patrick, placed in Carmelite Sisters Orphan Home, Hammond, Ind. Taken to Chicago at 6 and resided there since. Father was one of Gary's first policeman and fireman. Attended Holy Cross Grammar School, Chicago, for 8 years and De La Salle High School for 1 year. Forced to leave High School and go to work to help in support of family. Self-educated since, being an omnivorous reader of books, newspapers, etc., especially those dealing with politics, religion and history.

At 8 years of age began selling fruits and vegetables to people in their homes, and has been in business for himself ever since. As result of intimate acquaintance with people of all races and creeds and farmers and produce merchants from whom he purchased daily commodities at Chicago produce markets, he believes he has knowledge of human nature second to none. Further, he believes that next to necessity of basic Christian education in home and family circle, and grade and Sunday School, nothing so civilizes and humanizes a person as close association with all types of people, especially in intimacy of their homes and knowledge of their personal problems living their daily lives.

Quit Fruit and Vegetable Business in 1936, and went into furniture moving business under name of "Daly Bros." until 1940. Then started as jobber of stools, chairs and tables to restaurants, schools, churches, taverns, etc. under name of "American Stool & Chair Co". Has been in that business ever since, as sole owner and operator, located on Chicago's South Side.

Married February 10, 1948, to Alice Ainley Brennan, a widow, popularly known as "Dolly". Three children, Christine Alice 7; Lawrence Joseph, Jr. 6; and Christopher John 4. Another daughter, Carol Patricia, 18, by previous marriage, lives with her mother, Dorothy Martin Daly. Lives with wife and family in own home, bought in February 1953, and located on Chicago's far South Side. Plays the violin for his own and family's enjoyment, and also for weddings, house parties, and square dances. Believes every child should have benefit of musical education and learn how to play an instrument, as music, by its very nature, greatly helps in humanizing character development of children.

Practical Christian, and member in good standing of his parish church, Seven Holy Founders Catholic Church, Calumet Park, Ill. Belongs to no Clubs, Fraternal or Civic Groups, as [illegible] time is fully preoccupied with family, business and politics. Dear Frank,

I am so sorry that it was not possible for me to attend the Governors' Conference in Williamsburg, Virginia, June 23-26. As you may have heard, I was in Yugoslavia shooting an interview with Tito.

I am disappointed that I could not be with you, for I know I would have found the discussion extremely interesting.

With best regards.

FULL USE OF EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES

A Memorandum Prepared for the Governors' Conference

Williamsburg, Virginia
June 23-26, 1957

The Council of State Governments
1313 East Sixtieth Street
Chicago 37, Illinois

Full Use of Educational Facilities

An operation as large and extensive as conducting the public schools of America has a tendency--sometimes an overwhelming tendency--to just "roll along," in old, familiar patterns. The tendency in most enterprises is to do things as they have been done, and this habit may be especially strong if the enterprise involves--as our school systems do--many thousands of operators, most of whom are long used to an established order of things.

Thus it is always difficult to "get out of the rut." To do so requires ingenuity, persistence, and perhaps daring. It certainly requires one of the hardest of all human tasks--to think along new lines.

But we have an educational crisis in America, one which is sufficiently acute to require that we get out of educational ruts if they exist.

We are all familiar with the form and the underlying background of the crisis. A great many of our schools are overcrowded, a great many are understaffed, a great many buildings in use are obsolete. There are too few teachers; and too many teachers lack the kinds of qualifications we desire.

This is, largely, a situation that has grown out of depression and war. During both the great depression and World War II we fell far behind in construction of school buildings. Consequently a large backlog of needed plant developed. Moreover, during the war many good teachers, and many good potential teachers, went into other occupations, and they have stayed there.

Then, after the war, we began to experience an enormous increase in our school-age population and our school enrollments. The birth rate soared. It continues at a very high level. As a result, the projections of school enrollment for the years immediately ahead--the years for which we must prepare now--"much exceed" even the swollen lists of today.

Still another factor is a part of our basic current situation. At a time when we need to retain and recruit highly qualified teachers at a rate beyond anything called for in the past, the status of school teaching has declined. We need not attempt here to trace all the reasons for this. To some extent it is a matter of the school teachers' pay as compared with earnings in other fields during this time of high prosperity. But it is not only a matter of pay. The standing of many teachers in their communities is high today; yet it surely will be agreed that, in general, the prestige of teachers--their position of community leadership--is not what it was when men and women now of middle age were going to school.

Whatever the full scope of the causes, we have the crisis: a crisis that presents the mounting problem of obtaining adequate personnel, adequate plant, adequate facilities--in fact, the problem of doing a job to which all states are committed.

Before turning our attention to consideration of particular means which may assist in resolving the crisis, another generalization is pertinent. We have a different kind of America today than we had forty, thirty or even fifteen years ago, before the vast industrial and commercial developments of our times, and when the rural segment of our population was relatively larger.

To what extent have our schools changed as the country has changed? Certainly they have changed much, have improved greatly. But school organization, it is fair to say, including the school year, is to a considerable extent the product of earlier days and of their social-economic and educational needs.

The solution of our school problems will, certainly, involve many approaches. The needed personnel, plant and facilities will cost money. At best they will cost much more than the states and the localities have provided for public education up to now, notwithstanding the continuous succession of record school appropriations to which we have become accustomed.

But is it true, as has sometimes been suggested, that we have no educational problems that cannot be solved with money? Is money, and still more money, the key--the only key--to the future?

Among the states generally conviction is rising that if, as expected, we shall be obliged to meet a much bigger school bill, we must make the best possible uses of the school facilities and the qualified school staff we now have.

It is to that problem that this memorandum is addressed. What can and should be done to assure that we make full, effective, sound and beneficial use of existing educational plant and personnel?

Three Current Proposals

Three proposals have become increasingly prominent in discussion of this question. They are based in part on a common assumption: that it is wasteful to permit the school plant to stand idle, for the most part, during three months of the year, and that it is also wasteful to use the school staff for only approximately three-fourths of the year.

The three proposals are essentially different.

One of them, the least sweeping and drastic of the three, is essentially, simply to add a summer school, with special curricular offerings, and with attendance optional, to the regular school year. This program is, of course, now in effect in many schools.

The second proposal, involving a much greater change, is to conduct the regular school classes on a year-round basis--each of the students to be in attendance for three of the four quarters, on a staggered basis, so that in each quarter a fourth of the students are on vacation, three quarters of them at school.

Under the third proposal, also, the schools would be organized on a year-round, four-quarter basis, but attendance of pupils for all four quarters would be required. There would be relatively short vacation periods. Thus each boy and girl would be at school for a total of ten and one half or eleven months. A variant of this scheme would make attendance in the fourth quarter optional, thus permitting students to speed their education if they and their parents wished them to do so.

The "Extra" Summer School

In the professional language of many educators, one of the chief purposes of adding a summer school--while retaining the present, standard two-semester system for regular classes from September through Spring--is to "enrich" the curriculum. Perhaps more important, the summer school also can offer special opportunity for students who have fallen behind to make up work in formal courses, and opportunity for gifted students to accelerate or broaden their education.

The "enrichment" aspect of the summer school can be accomplished through offerings of less formal instruction than may be possible during the regular school year in such fields as music, the visual arts, handicrafts, etc. Remedial courses can be presented for areas in which a pupil has not failed but in which he and his teachers think he can profit from special, additional attention. And recreational offerings, with instructional aspects, can be available for the school children.

The necessity of arrangements to permit special attention both for retarded pupils who need to "catch up," and to serve gifted pupils able to do more work than the average child, has been widely recognized. The need has become particularly pressing in schools with large classes, where the many varied problems of individual children are difficult to deal with on an individual basis. The summer school affords one means of assisting the unusual child, whether behind his class or potentially ahead of it. It is, of course, not the only means of providing such assistance.

Schools in a number of cities have had experience with year-round operation of this general type: retention of the standard school year and addition of summer schools of varying scopes. Attendance at the summer schools normally is voluntary. For most of the existing summer programs, tuition is required. In other cases attendance is free.

Staffing of the summer schools provides employment on a year-round basis for part, at least, of the teaching staff. In some schools with such plans all or most of the regular staff have been placed on a year-round contract. Thus the summer school system at least decreases the extent to which qualified teachers are obliged to be without their regular employment during extended periods each year. By obviating the necessity for some of them to take seasonal employment for which they have little liking or aptitude, it can contribute to improved teacher morale, and to improved prestige for teachers in the community. And the summer school avoids much, at least, of the waste of school plant that now customarily occurs during the vacation months.

Clearly, there are obvious advantages in the system. To the extent that remedial courses, acceleration courses, "enrichment" programs, and other special offerings are needed and desired, and to the extent that they cannot be presented adequately during the regular school terms, the summer school is an economical means of providing them or adding to them.

If a large number of students attend summer courses that accelerate their progress through school, this will in the long run somewhat reduce total enrollment. On the other hand, the optional, extra, summer school system is not in itself a means of handling larger school enrollments or of accomplishing economies in handling any regular school enrollments. Indeed, addition of extra summer school sessions, while retaining the standard September-June pattern for regular education, means more expense, not less. It may be well-advised expenditure--to meet problems that greatly need to be met. But it does little for a city or town which has the acute problem of overcrowding and teacher shortage.

The Four Quarter Staggered Plan

Much more fundamental than the simple addition of a summer school is the proposal to shift to a year-round, four-quarter, regular school year, with attendance staggered so that each student attends three of the four quarters, and one-fourth of the student body is on vacation in any given quarter.

With this system, the total capacity of a school building is increased by a fourth, or substantially a fourth.

Similarly, assuming classes of the same size as before introduction of the system, one teacher--working on a year-round basis except for a vacation comparable in length to that of most business and professional people--can teach about one-fourth more students.

Moreover, fewer textbooks are needed at any one time.

These are solid advantages. They invite close consideration now in view of the realities of our school crisis. They do not constitute a panacea. Nor does the plan appear to be applicable to schools, even if crowded, where total enrollments are too small to permit a workable plan of staggering attendance. But, if putting the system into effect answers existing needs and if it accords with sound teaching, the case for it would seem to be strong.

Without question, however, the plan presents problems.

First, it would interfere with the vacation plans and arrangements to which millions of American families have become accustomed. One quarter of the school children would be having their vacations in the summer, one fourth in the fall, one fourth in the winter, one fourth in the spring. In many cases--unless a program was possible under which children of the same family, in different grades, were to have the same quarter off--brothers and sisters would be on vacation at different times of the year. Even if that were not the case, it will be asked, to what extent could fathers and mothers arrange to have their vacations and vacation trips at the same time as their children? If they could not do so, would the improvement in the children's education resulting from the proposed system justify the sacrifice of common family vacation plans?

Less important--but likely to be a negative consideration in the minds of some parents--is the fact that under the staggered system it hardly would be possible to arrange for all the children who customarily associate with each other away from school to be in the same quarter group at school. Some would be on vacation, with their familiar neighborhood playmates at school, and vice versa.

Moreover, from quarter to quarter, some of the children who had gone to school together in one quarter would be separated the next. In the larger schools, where each grade comprises a number of classroom groups, careful arranging could to a large extent avoid such break-ups of groups familiar with each other. But to the extent that the break-ups occurred, and to the extent that stable associations contribute to a child's security and confidence, they would create problems. Could compensatory devices be developed to alleviate such individual problems? For example, would it help materially to develop programs that would make recreational facilities of the school available to all students throughout the year?

There already has been a certain amount of American experience with the four-quarter staggered system. Bluffton, Indiana, experimented with it as far back as 1904. By 1925 several other communities had some or all of their schools on four-quarter, staggered plans. By 1930 few retained them, however; and in 1952 a survey of all cities over 30,000 population and some smaller ones showed no such systems in operation.

The evidence available from the past experiments is not decisive for an examination of the advantages and disadvantages that a year-round, staggered plan could have today. The fact that they were dropped does not necessarily mean that other programs, like them in many respects, would fail today. Moreover, in the country at large, the need for new means of meeting our educational problems is greater now than when these experiments were tried. Some of the pros and cons advanced by school authorities who observed certain of the past experiments, nevertheless, are worth citing.

In Aliquippa, Pennsylvania, which had four staggered quarters from 1928 to 1939, a Superintendent of Schools indicated that its high school, with a nine-month capacity of 1,650 students, was able to handle 2,200 under the year-round plan. Another Superintendent who operated under the Aliquippa program summarized a number of advantages and disadvantages of the four-quarter, staggered system as he evaluated it. Besides emphasizing the more economical use of school facilities and textbooks, he indicated that the plan permitted students a better chance to make up work following extended absence, and that it permitted more frequent evaluation of pupils' work than was feasible under the standard school year program. Among disadvantages he indicated difficulty in carrying on repairs, painting and maintenance work in the schools; frequent changes of teachers on account of vacations, etc.; the impossibility of keeping groups of pupils intact in smaller schools; waste of pupil time at the end of one quarter and the beginning of the next; undesirable vacation times for many pupils; and a much increased administrative and supervisory load. Yet, on balance, he felt that the advantage appeared to be with the four-quarter plan from the standpoint of pupil achievement--and this with considerable economy in the school budget.

At Ambridge, Pennsylvania, the Principal of the Junior and Vocational High School pointed out in 1934, after two years' operation of the staggered four-quarter system, that it had relieved a greatly overcrowded condition--the objective for which it was created. Fifty-four of the sixty-five classroom teachers in the high school indicated at the end of the first year of the plan that they considered it a success. Among advantages noted by teachers was more extensive use of textbooks, reference and library material, and shop and laboratory equipment. Teachers cited among disadvantages a decline in pupil-teacher relationships and loss of instructional time as a result of school reorganization every three months.

More recently, a number of communities have considered adoption of year-round plans on the staggered attendance basis. In 1955 a committee appointed by the Los Angeles Superintendent of Schools weighed possible pros and cons of such action. Its observations were mixed. The plan, it said, might make it unnecessary to build certain schools that otherwise would be required, and thus could effect large savings. Among other possible advantages it pointed to a reduction in the extent to which teachers would need to take nonprofessional jobs in the summer, and the consequent improvement of their professional status. Among objections, in addition to considerations cited in experience reports noted above, the Los Angeles group indicated that requests for frequent exceptions to any established pattern of scheduling would create difficulties. For example, unless exceptions were made, families would have their children home for vacation periods at different times. As for potential obstacles to the plan, the committee labelled "community inertia" one of the most serious.

In sum, what the reports of very limited past experience indicate, and what more recent studies of future possibilities drive home is that the plan has highly attractive features and that it involves important problems.

It is, to repeat, no "cure all" for the school crisis. As regards money, it cannot in most cases obviate larger appropriations and more building for our burgeoning school enrollments. In itself, it involves expense as well as savings. If an existing staff of teachers works the year round instead of leaving the system for the summer, the teacher payroll rises. If the buildings are used intensively all year, maintenance costs rise and buildings depreciate somewhat more rapidly. Yet--if overcrowding and understaffing are to be corrected--it is distinctly cheaper to do this by utilizing existing facilities and staff efficiently, on a year-round basis, than to depend entirely upon new construction and induction of still more teachers.

As regards the preferences, morale and status of teachers, it is probable that no system of scheduling could answer equally well for all. Some teachers can obtain jobs for the summer that pay more than they receive at school, and would be reluctant to give up the prospect of such jobs. Some may simply not wish to work at all in summer. For the majority, however, it would seem reasonable to assume that all year, professional employment--without the uncertainty involved in seeking summer positions, and without the decrease in prestige that can come from taking unskilled jobs--would increase the attractiveness of teaching careers.

As regards the pupils, their needs are the basis for all other considerations. If a fair test of the plan proves that it creates difficulties for the children that outweigh advantages to them, obviously the plan should be dropped in any given school system. But if it can contribute signally to ending the double shift that exists in many schools today, and if it can help to assure the children well qualified teachers, these gains will loom large.

Finally, as regards the parents--who in the last analysis will decide whether a round-the-calendar school program is to be had and maintained--disruptions of vacation and other family arrangements might be serious. But the education of their children is fundamental. If the year-round staggered plan is feasible from the standpoint of family living, and if it can give the children a better education than they otherwise could receive, parents would not seem likely to prevent its adoption.

Four Quarters for All

The third proposal would establish the schools on a four-quarter, year-round basis with attendance of all pupils required in each quarter. Thus no staggering would be involved. Each child would go to school when every other child did. All would have their vacations at the same time.

With time off for brief Christmas and spring vacations, and with a somewhat longer period of holidays at the beginning or end of summer, the school year might include, in all, ten and a half or eleven months.

The result, in terms of enrollments, would not be to reduce the number of pupils in any given grade in school. But it would accelerate the progress of all the children through school--so that after the plan had been in effect for a few years, it would result in enrollments lower than would obtain were the present school year to continue. The pressure on teaching staffs and physical plant would decrease accordingly.

This reduction would certainly be considerable. Just how much it would be would depend largely on policy decisions as to required time for completing given programs of study. If the four quarters were considered adequate for completing work that now takes approximately one and a third years, and if the new plan went into effect with the first grade, a pupil would go through the primary grades in six instead of eight years, and through high school in three instead of four. Thus, after nine years, the total enrollment--primary grades through high school--might be a fourth less than it would be if the present system were continued. If the plan were applied to high school alone, high school enrollment might be a fourth less.

However--assuming some summer vacation, say of three or four weeks--the pupil's school year would not actually be one-fourth longer than school years usually are now. Conceivably, therefore, the new system might mean moving a child through the primary grades in seven years instead of eight. He might then go through high school--in which many authorities believe student work loads are on the light side now--in three years instead of four. Thus, in the total public school program, twelve years would be reduced to ten, and total enrollment might be about one-sixth less than if the present terms continued.

Various of the advantages and potential disadvantages of the four-quarter, staggered system obviously apply to four quarters of required work. But there are marked differences.

Year-round attendance may commend itself on two grounds, particularly, over the staggered basis.

First, it would keep all pupils on an equal footing as regards vacation periods, and it would keep natural groupings of children together, in the class rooms, in the families, and in the neighborhood play grounds. It would relieve school authorities of making difficult choices as to which group should have its vacation in the favored summer months, which group in the fall, winter, or spring, as would be necessary with the staggered plan.

Secondly, it would enable students to get more education in a given span of years than is now possible or would be possible under the staggered program. Of special importance for students who will go on to college--as an increasing proportion mean to do--it would permit completion of preparations for entering productive and remunerative work earlier. In the case of many young people who would like to proceed to specialized postgraduate university work or professional schools, shortening the preparation for college by three years might be a large factor in determining whether the added years of study after the bachelor's degree are worth while. To the extent that it is socially desirable to increase the number of men and women with such specialized postgraduate training, this may be an important public consideration.

Against the proposal to require four quarters of schooling each year, some authorities will contend that it would press the pupils too much, that it might discourage them, and that acceleration of the learning process could weaken the quality of education. Other authorities will differ on such points. They may, in fact, assert that--besides accelerating education--extension of the school year would increase opportunity for counseling services and other kinds of individual attention to meet the children's needs.

On one difficulty, however, most would agree: Unless the four required quarters are widely adopted, the young people who go through school under the plan, graduating from high school at from 14 to 16 years of age instead of 17 or 18, will be "out of their age group" at college. On the other hand, if most, or even a very substantial number of elementary and secondary schools adopted the four required quarters, this disadvantage would decrease or disappear.

There has been some American experience with year-round, four-quarter attendance at school. Newark, New Jersey, operated such a system from 1912 to 1931, but with attendance in the fourth quarter optional. Nashville, Tennessee, had a similar program from 1924 to 1932. Here, also, fourth-quarter attendance was optional, and if a student was to attend only three quarters, he could choose which three.

There has been considerable debate as to the value of these and other potential versions of an optional four-quarter plan. Since the programs thus far offered have differed from the proposal now under consideration in that they were optional--and also in that they were isolated experiments--they do not have decisive bearing in the present context. It is worth noting, however, that the Newark and Nashville plans clearly received a high degree of acceptance during their periods of operation. In Newark, year-round enrollment ran as high as 75 per cent of total enrollment. In Nashville the summer enrollment at one time reached two-thirds and was reported as usually exceeding 50 per cent of that of the regular school year.

If a year-round system were desired, with attendance required through all the terms offered, it would be possible, of course, to adopt it on a two-semester rather than a four-quarter basis. The first semester might simply begin earlier than it does now, the second semester could end later. If exceptions were to be made for any pupils, however, to permit extended vacations or leaves while regular school sessions were proceeding, organization of the year on a four-quarter basis would have obvious advantages.

A Time for Experiment?

As of today, too many problems are apparent in connection with a regular year-round plan, staggered or non-staggered, to permit its nationwide adoption. But, in the view of numerous authorities, some round-the-calendar system is well worth experimental adoption within certain areas or certain states.

It is by experiment that difficult problems usually are solved, when they are solved. Experiments are proceeding today with bearing on many important facets of our school problem: experiments with educational television, for example, and experiments with the use of teachers' aides, who can handle some of the less exacting tasks of well qualified teachers and permit the latter, accordingly, to work with more children. The question whether the year-round school should also be the subject of widespread experiment in the very early future is a valid subject for searching consideration and debate.

On one aspect there doubtless can be substantial agreement among responsible public leaders: there is nothing sacrosanct about the present, standard school year. It was developed for an America far different from ours today.

At one time, many of the older farm children attended school chiefly in winter, when they weren't needed on the farm. Their younger brothers and sisters didn't attend in winter, because the roads and weather were bad, but went to school in summer. In numerous farm families all able-bodied members stayed at home to work in late spring and early fall. In some of the larger cities, meantime, many children attended school almost the entire year--a pattern that, among other results, helped accelerate the education of numerous immigrant boys and girls. After the turn of the mid-19th century, the terms of rural schools gradually lengthened, those in cities shortened. And recently the trend in the cities, again, has been to longer school years.

It may be that the current, standard school year, in which the school plant, the school staff and the school facilities cease functioning for the summer, best meets our needs. If so, it is not just because we are used to it. One critic has asserted that "the present American 'school year' has little to support it nowadays except tradition and ponderous inertia." If close consideration and experiment convince us that that is so, and that we are in a rut, we can get out of it. If close consideration and experiment convince us, instead, that we have solid reason for essentially the same regular school year that is standard now, we can still consider means for using our school plant and staff more extensively for constructive, optional summer programs.

Questions for Discussion

1. Would operation of public schools on a year-round, quarterly basis, each pupil attending during three of the four quarters, reduce the amount of new construction required and assist in overcoming the shortage of qualified teachers?

2. Would the over-all financial effects of such a plan produce substantial savings?

3. Would the plan strengthen the professional status of teachers and make teaching a more attractive profession?

4. Is such a plan feasible? --
   A. From the standpoint of family vacations and family living?
   B. From the standpoint of school administration?

5. What are the key difficulties that such a plan could be expected to raise in practice?

6. Do the plan's advantages outweigh the disadvantages? Is it reasonable to assume that through experimentation and study the difficulties could be materially reduced?

7. If a year-round school year is adopted--with the standard practice requiring attendance of pupils for three quarters on a staggered basis--should provision also be made to permit certain students to attend for four quarters and thus accelerate their education?

8. Instead of a staggered system, should attendance for four quarters, with brief vacation periods, become the standard practice for all pupils?

9. What advantages and difficulties appear to be most prominent in such a plan as compared with a four-quarter staggered system?

10. If a school does not adopt a year-round program for regular classes, should it consider adding a special summer program to the present standard school year, with attendance optional? What should such a program include?

11. If such an optional summer program is desirable, can we afford it?

12. Assuming a decision to operate the schools on a round-the-calendar basis, how should a state go about the establishment of such a system?

Dear Ed:

We hope you are planning to attend the Governors' Conference in Williamsburg, Virginia, June 23-26.

One of the most important topics on the agenda of the Governors' Conference will be -- discussion of ways and means to secure more effective and extensive use of the multi-billion dollar facilities -- plant, equipment, and personnel -- which the states have in the realms of elementary and secondary education. To put it another way, should our elementary and secondary schools be operated on a round the calendar basis -- about eleven months, shall I say, with approximately thirty days vacation?

This is a subject of major and continuing interest around the country, and a number of states are beginning to experiment with it. Attached is a memorandum which we have developed which we hope will serve as a basis for the discussion at the Governors' Conference. What do you think, please, sir? We would greatly appreciate your reaction.

Looking forward to seeing you next month. With kindest personal regards, I am

Dear Frank:

Very many thanks for your cordial letter of April 8th.

Nothing would give me greater pleasure than to bring Janet and Casey down for the Governors' Conference in Williamsburg between June 23 and 26th, and I am still hoping that it may be possible to do so.

However, my radio and television plans for the latter part of June are still a little uncertain and I shall have to wait until they get firmed up before I can make any definite decision.

If we can manage it, I shall take advantage of your very kind offer to take care of reservations and other arrangements.

With all good wishes,

Sincerely,

Dear Ed:

It was grand to be with you and have an opportunity to talk with you again Thursday evening. It had been entirely too long since I had seen you.

Particularly was I interested in the discussion about Near East affairs, so interested, in fact, that this morning we had a little staff meeting to talk about it.

Attached is the tentative and preliminary program of the Governors' Conference in Williamsburg. Please, sir, make your arrangements to come down and bring the family. We would be delighted to have you and we will take care of all of your reservations and other arrangements. Maybe, please sir?

Press Agent in a Hurry

Sydney Stuart Baron

SYDNEY STUART BARON, who was dropped yesterday as publicity director of Tammany Hall, is a smooth young man from Brooklyn who went places in a hurry.

He has a public relations business estimated at $1,000,000 a year, a Madison Avenue address and a stomach ulcer.

Man in the News

He was born thirty-seven years ago in the borough of churches and synagogues, the son of an immigrant cobbler, and began working for a living when he was 11.

He made his mark the hard way—in the brass-knuckle worlds of press agentry and municipal politics.

On the ascent, he managed to attend the local public schools, St. John's University and classes at the American Institute of Banking. He became a press agent at the age of 18, starting with snatch-penny accounts. Today, an aluminum company, a brewery, a railroad and a large paint manufacturing concern are among his clients.

Ran for Council Post

In his political career, he has often found himself on different sides. He was an unsuccessful candidate for City Council from Brooklyn in 1941 on the Fusion ticket. Ten years later he had an appointive city office in a Democratic administration.

He first came to public attention in 1942 as secretary of a citizens' committeee that was harassing the late Edward J. Flynn, Democratic national committeeman and Bronx party leader.

Mr. Flynn and several others had been investigated by a Bronx County grand jury because Belgian paving blocks owned by the city were installed by municipal employes on Mr. Flynn's estate at Lake Mahopac, N. Y. The jurors cleared them of criminal intent.

Mr. Baron helped to revive the case in 1943, when President Franklin D. Roosevelt appointed Mr. Flynn Ambassador to Australia. As press agent for the Citizens Committee to Reopen the Flynn Case, Mr. Baron added his voice to a widespread clamor against the appointment. The opposition became so vociferous that the President, at the request of Mr. Flynn, withdrew the nomination.

Today, Mr. Baron and the Bronx County Democratic organization are political allies.

In 1950, after having served as Mayor Vincent R. Impelliteri's publicity aide, he was appointed by Mr. Impellitteri as a Deputy Commissioner of Marine and Aviation at $8,500 a year. The next year, Mr. Impellitteri appointed him director of promotion for the Department of Commerce, at a salary of $10,000.

The New York Times

Personable politician, poet

Mr. Baron left this post in 1952. He was soon hired as publicity man by Carmine G. De Sapio, leader of Tammany Hall and Mr. Impellitteri's political foe.

As head of Sydney S. Baron & Co., Mr. Baron directs a staff of thirty employes from a luxurious executive suite at 515 Madison Avenue. He commands sizable fees from his clients, except Tammany, which paid him $5,200 a year. The $160,000 contract he received from the Dominican Republic to organize an investigation into the disappearance of Dr. Jesús de Galíndez and to conduct a goodwill campaign brought him more publicity than his client.

Mr. Baron is personable and alert-looking and prefers expensively tailored suits. He lives in Brooklyn with his wife and four children.

In addition to a busy political and public-relations schedule, he teaches politics at New York University, has published poetry and is a member of many social and fraternal groups. He finds it necessary to make periodic hospital visits for the treatment of his ulcers.

Dear Ed:

A friend of mine named Richard Moravec, with whose work in films I am familiar, is doing a film on the Civil War that sounds to me as exciting as hell in terms of television. I am taking the liberty of urging him to get in touch with you in New York, or with somebody else at CBS you may designate, to discuss what he is doing. I would not have taken the liberty of telling him to write you if I did not believe he has something CBS ought to know about.

As you will see from my stationery, I have moved to Princeton. Although I am still teaching at Newark Rutgers, I am using the Princeton library for some historical research.

The only other news I can furnish is that in January Simon & Schuster will publish my first novel, called PURELY ACADEMIC. They have promised me to send you an advance copy in about a week. I hope it will make you laugh. I also hope it says something to the public about American education.

Warm regards,

May 9, 1956 Barry, Sir G.

Dear Professor Harris:

I am delighted that Sir Gerald Barry is to join your faculty. I have known him intimately for more than twenty years. As you know, his competence covers not only print but radio and television as well. He was, during the days as Editor of "The News Chronicle," a man of courage and perceptiveness, and I was particularly struck by his ability to get the best out of the younger members of his staff. The youngsters at UCLA who work under him will be fortunate indeed.

I have seen him work with many Americans, both government officials and journalists. He has an ability, rare amongst Englishmen, to work in terms of complete equality and informality with our fellow citizens. Barry is a man who brings yeast to any conversation, and who has real respect for journalism in all its forms and is able to impart that respect to others.

I think your Department is fortunate in securing his services, and I congratulate both you and Barry.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

You may be interested to know that our mutual friend Gerald Barry has agreed to join our faculty effective next January as Professor of Journalism.

We are now proceeding to process his nomination and appointment. In an organization as large as the University of California this is a somewhat complicated and elaborate procedure. You would help us a great deal if you could find time at your earliest convenience to write a letter of recommendation for Sir Gerald, addressed to me, which I can include in his appointment papers. Because you knew Sir Gerald during your various assignments in London, I am sure you can recommend him in most intimate and knowledgeable terms.

You may be further interested to know that while in New York I called on the Fund For the Republic and there is a good chance that they will provide a fellowship for Sir Gerald next year that will enable him to augment his income.

Dear Ed:

Many thanks for your kind chat.. it may take a month or two to relocate in New York but it is well worthwhile to meet real Americans. I may have to take any kind of work and attach a brief resume should any of your many interests disclose any need for assistance.

Best regards,

FWB.

Dear Mr. Murrow.

The greatest problem of Israel and perhaps of the world is the relation between Israel and her Arab neighbours.

I am convinced, that we can only find a solution if w the most progressive and humanitarian treatment to our minorities, enemy neighbours.

Therefore beg you to come and filter my work: I am foren Bedouin in the Negev.

On Wednesday morning I am holding my outpatient clinic in Tel East from Bee Sheba in the desert.

You can photograph there a most beautiful landscape, an exotic people and costumes, the women have here been filmed very beautiful.

Dear Herman:

Thank you for your letter of January 9th.

Unfortunately, I have nothing in my shop to offer Michael Macdonald. He certainly sounds like an interesting character. However, as you remark, my contacts are numerous and if I do run into something that seems suitable for him, I will certainly let you know.

Many thanks for your kind invitation for the Marrows to visit the Beukemas. Nothing would give us more pleasure and we both hope that an opportunity will afford sometime in the near future.

With all good wishes,

Sincerely,

Dear Ed:

Our last direct contact occurred in a day when a certain U.S. senator, not unlike Nasser in his ambitions and lack of scruple, was headline news. Now, as then, I write to make a request.

I have a personal interest in backing the efforts of one Michael Macdonald, who wrote to you in 1954 asking whether there might be an opening for him in your organization. My efforts in his behalf cover a period of roughly ten years. However, I have never set eyes on him. Despite that fact, I have kept in fairly close touch with him throughout the period and regard him as a friend. The reasons will appear in the enclosed record. Some of it is hazy as to dates, inasmuch as my West Point files were left in storage in Washington when I came overseas to my current assignment. The substance of my comment is, however, correct.

I first learned about Macdonald through Dr. George Lipsky (Major, USA) a year or two after VE Day. Lipsky had served in my department at West Point during the war, then went back to teaching at the University of California. As you will see, the record is quite a saga. Few youngsters of his age have suffered more frustrations, all stemming from the terrible fact that he was born in England. When I recall my wartime appearances before the Craig Board in the Pentagon to support the applications of several foreigners for commissions in the Army, this postwar fear of them is beyond my ken. Hangover from l'affaire McCarthy? Incidentally, all of my proteges, including an Austrian count and a Polish count, got their commissions and made grand records.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow 9 January 1957

Macdonald is, I am sure, rather bitter over his experience. At the same time I know of no person, native born or naturalized, more fully committed to the fundamental ideals of American democracy. To be sure, I repeat that I have had no personal contact with the man. On the other hand, the comments from all who have worked with him add up to a score that any youngster could envy.

I realize that your outfit may have no spot where he would fit to advantage. Your range of contacts, however, is such that you may now or in the near future see a place where his assets would be fully used, and where the ceiling is high enough to spur his efforts.

All the best to Mrs. Murrow and yourself from the Beukemas.

Faithfully yours,

P.S. If ever your travels bring you this way, there's a room waiting for you in our billet, - a double. So, bring Mrs. Murrow along. The job? In a spare moment, glance at the enclosed catalogue. My sector of the over-all operation shows on p.4. Enrollments topped 9,000 in September. Down a bit in our second term, all because the Nasser chap curtailed gas supplies. Many of our students in the U.K. and France could not get to class.

MICHAEL G. MACDONALD

1 - English-born, sixth generation of a family that has furnished a succession of officers for the Armed Forces, diplomats, jurists, etc. His father was in the British Foreign Service (ambassador, I believe) in Tokyo during Michael's early boyhood.

2 - Received appointment to Sandhurst at age 17. Took advantage of a nationwide exam for a University of California scholarship. Won it.

3 - Arriving in New York, he took immediate steps to secure U.S. citizenship. Went on to California.

4 - A letter from Dr. Lipsky described Macdonald as the most brilliant freshman in California's history. However, Macdonald had his heart set on West Point. Lipsky insisted that, if entered there, he would stand first in his class and would be first captain of the Corps of Cadets.

5 - The British Embassy agreed to make the pro forma request for Macdonald's admission to USMA. When they learned of his action to secure U.S. citizenship, they dropped the effort.

6 - Macdonald decided that the way to a commission was via the ranks. Enlisted. Was assigned to the Monterey Intelligence School. Some weeks later, the sudden illness of an instructor (lieut.Col.) led to his being put on the platform, apparently as a joke. According to his commander, "Macdonald did a field officer 's job for months, - superbly." Twice he was designated for OCS; each time Army regulations about foreigners barred him. In the meanwhile the Korean War was under way.

7 - Macdonald applied for combat duty; got into some difficulty because of his insistence. Found himself immobilized in an embarkation camp. Asked for my help. Gen. Van Fleet, responding to my letter, had him shipped to Korea at once. Got the combat experience he wanted, - with an armored cavalry unit. Efforts to give him a battlefield commission again snagged by his English citizenship.

8 - An attack of encephalitis sent him to hospital in Tokyo for a prolonged period. Thence he was assigned to an intelligence unit in that city. Again a record of superb service but nothing doing toward a commission.

9 - On completion of his military service, Macdonald returned to the University of California to round out his education. Married an American girl and started raising a family.

10 - On my suggestion, he was interviewed by CIA for a job, but the old bugbear of foreign taint once more blocked him, although he had by that time been naturalized.

11 - I had considerable correspondence with Congressman Walter, looking to expedited naturalization for any foreigner serving in our Armed Forces provided he could show a record of outstanding service. The replies were what you might expect. Macdonald finally went the full gamut of five years' "probation" before achieving his objective.

SECTION I

A BRIEF GLANCE AT THE UNIVERSITY OF MARYLAND OVERSEAS PROGRAM

The University of Maryland Overseas Program, serving U.S. personnel (military and civilian), operates at present in twelve Allied countries in Europe, Africa, and the Middle East. It is an arm of the College of Special and Continuation Studies, a college whose off-campus courses were first made available to military personnel at the Pentagon in 1947. It operates overseas in cooperation with the Armed Forces Education Program at 168 Education Centers.

The opportunity to initiate or continue college level work and at the same time perform a full-time job within the framework of the Armed Forces—such was the idea behind the Pentagon experiment. The experiment flourished. By 1949 some of the military personnel who had begun their Maryland work at the Pentagon in 1947 anticipated transfer to Europe.

At the request of the Armed Forces, the University conducted a survey in the European Command. On October 31, 1949, Maryland classes began at Armed Forces Education Centers in Berlin, Frankfurt, Heidelberg, Munich, Nuernberg, and Wiesbaden. The registration of 1,851 students for the first term was far greater than had been anticipated. Since that time, the program was expanded to serve over 17,450 students during the past academic year with a total of 31,745 course enrollments and a roving faculty of over 300. Overseas centers now range from the Highlands of Scotland to the mosques of Turkey.

An overseas administrative office was established in Heidelberg in April 1950. This office now has a staff comparable to that found on most campuses. Its functions range from directing the program to reviewing admission records, recording grades, collecting fees, ordering and distributing texts and reference books, as well as assigning staff members to the 168 Armed Forces Education Centers. The final authority over the various Heidelberg divisions rests with the parent units at College Park, Md.

It should be stressed that courses given by the University of Maryland Overseas Program are resident courses awarding regular college credit based on the semester hour system. The student may register for a degree overseas and earn it overseas, as do many military career-men. On the other hand, he may transfer his credit to another university when he returns to the United States and civilian life. If he is a recent high school graduate, or has been away from formal study for several years, he can take up college work as soon as he arrives overseas. If a student's college career has been interrupted, he can resume it.

For briefing and specific information about the University's courses at any particular installation, the prospective student should visit his local Education Center and speak with the civilian Education Adviser and the Education Officer. They offer, in almost every instance, University of Maryland classes as an integral part of their over-all education program. They in turn coordinate their plans with the Overseas Administrative Centers of the University of Maryland in Heidelberg or London.

The Pentagon and Overseas Programs, though the largest operations under the College of Special and Continuation Studies, are not the only off-campus activities of that college.

At the request of the Northeast Air Command, Maryland inaugurated a similar program at three Newfoundland bases and at Goose Bay, Labrador, in 1951. Classes were also extended to Keflavik, Iceland, in answer to the request of the Military Air Transport Service. In February, 1953, instructors were sent for the first time to three Greenland bases, two of which (Thule and Sondrestrom) are within the Arctic Circle. In addition there are over forty conveniently established Centers located throughout the State of Maryland and environs of the District of Columbia.

At Munich the University of Maryland has met the educational needs of college-age dependents and has established the Munich Branch, which convenes for two sixteen-week terms each year.* It is modeled on the typical coeducational, liberal arts college to be found in the United States.

Logistically supported sons and daughters of U.S. personnel (military and civilian) stationed overseas may enroll. The curriculum includes freshman and sophomore courses only, and since the subjects studied parallel courses offered at similar Stateside institutions, the student may for this reason carry back his credits to the college where he expects to settle down to major concentration and a baccalaureate degree.

In addition to the academic facilities at the college, the student finds in Munich a city of innumerable cultural and recreational opportunities and also, immediately surrounding him, a small American campus: Available are bright, American-styled dormitories and classrooms and many typical extra-curricular activities. The "Campus" is located within the gates of McGraw Kaserne, Headquarters of the Southern Area Command and the Munich Sub-Area. The student body comes from overseas installations as widespread as Athens and London. Each member of the college is entitled to the military privileges and protection of the Southern Area Command, and by the same token each student is expected to accept the adult responsibilities that such privileges imply.

* A special information brochure is available upon request.

Statesman meets Aspirant: Governor and Mrs. Theodore R. McKeldin of Maryland greet Student Council President (Munich Branch) V. Harwood Blocker, Jr. and his student friend, Miss Paula Johnson, at the annual spring formal of the Munich Branch. Both Mr. Blocker's and Miss Johnson's parents are stationed in Athens.

SECTION II
OVERSEAS PROGRAM COURSE OFFERINGS

Courses taught in the Overseas Program are subject to the availability of qualified instructors. The administrative offices of the Overseas Program in Heidelberg and London control the scheduling of all courses.

BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

Students who expect to return to the Maryland campus and take a degree in the College of Business and Public Administration should adhere to prerequisites as stated in the Combined Catalogues, University of Maryland.

B.A. 10, 11. Organization and Control (2,2).

A survey course treating the internal and functional organization of a business enterprise. B.A. 11 includes industrial management, organization and control.

B.A. 20, 21. Principles of Accounting (4,4).

The fundamental principles and problems involved in accounting for proprietorships, corporations and partnerships. (In order to receive credit for B.A. 20, the student must also complete B.A. 21).

B.A. 160. Personnel Management (3).

This course deals essentially with functional and administrative relationships between management and the labor force. It comprises a survey of the scientific selection of employees, "in-service" training, job analysis, classification and rating, motivation of employees, employee adjustment, wage incentives, employee discipline and techniques of supervision, and elimination of employment hazards.

B.A. 163. Industrial Relations (3).

A study of the development and methods of organized groups in industry with reference to the settlement of labor disputes. An economic and legal analysis of labor union and employer association activities, arbitration, mediation, and conciliation; collective bargaining, trade agreements, strikes, boycotts, lockouts, company unions, employee representation, and injunctions.

B.A. 165. Office Management (3).

Considers the application of the principles of scientific management in their application to office work.

B.A. 166. Business Communications (3).

A systematic study of the principles of effective written communications in business. The fundamental aim is to develop the ability to write clear, correct, concise, and persuasive business letters and reports.

B.A. 169. Industrial Management (3).

Studies the operation of a manufacturing enterprise. Among the topics covered are product development, plant location, plant layout, production planning and control, methods analysis, time study, job analysis, budgetary control, standard costs, and problems of supervision. An inspection trip to a large manufacturing plant is made at the latter part of the semester.

B.A. 179. Problems in Supervision (3).

A case study course of supervisory problems divided into difficulties with subordinates, with associates and with superiors. The purposes of the course are to apply general principles of industrial management to concrete cases and to extract principles from a study of cases.

B.A. 180, 181. Business Law (4,4).

Legal aspects of business relationships, contracts, negotiable instruments, agency, partnerships, corporations, real and personal property, and sales.

ECONOMICS

Econ. 31, 32. Principles of Economics (3,3).

Students who have completed Econ. 37 may receive credit for either Econ. 31 or 32 but not for both.

A general analysis of the functioning of the economic system. A considerable portion of the course is devoted to a study of basic concepts and explanatory principles. The remainder deals with the major problems of the economic system.

Econ. 131. Comparative Economic Systems (3).

Prerequisite, Econ. 32 or 37.

An investigation of the theory and practice of various types of economic systems. Examination and evaluation of capitalistic system; analysis of alternative economic systems: fascism, socialism, and communism.

Econ. 136. International Economic Policies and Relations (3).

Prerequisite, Econ. 32 or 37.

A descriptive and theoretical analysis of international trade; contemporary problems facing international trade; the impact of governmental policy upon international commercial relations.

Econ. 137. The Economics of National Planning (3).

Prerequisite, Econ. 32 or 37.

An analysis of the principles and practice of economic planning with special reference to the planning problems of Great Britain, Russia and the United States.

Econ. 140. Money and Banking (3).

Prerequisite, Econ. 32 or 37.

A study of the organization, functions, and operation of our monetary, credit, and banking system; the relation of commercial banking to the Federal Reserve System; the relation of money and credit to prices; domestic and foreign exchange; and the impact of public policy upon banking and credit.

ENGLISH

Students may not receive credit for course work in English 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 or 6 if they receive such credit on the basis of GED tests.

Eng. 1 & 2. Composition and American Literature (3,3).

Grammar, rhetoric, and the mechanics of writing; frequent themes. Readings in American literature.

Eng. 3 & 4. Composition and World Literature (3,3).

Prerequisite: Eng. 1-2.

An introduction to world literature, foreign classics being read in translation. Practice in composition.

Eng. 5 & 6. Composition and English Literature (3,3).

Prerequisite: Eng. 1-2.

An introduction to major English writers. Practice in composition.

Note: Students may combine English 3 and 6 or 4 and 5, but credit will not be given for more than 6 hours of work in 3-4 and 5-6.

Eng. 14. Expository Writing (3).

Prerequisite: Eng. 1 and 2 or successful completion of GED test I. Required of students who receive GED credit for twelve hours of English. Credit for this course may be applied toward the elective requirements.

Methods and problems of expository writing. Practice in several kinds of informative writing, including the preparation of technical papers and reports.

Eng. 115, 116. Shakespeare (3,3).

Twenty-one important plays.

Eng. 144. The Modern Drama (3).

The drama from Ibsen to the present.

Eng. 145. The Modern Novel (3).

Major English and American novelists of the Twentieth Century.

GEOGRAPHY

Geog. 20, 21. Economic Geography (3,3).

Cannot be taken for credit by students who have had Geog. 1 & 2 or 60 & 61.

A study of the nature and geographic distribution of the world's resources, its agricultural, mineral and other industries in relation to such basic factors as land forms, climates, population centers, and trade routes.

Geog. 35. Map Interpretation and Map Problems (3).

Interpretation of landforms and man-made features on American and foreign maps. Functions, use, and limitations of various types of maps, with emphasis upon topographic maps.

Geog. 41. Introductory Climatology (3).

Climatic elements and their controls, the classification and distribution of world climates, and relevance of climatic differences to human activities.

Geog. 140. Soviet Lands (3).

The natural environment, geographic factors in the expansion of the Russian State and the geography of agriculture, of industry and of transport. Political geography of the U.S.S.R. (Not offered in 1956-57.)

Geog. 190. Political Geography (3).

Geographical factors in national power and international relations. "Geopolitics" and "geostrategy."

GOVERNMENT AND POLITICS*

G&P 1. American Government (3).

A comprehensive study of governments in the United States and of their adjustment to changing social and economic conditions.

FOREIGN LANGUAGES AND LITERATURE

A student who has had only one year of a foreign language in high school may take courses 1 and 2 of that same language and receive full University of Maryland credit. A student who has had two years or more of a language in high school and wishes to enroll for the same language in the Overseas Program may not receive credit for the first semester (Language 1). If he wishes, he may take the first semester course as review without credit.

Language 1 and Language 2 are considered as a unit; therefore, credit toward a degree will not be granted in Language 1 until Language 2 has been completed. A student who has finished Language 2 without having taken the prerequisite Language 1 course may meet the curricular requirement either by taking 9 additional hours in the same language or by taking 3 additional hours in the same language, plus 6 hours in another.

The conversation courses, Language 3, 8 & 9, cannot be counted toward the 12-hour foreign language requirement except by those students who have exempted or are otherwise ineligible to receive credit for Language 1 and/or 2.

A student with a high level of competence in a foreign language who is for any reason ineligible or unable to take credit by special examination* may request a waiver of the 12-hour language requirement. The request must be addressed to the Dean of the College in which the student is registered. If the waiver is granted, the student is exempted from taking any foreign language courses, but he must make up the 12 hours credit in electives.

FRENCH

French 1, 2. Elementary French (3,3).

Elements of grammar, with conversational drill and reading of simple texts.

French 3. Elementary Conversation (1).

Prerequisite: Completion of French 1.

French 4, 5. Intermediate Literary French (3,3).

Grammar review, conversation, reading of texts designed to give some knowledge of French life, thought and culture.

French 8, 9. Intermediate Conversation (2,2).

Practical exercises in conversation, based on material dealing with French life and customs.

French 71, 72. Review Grammar & Composition (3,3).

Prerequisite, French 17 or equivalent.

For students who, having a good general knowledge of French, wish to become more proficient in the written and spoken language.

French 161, 162. French Civilization (3,3).

May be counted as history credit in meeting major or minor requirements. Lectures in English.

French life, customs, culture, traditions. First term: historical development of the nation and its people. Second term: present-day France. Assigned readings in either English or French. Field trips.

Elements of grammar, with conversational drill and reading of simple texts.

German 3. Elementary Conversation (1).

Prerequisite: Completion of German 1.

German 4, 5. Intermediate Literary German (3,3).

Grammar review, conversation, reading of texts designed to give some knowledge of German life, thought and culture.

German 8, 9. Intermediate Conversation (2,2).

Practical exercises in conversation, based on material dealing with German life and customs.

German 161, 162. German Civilization (3,3).

May be counted as history credit in meeting major and minor requirements. Lectures in English.

A survey of two thousand years of German history, outlining the cultural heritage of the German people, their great men, traditions, customs, art and literature, and music, with special emphasis on the interrelationship of social and literary history. Assigned readings in either English or German. Field trips.

ITALIAN

Italian 1, 2. Elementary Italian (3,3).

Elements of grammar, conversational drill and reading of simple texts.

Italian 3. Elementary Conversation (1).

Prerequisite: Completion of Italian 1.

Italian 4, 5. Intermediate Italian (3,3).

Grammar review, conversation, reading of texts designed to give some knowledge of Italian life, thought and culture.

Italian 8, 9. Intermediate Conversation (2,2).

Practical exercises in conversation, based on material dealing with Italian life and customs.

Italian 161, 162. Italian Civilization (3,3).

May be counted as history credit in meeting major or minor requirements. Lectures in English.

An introductory study of the Italian people. Against a background of political and social history, a survey of Italian literature and cultural traditions. Assigned readings in either English or Italian. Field trips.

RUSSIAN

Russian 1, 2. Elementary Russian (3,3).

Elements of grammar, conversational drill and reading of simple texts.

Russian 3. Elementary Conversation (1).

Prerequisite: Completion of Russian 1 and 2 or the grade A or B in Russian 1.

Russian 4, 5. Intermediate Russian (3,3).

Grammar review, conversation, reading of texts designed to give some knowledge of Russian life, thought and culture.

SPANISH

Spanish 1, 2. Elementary Spanish (3,3).

Elements of grammar, conversational drill and reading of simple texts.

Spanish 3. Elementary Conversation (1).

Prerequisite: Completion of Spanish 1.

Spanish 4, 5. Intermediate Spanish (3,3).

Grammar review, conversation, reading of texts designed to give some knowledge of Spanish life, thought and culture.

Spanish 8, 9. Intermediate Conversation (2,2).

Practical exercises in conversation, based on material dealing with Spanish life and customs.

MATHEMATICS

Students who wish to enter Math. 10 are required to pass a placement test before enrolling. This University of Maryland test is administered at the local Education Center under the supervision of the Education Advisor. Students who have not recently pursued work in mathematics should take refresher work before attempting the examination. The Mathematics Supervisor at Heidelberg will upon request, furnish the Education Center with a recommended refresher course outline.

Math. 10. Algebra (3).

Prerequisite: One high school unit each of algebra and plane geometry, or equivalent.

Fundamental operations, factoring, fractions, linear equations, systems of linear equations, exponents and radicals, quadratic equations, complex numbers, logarithms, variation, arithmetic and geometric progressions, theory of equations.

Math. 11. Trigonometry and Analytic Geometry (3).

Prerequisite: Math. 10 or equivalent.

Trigonometric functions, solution of triangles, identities, addition formulas, rectangular coordinate system, the straight line and circle, conic sections.

MILITARY SCIENCE

M.S. 151. Military Logistics (3).

A study of logistics, including (a) the principles governing the national economic activities and resources necessary to support the armed forces; (b) a study of the principles and fundamentals of the elements of military logistics, including supply maintenance, transportation, hospitilization and evacuation, construction and logistics planning; (c) research by the student on a selected phase of logistics.

M.S. 153. Military Policy of the United States (3).

A study of our military history and our military concepts and policies, and their effects upon national objectives and national policies. An analysis of the factors which influence national policies, particularly military policy; an evaluation of the lessons to be learned from this historical study.

M.S. 154. Management of the Military Establishment (3).

A study of the need for intelligent and scientific management of the Armed Forces, including a consideration of the background of modern management and the emphasis on post-war management of the military establishment. A detailed evaluation of the current thoughts and philosophies of military management.

PHILOSOPHY

Phil. 123, 124. Philosophies Men Live By (3,3).

Electives for students who wish to acquaint themselves with the field of philosophy. Phil. 123 is not prerequisite to Phil. 124.

An exploration of the fundamental beliefs which determine what men make of their lives and of the world they live in. Each semester classic statements of these beliefs by great philosophers will be chosen for class discussion on the basis of their significance for the problems confronting modern man.

PSYCHOLOGY

Psych. 1. Introduction to Psychology (3).

A basic introductory course, intended to bring the student into contact with the major problems confronting psychology and the more important attempts at their solution.

Psych. 2. Applied Psychology (3).

Application of research methods to basic human problems in business and industry, in the professions, and in other practical concerns of everyday life.

Psych. 5. Mental Hygiene (3).

The more common deviations of personality; typical methods of adjustment.

Psych. 121. Social Psychology (3).

Psychological study of human behavior in social situations: influence of others on individual behavior, social conflict and individual adjustment, communication and its influences on normal social activity.

Psych. 131. Abnormal Psychology (3).

The nature, occurrence, and causes of marked psychological abnormalities, with emphasis on clinical rather than theoretical aspects.

Psych. 161. Industrial Psychology (3).

A survey course intended for those who plan to enter some phase of personnel work but who do not plan to undertake graduate study.

SOCIOLOGY

Soc. 1. Sociology of American Life (3).

Sociological analysis of the American social structure; metropolitan, small town, and rural communities; population distribution, composition and change; social organization.

Soc. 2. Principles of Sociology (3).

The basic forms of human association and interaction; social processes; institutions; culture; human nature and personality.

Soc. 51. Social Pathology (3).

Prerequisite: Soc. 1.

Personal-social disorganization and maladjustment; physical and mental handicaps; economic inadequacies; programs of treatment and control.

Soc. 52. Criminology (3).

Criminal behavior and methods of its study; causation; typologies of criminal acts and offenders; punishment, correction, and incapacitation; prevention of crime.

Soc. 105. Cultural Anthropology (3).

A survey of the simpler cultures of the world, with attention to historical processes and the application of anthropological theory to the modern situation.

Soc. 115. Industrial Sociology (3).

The social structure of American industry and the functions of members within industrial organizations; the status of the individual within the industrial organizations; the interaction of industry and society.

SPEECH

Speech 103, 104. Speech Composition and Rhetoric (3,3).

A study of rhetorical principles and models of speech composition in conjunction with the preparation and presentation of specific forms of public address. Speech 103 is a prerequisite to Speech 104.

Speech 133. Staff Reports, Briefings, and Visual Aids (3).

Prerequisite: Speech 103.

Lecture and laboratory work dealing with the techniques of military briefings, staff reports and visual aids.

Dr. James A. Storing with a group of his Government and Politics students from the Wiesbaden Air Force Education Center on a field trip to visit the headquarters of the West German Government in Bonn. They are shown in front of the American Embassy.

Speech 133 class, taught by Dr. Loren Reid, at the South Ruislip Air Force Education Center (England).

Dr. Roland A. Stromberg takes a group of Army students studying Europe in the World Setting of the 20th Century (History 175, 176) to the famous König Platz in Munich where Hitler often spoke.

SECTION III
COLLEGE OF MILITARY SCIENCE

Through the College of Military Science the Overseas Program offers courses of study designed primarily for armed services personnel or those desiring to follow a military career.

Two curricula are offered by the College of Military Science—the Military Affairs Curriculum and the Military Science Curriculum. These curricula lead to the degree of Bachelor of Science.

The primary purpose of the Military Affairs Curriculum is to offer interested students a broad education in subjects pertinent to military and public affairs, with emphasis on government and politics, and history.

The Military Science Curriculum is designed for those desiring to follow a military career. As a prerequisite for completion of this curriculum in the Overseas Program, a student must have been on active duty for at least one year and presently hold or have satisfactorily held a commission in one of the Armed Forces.

The first two years of these curricula are identical.

* Credit by examination may be permitted for these courses upon successful completion of the college level General Educational Development Tests. Students who received twelve credit hours in English by this means are required to complete English 14 through class credit. The credits earned in this course may be used as elective.

 Credit allowed for equivalent training in the Armed Forces. Not required of adult civilian students in the Overseas Program.

 The student may choose two years' study of one language, or one year each of two languages. See full explanation of language requirements on page 11 of this catalogue.

Note: A candidate for a Military Science degree achieves Junior Standing after being awarded 72 semester hours credit. 136 hours are needed for graduation. A "C" average must be maintained.

* Credit will be granted to those commissioned officers (Regular, Reserve, or National Guard) who have had one (1) year or more on active duty. Those students holding a commissioned rank but who have not had a full year on active duty as an officer may substitute an equivalent number of hours in courses numbered 100 or above.

 Credit allowed to those students holding commissions as Regular, Reserve, or National Guard officers.

 Electives must be taken under advisement and in terms of the objectives of the curriculum. At least six semester hours of electives must be courses numbered above 100.

SECTION IV
COLLEGE OF SPECIAL AND CONTINUATION STUDIES

The College of Special and Continuation Studies offers the Bachelor of Arts degree in General Studies. This degree program is designed to meet the education needs of mature off-campus students and provides optimum latitude in program planning to meet individual needs.

The Bachelor of Arts degree in General Studies provides opportunity for programs in the area of the social sciences. It is administered in co-operation with the various academic and department heads.

Summary of Bachelor of Art Degree Requirements

The Bachelor of Arts Degree in General Studies requires 120 semester hours of academic work for graduation. 56 academic hours constitutes Junior standing in this curriculum.

All applicants for this degree must meet the same admission requirements as those applying for other undergraduate degrees at the University of Maryland.

A student will elect a primary and secondary area of concentration. These areas would include the Department of Economics, History, Government and Politics, Sociology, Geography, and Psychology. In special cases, and with the permission of the Dean, the student may elect a primary concentration in other areas.

a. Primary Area—A student must elect 15 hours of 100 level courses in a single department listed above.

b. Secondary Area—A student must elect 21 hours of 100 level courses in one or more of the above listed departments or in departments that are related.

c. A student must pursue work in related fields. Only a systematic program of courses will be approved.

d. It is recommended that the 24 hours of elective credit in the junior and senior years include as many 100 level courses as possible.

Advanced Standing

The maximum combined credit allowed toward this degree for GED examination credit, correspondence credit and service school credit shall not exceed 36 semester hours.

Service School Credit

Military Service School credit will be considered up to 12 semester hours. Basic ROTC, Advanced ROTC, and Physical Activities credits will not be included in the maximum 12 hours allowed for Military Service credit. Only recognized Service School credits will be accepted. The additional seven semester hours allowed an officer in the Military Science curriculum is not allowed in the General Studies curriculum.

Advisement

A student working in General studies should seek guidance early in his studies. He should write directly to the Dean of the College of Special and Continuation Studies in College Park, Maryland, who has final jurisdiction, or he may request advice from the Office of Admissions in Heidelberg.

NOTE: For details of evaluation of credit by examination, GED tests, and correspondence courses, see pages 24-27: evaluation of credit by the University of Maryland.

SECTION V
ADMISSION AND REGISTRATION

Subject to the entrance requirements of the University of Maryland, all officers and enlisted personnel of the American Armed Forces, and American civilian personnel, including dependents, may enroll in the University of Maryland Overseas Program. Other nationals may also enroll by special permission.

ENTRANCE REQUIREMENTS

Students who expect to become candidates for degrees must be high school graduates or must have been granted a high school equivalency certificate. Applicants for admission who possess neither a high school diploma nor an equivalency certificate may enroll under the designation of Special Student. Such a student, however, cannot become a degree candidate until he has satisfied all entrance requirements.

ADMISSION

A. DEGREE-SEEKING STUDENTS may enroll in the College of Military Science and work toward a Bachelor of Science degree in (a) Military Science or (b) Military Affairs, or they may register in the College of Special and Continuation Studies and work toward a Bachelor of Arts degree in General Studies. A student may complete any of these three degrees while he is stationed overseas.

Students who wish to pursue a degree program must submit the following documents (obtained from the local Education Office at the time of first registration) to the Admissions Office, Heidelberg, not later than the end of their first term in the Overseas Program:

1. Preliminary information form.
2. Formal application for admission (Part I).
3. (a) Part II of the formal application for admission completed by the principal of the high school, or

   (b) Verification of the issuance of a high school equivalency certificate by a state board of education or by a high school principal. Documents are to be sent directly from the principal or issuing agency to the Admissions Office, Heidelberg, and are not to be sent by the student or Education Adviser.

   A high school record entered on a college transcript is not acceptable because the University requires an official record of individual course grades and the date of graduation.

4. Official transcript of credit from all collegiate institutions attended. Transcript(s) must be sent directly from the institution and not by the student or Education Adviser. Otherwise, a statement is required relative to the student's standing at the school attended.

5. Completed D/D Form 295 (evaluation of experience in the Armed Forces) in duplicate, to include statement of service. This form is available at all Armed Forces Education Centers and is not obtained from the University of Maryland.

6. GED Test results: If the student has taken the college-level GED Tests, the official report must be sent by USAFI, Madison 3, Wis., directly to the Admissions Office, University of Maryland, HAC, APO 403, N.Y., N.Y.

Getting these documents in as soon as possible is most important because, once assembled, they are immediately reviewed. It is the student's responsibility to complete his file. The student, after taking 12 hours with a "C" average in the Overseas Program, can then formally be accepted as an official degree candidate. Formal admission cannot be granted if even one document is outstanding.

B. NON-DEGREE-SEEKING STUDENTS may register in the Overseas Program as Special Students. Documents needed:

1. Preliminary information form.

2. Part 1 (only) of the formal application for admission must be completed and submitted to the Education Adviser for transmittal to Heidelberg at the time of first enrollment.

Credits earned may be applied to a degree with the University of Maryland or transferred to other colleges or universities in the United States. Courses taken in the Overseas Program are applicable to the other curricula in the University of Maryland (or to those of other academic institutions) in accordance with the requirements of the curriculum to be followed. The bulletins of these institutions outline the requirements of any particular curriculum. The student who has any question concerning application of overseas courses to a particular curriculum should correspond with the officials of the college or university where he intends to apply the credits earned in the Overseas Program.

Note: Admission to the University is achieved only by the acceptance of the formal application and supporting documents as indicated above.

EVALUATION OF CREDIT BY THE UNIVERSITY OF MARYLAND

All credit earned in the Overseas Program is considered resident credit and not extension work. This means that the University of Maryland considers the overseas credit identical to that earned on the University of Maryland campus.

The final thirty semester hours toward a University of Maryland degree must be taken in formal class work with Maryland either on campus or overseas.

In the College of Military Science: The maximum combined credit allowed for the degree of Bachelor of Science in Military Science (or Military Affairs) obtained by means other than class attendance in an approved degree-granting institution, shall not exceed 60 semester hours. These 60 hours incorporate the following:

a- up to 24 semester hours by GED tests or in combination with credit by examination (See pages 25 and 26).

b- up to 17 semester hours credit may be assigned for service schools as evaluated by the University of Maryland. However, if the student presents any work by correspondence from accredited institutions (a maximum of 12 hours is allowed), that total must be deducted from these 17 hours.

Basic ROTC and Physical Activities credit are not included in the 60 hours limitation.

In the College of Special and Continuation Studies: The maximum combined credit allowed for the degree of Bachelor of Arts in General Studies by GED examination credit, correspondence credit, and Service School credit shall not exceed thirty-six semester hours.

As soon as the Admissions file is complete and evaluated the student will be sent from Heidelberg an official curriculum check sheet indicating which transfer credit, GED credit and military credit are acceptable to the University of Maryland. The student retains this curriculum check sheet as a guide for all further work with the University of Maryland. Upon completion of 12 semester hours of course work with the University of Maryland with "C" average or better, the Admissions Office at Heidelberg will release the Statement of Advanced Standing (evaluation). This Statement of Advanced Standing will include all credit as indicated on the curriculum check sheet. Please note: This statement does not include the course work taken with Maryland. The evaluation plus the Maryland course work will appear on the transcript (a separate document), which is issued upon request by the Registrar's Office, Heidelberg.

Any student whose previous academic record, in high school or at another university, is not of a sufficiently high standard, will be required to complete fifteen rather than twelve semester hours with a "C" average in the Overseas Program before his Statement of Advanced Standing will be issued.

Advanced Standing credit is determined by the Director of Admissions and the Dean of the College of Military Science for the Military Science degree, and by the Dean of the College of Special and Continuation Studies for the General Studies degree.

The following credit is applicable to the degrees offered through the Overseas Program:

1. College-level GED tests. A maximum of 24 semester hours, if the student achieves the following scores required by the University of Maryland:

		Passing score
Test I	— 6 semester hours — English 1 & 2	65
Test II	— 6 semester hours — Social Science (Soc. 1, G&P 1)	60
Test III	— 6 semester hours — General Science	61
Test IV	— 6 semester hours — English 3 & 4	60

The local Education Center administers these tests through the services of the United States Armed Forces Institute. If a student fails to pass any part of this examination, the University of Maryland permits him to take one retest (in accordance with USAFI regulations) after six months. The student should note that the passing score for GED Test I with the University of Maryland is 65, which is ten points higher than the passing score required by the Armed Forces.

Credit for GED Test IV (English 3 & 4) will not be allowed until the student has established credit for English 1 & 2 either by successful completion of GED Test I, by transfer credit, by correspondence credit or by the Maryland courses English 1 & 2.

English 14 is required of all students who receive 12 semester hours of English credit by means of the GED Test. The GED Test must be taken in advance of English 14.

2. ROTC and Physical Activities. In the Military Science curriculum 16 hours of credit are allowed for basic ROTC and physical activities to those students who have had one or more years of military service. In the General Studies curriculum such credits are not assigned, but satisfy the general university requirement for graduation.

In the Military Science curriculum 12 semester hours are granted for advanced ROTC to holders of Regular, Reserve, or National Guard commissions.

3. Credit for Military Experience and Service Schools. In the Military Science Curriculum, 7 semester hours credit are assigned for Speech 127 & 128 and Military Science 152 to holders of Regular, Reserve or National Guard commissions who have served on active duty for one or more years as an officer.

Further, upon evaluation of the student's D/D Form 295 by the University of Maryland, up to 17 semester hours credit may be allowed in the Military Science Curriculum for acceptable completion of work in approved service schools. See section b, page 24, for further explanation. No more than 12 semester hours credit in General Studies is allowed for service schools.

4. Transfer Credit. The University of Maryland accepts credit from other accredited colleges and universities if the grade earned was "C" or better, provided the course is applicable to any of the curricula overseas.

5. Correspondence Credit. A maximum of twelve semester hours credit is accepted for correspondence courses successfully completed by students enrolled for degrees in the Overseas Program, provided those courses were given by an accredited institution which in turn accepts such credit toward its own degrees. A student planning to enroll in a correspondence course given by another institution should first write the Dean of the College of Military Science or the Dean of the College of Special and Continuation Studies (depending on the college in which he is enrolled), concerning acceptability of the course in his curriculum. Correspondence credit will not be accepted as part of the last thirty hours for a degree. The University of Maryland does not offer courses by correspondence.

6. Credit by Examination. The right to establish credit by examination is granted to those who have mastery of a subject area through experience, study, or research. The following conditions apply:

a. The applicant must have already been registered as a degree-seeking student and have completed at least 12 semester hours credit by classroom work.

b. Credit by examination will not be accepted for any of the final thirty credit hours.

c. No more than twenty hours credit can be granted by examination except when GED test credits are taken. Students who establish twenty-four hours credit by GED test are ineligible for further credit by examination, since credit by GED test and credit by examination may not total more than twenty-four hours.

d. A foreign student or naturalized citizen may not establish credit by examination in freshman or sophomore courses of his native language. A native-born American citizen's native language is defined as that language in which he first learned to read and write.

e. Credit by examination cannot be established in any foreign language course that is a prerequisite to a more advanced course in which credit has already been established by class attendance at the University of Maryland or another institution.

Students seeking credit by examination must submit a written application giving the exact designation of the course(s) for which credit is desired, as well as a detailed statement as to when, where and under what conditions knowledge of the subject was acquired. The application, along with the student's record, is forwarded by Heidelberg to the appropriate academic Department Head at College Park, who makes the final decision. Application forms may be obtained at the local Education Center. A check or money order covering the examination fee ($5.00 per credit hour) must accompany the application; this fee will be refunded if the application is disapproved. A grade of "C" or higher must be made in order to establish credit by examination. The examination fee is not refunded if the student fails to establish credit.

REGISTRATION

In order for a student to be officially registered for a course, he must complete the following documents:

1. One directory form—to be filled out the first time a student registers during any academic year. (This form need not be filled out each term that a student registers, only once during the academic year).
2. One course card listing his course(s) for the term.
3. Partial payment students (only) must complete the Army or Air Force partial payment contract.
4. Tuition payment must be received by the Education Center.

After these forms (and admission material) are complete, the student is issued an official class-admission card. Detailed instructions on registration procedures are sent by the University of Maryland to each Education Center that sponsors university classes.

There are five registration periods per year. These periods will be determined by the local Education Center in agreement with the Heidelberg or London offices. Registration, including payment of fees, closes on the day classes begin.

Most classes in the Overseas Program meet twice a week for eight weeks, three class hours each meeting. A total of forty-eight class hours make up a three semester hour course.

Mr. Charles Graham, Army Education Adviser at Robinson Barracks in Stuttgart, discusses student problems with Dr. Tim Gebhardt, veteran Maryland German Professor.

Counselling

Most Education Centers have an Education Adviser who will counsel the student at the time of registration. University of Maryland faculty members will schedule office hours and be available at the local Education Center for consultation. Whenever possible, incoming instructors will arrive at a particular installation on the Thursday before classes begin. They will hold conferences with prospective students on the Friday and Monday prior to the first class meeting.

Course Load and Standard of Scholarship

One course, or three semester hours, is considered a normal load for an Overseas student. Six to twelve hours a week are needed for study outside of the classroom for each course.

Students who have demonstrated their ability may enroll for nine hours credit (three courses) over a two-term period (including correspondence work). During his first enrollment, a student should not undertake more than one course. A student taking mathematics or language should not normally undertake a second course concurrently. Permission for an excess in class-load can be granted only by the Director's Office in Heidelberg (or by the London Office for students in the United Kingdom).

The Overseas Program reserves the right to request at any time the withdrawal of a student who cannot or does not maintain the required standard of scholarship.

An average of "C" is required for graduation from all colleges of the University of Maryland.

REGISTERING AS A VETERAN

I. Public Law 346 (World War II GI Bill)

For most veterans, training under the provisions of Public Law 346 came to an end on 25 July, 1956. Those veterans who can present proof of eligibility beyond that date may, of course, enroll in the Overseas Program under the provisions of the Law. Such proof must consist of one of the following:

1. VA Form 7-1953, provided that Box 8 specifically indicates validity for study beyond 25 July 1956.
2. A letter from the Veterans Administration, stating that the veteran is entitled to training beyond 25 July 1956, and indicating his individual cut-off date.

Veterans who cannot present one of the above-mentioned documents, but who feel that they are entitled to training beyond the general cut-off date, will be required to enroll as full-payment (or partial-payment, if eligible under applicable service regulations) students until such time as their status has been determined by the Veterans Administration.

Once the veteran has established his eligibility, he must submit VA Form 7-1909 in duplicate to this office at the time of each new registration. The following fees will be paid by the Veterans Administration for eligible veterans:

Matriculation fee
Tuition
Required textbooks for each course
Special examination fees
Diploma fee for Bachelor's degree.

Additional information pertaining to application procedures, changes in institution, etc. may be obtained from the local Education Center or from the Office of the Comptroller, University of Maryland head office in Heidelberg.

II. Public Law 550 (Korean GI Bill)

Any veteran who is eligible for education benefits under Public Law 550 may be enrolled in the Overseas Program. To be eligible, a veteran must be out of active service and must meet the following requirements:

(1) He must have been discharged under conditions other than dishonorable;

(2) He must have had active duty some time between June 27, 1950, and the date of his first discharge after January 31, 1955, and

(3) He must have had at least 90 days total service, unless discharged sooner for an actual service-incurred disability.

He may have served any place in the world — in the United States or abroad — and not necessarily in Korea.

Entitlement is limited to one and one-half days of education or training for each day spent in service between June 27, 1950, and the date of the veteran's first discharge after January 31, 1955. The maximum is 36 months.

Public Law 550 students must pay the required fees in full at the time of each registration and purchase their own textbooks. Monthly checks, the amount based on the number of semester hours for which the student is enrolled, are sent to the student by the VA upon receipt of VA Form 7-1996a (Monthly Certificate of Training), which must be submitted by each Public Law 550 student in duplicate at the beginning of each calendar month.

Public Law 550 students are reminded that the Veterans Administration is unable to authorize payment of the monthly education and training allowance until the veteran's status as a degree-seeking student has been certified by the Overseas Program. The student may establish the required status either by making application for admission to the Overseas Program as a bonafide degree-seeking student, or by furnishing the Veterans Administration with a letter from that institution at which he wishes eventually to obtain his degree, stating that the courses he takes with the Overseas Program will be accepted for full credit in partial fulfillment of degree requirements.

Additional information pertaining to application procedures, changes in institution, etc. may be obtained from the local Education Center or from the Office of the Comptroller, University of Maryland headquarters office in Heidelberg.

SECTION VI

Helpful Miscellaneous Information

I. FEES

1. Matriculation. A fee of $10.00 is payable at the time of the first registration in the University and is never refunded. This fee is paid only once for the Bachelor's degree.

2. Tuition. A fee of $10.00 per semester credit hour is payable at time of registration. Military personnel may be entitled to three-quarters payment of their tuition by the government under current regulations. For precise details of this arrangement the student should check with his Education Center.

3. Books. Students are required to purchase their own books. However, students entitled to training under Public Law 346 obtain their textbooks by presentation of a VA book card, obtainable at the time of registration from the local Education Center. Books are available at most Centers through The Stars and Stripes book stand.

4. Late Registration Fee. All students are expected to complete their registration during the regularly scheduled registration period. Those who do not complete their registration during the prescribed period will be charged a late registration fee of $5.00.

5. Special Examination Fee. For students who seek to establish college credit by examination, a fee of $5.00 per semester hour is payable prior to examination (in the case of VA students under Public Law 346 only this fee is paid by the VA). This does not apply to GED test credits.

6. Transcript of Record Fee. A fee of $1.00 is charged for each official transcript of record issued after the first copy. The required fee must be paid before the transcript can be prepared.

7. Diploma. A $10.00 fee is payable at the time the student applies for his diploma (see schedule p. 27).

8. Cap and Gown Fee. A fee of $2.50 for cap and gown is payable at least one month before commencement exercises.

Payment of Fees. All fees should be paid by means of U.S. Postal Money Order or American Express Money Order. U.S. Postal Money Order should be made payable as follows: American Express Credit Heidelberg Acc't 1469. American Express Company money orders or checks should be made payable to the University of Maryland.

II. TEXTBOOKS

The textbooks used for classes in the Overseas Program are the same as those on the College Park campus and are chosen by the various departmental heads in consultation with their respective staffs. The Stars and Stripes is responsible for the ordering, distribution, and sale of these textbooks. All students are required to purchase whatever texts are prescribed for the courses they take.

III. LIBRARY FACILITIES

The Army Special Services Libraries and the Air Force Base Libraries cooperate closely with the University of Maryland Overseas Program. Their combined facilities include over 1,500,000 volumes and comfortable reading rooms at every installation where Maryland courses are scheduled. Most important of all, trained librarians assist Maryland students and instructors with specific course problems. An inter-library loan system exists to help make collateral reading material easily accessible. In addition, the University has recently added several hundred supplementary books to the two library systems (through consultation with the chief librarians for courses of a specialized nature).

IV. ATTENDANCE

Regular attendance is mandatory. The maximum number of absences which may be excused without make-up is one class meeting. Classes missed must be made up by arrangement with the instructor. To be eligible for make-up classes or examinations, the student absent because of duty must present a copy of his orders to the instructor. A student who must be absent for four or more class meetings for any reason should officially withdraw from the class (Form available at the Education Center), or request an Incomplete from the instructor.

V. EXPLANATION OF THE GRADING SYSTEM

The following grades are used by the University of Maryland:

A — Superior Scholarship
B — Good Scholarship
C — Average Scholarship
D — Passing Scholarship
*F — Failure
I — Incomplete
W — Official Withdrawal (see p. 32)
X — Ceased to attend class while doing passing work (see below limitation on use of this mark)

NOTES:

a—The grade of "I" (Incomplete)

A mark of 'I" can be given only to a student doing at least "C" work who has been unable to complete the course for one of the following reasons:

(1) Transfer of station within the area of the Overseas Program
(2) Illness or hospitalization
(3) Temporary duty
(4) Extra military duties beyond those ordinarily required of the student.

The student must consult his instructor, presenting official orders or other documents to substantiate his request for Incomplete. The instructor will make the final decision concerning the granting of his request. The Office of the Registrar does not require the filing of a written application.

An incomplete must be removed not later than the end of the next term in which the same course is offered again at an Education Center at which the student is located, or the "I" automatically becomes an "F". An "I" can be removed only by the grades "A", "B", "C", "D", or "F". An "I" cannot be removed by the grades "W" or "X". When the grade of "I" is given, the instructor explains fully on his grade list why the mark was given, stating the quality of the student's work and the amount of work which the student must complete to finish the course.

b—The grade of "X"

The use of this mark is very limited. It is used on the records of part-time adult students who are doing satisfactory work, but who ceased to

*When the grade of "F" is entered on the grade report, the instructor will note the cause of failure; i.e., scholastic failure, irregular or non-attendance.

In computing scholastic averages, numerical values are assigned to the marks, per semester hour, as follows: A-4; B-3; C-2; D-1; F-0. The grade "F" is included in any computation of scholastic average, but the grades of "X," "W," and "I" are not.

attend class without filing official application for withdrawal. The instructor must have definite information from the Education Center that emergency circumstances prevented the student from complying with University regulations on withdrawals. Students who failed to withdraw because of neglect or who were doing failing work when they ceased to attend must be given the grade of "F".

c—Repeated course

If a student repeats a course, the last grade he receives stands as final—whether higher or lower.

VI. WITHDRAWALS

A student is permitted to withdraw from class for personal, scholastic, or duty reasons prior to the completion of three-fourths of each term. When a student withdraws, he must secure an application from the local Education Center, obtain the approval of the Education Officer or the Education Adviser, and file the application at the Education Center. At the time the application is filed, the student must also complete a notification card for his instructor. Applications are then forwarded by the Center to the Registrar's Office, Heidelberg. Upon approval of the withdrawal by the Heidelberg Office, notification will be sent to the Education Center.

NOTE: Those students who receive partial payment of their tuition through the government and who withdraw for personal reasons must fully reimburse the government.

After the first six weeks of an eight-week term (or twelve weeks of a 16-week term) applications will be accepted only for duty reasons or illness. Applications filed during the last quarter of the term must have the approval of both the instructor and the Education Adviser or Education Officer.

Tuition refunds will be computed from the date the written notice is filed with the local center, according to the following schedules:

Period From Date Instruction Begins	Per Cent Refundable 8-Weeks Course	Per Cent Refundable 16-Weeks Course
1) For Full-Payment Students:
One week or less	75% ($22.50)	75% ($22.50)
Between 1 and 2 weeks	25% ($7.50)	75% ($22.50)
Between 2 and 4 weeks	0	25% ($7.50)
Over 4 weeks	0	0

2) For Government Contract Students:

	To Student	To Gov't.	To Student	To Gov't.
One week or less	0	75% ($22.50)	0	75% ($22.50)
Between 1 and 2 weeks	0	25% ($7.50)	0	75% ($22.50)
Over 4 weeks	0	0	0	0

A student who fails to withdraw in the required manner will forfeit his right to any refund to which he might otherwise be entitled. Students who fail to file an application because of obvious neglect or lack of reason will be given a grade of "F".

VII. TRANSCRIPTS OF RECORDS

Students in the Overseas Program may secure official transcripts of their scholastic records from the Registrar's Office at Heidelberg. No charge is made for the first copy; for each additional copy, there is a charge of $1.00, payable in advance.

Transcripts of records must be requested at least two weeks in advance of the date when the records are actually needed.

Return of Student Records to College Park

Records of each student in the Overseas Program of the University of Maryland will be kept at Heidelberg until the student returns to the United States. When the Heidelberg office is notified that a student has returned or is returning to the United States, his complete record will be forwarded to the Registrar's Office at College Park.

It is the student's responsibility to notify the Heidelberg office when he is transferred to the United States on forms available at the Education Center.

Overseas students planning to study on the campus of the University of Maryland are strongly advised, after they reach College Park, to make contact first with the Administrative Office of the College of Special and Continuation Studies. (For specific details, see footnote on page 1 of this catalog.)

VIII. TRANSFER OF UNIVERSITY OF MARYLAND CREDITS TO OTHER COLLEGIATE INSTITUTIONS

A student planning to transfer credits earned in this program to another collegiate institution in the United States should inquire of the institution as to acceptance of such credits in his proposed program of study. Only the institution to which credits are transferred can determine applicability of such credits to programs leading to degrees which they award. Students in this category should also determine what residence and other requirements must be met in the college of their choice.

IX. DEFINITION OF CREDIT UNIT

The unit of credit is the semester hour, which represents 16 hours of classroom work plus outside preparation.

X. RESIDENCE CREDIT

Courses offered in the Overseas Program are the same as on-campus courses and have the same value. Residence credit is granted for all work completed in this program.

XI. AUDITORS

Students who desire no credit and who wish to take no examinations may be registered as auditors. Auditors are required to pay the regular course fee and the matriculation fee.

XII. CANDIDATES FOR GRADUATION: Reminders

When a student is within fifteen hours of the total required for graduation, he should forward written notice to the Registrar's Office in Heidelberg. His record will then be reviewed to determine the remaining requirements which must be met for graduation. A copy of his record will be forwarded to the Dean of his College for final review. When official clearance has been received from College Park, the Registrar's Office in Heidelberg will send the student notice of his final requirement and application for his diploma. If the student plans to complete his work in the Overseas Program, his diploma application and all other requested papers must be on file in Heidelberg according to the dates specified on the schedule below:

Deadline Dates for Diploma Applications

Candidates for degrees in January	prior to November 15
Candidates for degrees in June	prior to March 1
Candidates for degrees in August	prior to May 15

XIII. ACADEMIC AND GENERAL REGULATIONS

The Academic and General Regulations of the University of Maryland are fully applicable to the Overseas Program.

SECTION VII
HONORS AND AWARDS

I. Certificates of Scholarship

Certificates of Scholarship are presented to every student who appears on the Dean's List. This honor list is normally prepared about six weeks after the close of a term to allow distant Education Centers to get all grades in and to give time for accurate computation of averages in the Registrar's office in Heidelberg.

The list is composed of students who have completed at least fifteen consecutive semester hours with a 3.40 average or better, "A" being figured as 4.00, "B" as 3.00. An average is computed for a student after his completion of the equivalent of each academic semester with the University (normally 15 to 18 hours). No course used in one average is used in computing a second. Therefore, if a student fails to make a 3.40 average at the end of at least fifteen hours, he must complete fifteen more in order to be considered for the list again. There are two variations to this:

a—An incomplete has no bearing at all on the average.

b—If at the end of a term the student does not have fifteen hours and in the following term he takes courses which give him a total of more than fifteen hours, the average is based on the entire group of courses, conceivably as many as nineteen hours. Then, in order again to be eligible for the Dean's List, the student must complete at least fifteen more hours.

Between the terms of April 4, 1955 and March 22, 1956, 525 students made the Dean's List and received the University's Certificate of Scholarship.

II. Honor graduates

In order to qualify for honors at graduation, a student must be in the upper fifth of his class and must have taken a minimum of 60 semester hours with the University of Maryland. In all cases the average must be in excess of 3.00 and is computed with reference to all graduating seniors of a student's college wherever they happen to be: College Park, in the North Atlantic Program, the Pentagon, or overseas. First Honors are awarded to students in the upper tenth of their class; Second Honors are awarded to students in the second tenth of their class.

III. Scholastic Achievement Medallions

Those students who appear on the Dean's List with a "straight A" (4.00) average receive a medallion attesting to their achievement. Their names are inscribed on the back of the medallions. The students who received medallions between April 4, 1955 and March 22, 1956, appear below:

GLOSSARY OF TERMS AND ABBREVIATIONS

The American Council on Education. A group of educators who have reviewed various Service Schools in order to help secondary schools and colleges evaluate Servicemen's records.

B.A. or B.S. Bachelor of Arts Degree; Bachelor of Science Degree: These degrees are given at the end of undergraduate work at a U.S. college or university. They are standard terms used in American education.

College Park: The name of the town in Maryland where the University of Maryland campus is located.

Course: A definite unit of guided study in a specific subject. The courses given in the Overseas Program are "resident courses," not "extension courses." This means that a student gets the same credit overseas as he would back on the campus.

Correspondence Courses: A course in which a student studies by himself and periodically submits lessons by mail to the institution offering the course. These are corrected, graded, and returned with comments and criticism. (The University of Maryland does not give correspondent courses.)

Curriculum: The total number and variety of courses which an educational institution regards as necessary for a student to qualify for a specific degree.

Education Adviser: A civilian employee of the Air Force or Army who is responsible for student guidance and (among other things) for setting up University of Maryland classes at the various education centers.

Education Officer or Personnel Services Officer. The military person who represents the Army or Air Force Education Program and who performs the work of an education adviser when such a person does not exist.

Elective: A course not specifically required in the major field of study.

G.E.D.: General Educational Development test given on the high school and college level through USAFI. They both cover English composition, social science, general science and literature.

Junior Standing: Certification that a student has completed the equivalent of two years work in a particular curriculum.

Matriculation Fee: In the Overseas Program, the matriculation fee, payable at the time of first enrollment, may be interpreted as a registration fee for the purpose of establishing the student's permanent record of work undertaken. It is a universal practice among American universities thus to maintain records for all students.

M.S.: In the Overseas Program this refers to Military Science—not Master of Science. For example: a "B.S. in M.S." is a Bachelor of Science Degree in Military Science.

Semester Hour: The basic unit of credit in a school on the semester basis. For example: On campus a course which meets three hours a week for one sixteen-week semester awards three semester hours of credit. Overseas, the average course meets six hours per week for eight weeks and awards three semester hours of credit.

Subject: Material studied without regard to length of time or exact limits of study. For example: Government and politics is a subject; international relations is a course in the subject (or department) of government and politics.

Tuition: Payment made to an institution for instruction received.

CENTENNIAL AND SESQUICENTENNIAL CELEBRATIONS

College of Agriculture 1856-1956 School of Medicine 1807-1957

In honor of the Centennial and Sesquicentennial Anniversaries of the University of Maryland School of Medicine and Agricultural College, the Overseas Program is proud to reproduce the University of Maryland seal. These two colleges formed the original nucleus from which the present University gradually developed.

The shield shown above was patterned after the Great Seal of the State of Maryland. It shows the Calvert and Crossland arms quartered. Calvert was the family name of the Lords Baltimore who founded Maryland; Crossland was the family of the mother of the first Lord Baltimore.

The shield is supported by a farmer and a fisherman, symbolizing Lord Baltimore's two estates of Maryland and Avalon. Avalon was in Newfoundland, where Maryland is presently offering courses through the College of Special and Continuation Studies. (The Calvert motto on the scroll is usually translated "manly deeds, womanly words.")

In 1957 C.S.C.S., the youngest college within the University complex, marks the end of its first decade. For ten years C.S.C.S. has arranged to give off-campus resident courses in a program of service to military and civilian personnel.

Dear Jack:

Thanks for your letter concerning Eddie Cantor's birthday celebration.

I fear it will not be possible for me to go to Miami for the birthday, but of course, I want to send a greeting to be included in the special souvenir program. It is attached.

With best regards,

Sincerely yours,

Dear Ed:

When I heard that Eddie Cantor was going to celebrate his 65th birthday, they couldn't keep me out of the act, even though I personally don't believe in birthdays after 39.

As Chairman of the National Entertainment Committee, I should like to ask you to join the Committee. If you join, you will not be obligated in any way. Of course, if you would like to come to Miami for the birthday, we would be delighted to have you.

But the chief purpose in my writing to you is to ask you to join with Eddie's many friends in show business and out of show business to express our affection and admiration for him as a grand trouper and a great humanitarian.

Please let me hear from you and I would particularly appreciate it if you could send some form of birthday greeting that we could include in the special souvenir program for the occasion.

With many thanks and warmest regards, I am

Cordially yours,

Jack

Here, Checkers!

Benson

As a television performer, Mr. Ezra Taft Benson will never take the place of Poor Richard Nixon, otherwise known as the vice president of the United States.

The agriculture secretary had his Big Chance Thursday evening, when CBS turned him loose in the nation's living rooms for half an hour to correct what he had said was the distorted picture presented by the recent Edward R. Murrow documentary entitled "The Farm Problem—a Crisis of Abundance."

But even though he tried hard to equal Mr. Nixon's smash melodramatic hit of 1952, Secretary Benson just couldn't pull it off.

Of course, he was at somewhat of a disadvantage. Whereas Mr. Nixon could claim that he was practically poverty stricken at the very moment he was pouring his heart out to the electorate, Mr. Benson had to admit he is just a has-been in this respect. "Through the '20s and '30s," his sympathy pitch went, "I struggled with a mortgage on my own farm. I know what the price squeeze is—I've been through it."

However, the agriculture secretary offset this handicap with a bigger supporting cast than the vice president had. While Mr. Nixon had only his wife with him, Mr. Benson brought along his wife and three of his children. All, presumably, are experts on the farm problem.

The secretary also brought Senator Thomas Martin of Iowa, and he just happened to have with him some films of a recent trip he had taken to his native state to satisfy himself that Mr. Benson is so doing a great job.

Senator Martin also brought—and inadvertently displayed—his copy of the program's scrips, and the conversation that "Tom" and "Ezra" produced therefrom had all the natural ease of a pow-wow between two cigar store Indians.

Even with all these trappings, there were some awkward moments when Secretary Benson had the stage all to himself with nothing to do but talk about the farm problem.

Taking advantage of this opportunity, which he had specifically requested, he said that agriculture is very important. He proved it, too, even if he did have to call on a film of his own and a professional announcer in the process.

He also said, rather belligerently, that there is no "crisis of abundance." The trouble, he explained, is that "surpluses are smothering farm prices and income." So there!

But there's no cause for alarm, Mr. Benson assured his audience, because those devilish Democrats and their policies got us into this mess and the Republicans are going to get us out of it—if only given time.

Great stuff, all right, but still not up to the Nixon standard. Maybe what Mr. Benson needs is a dog.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

As you may recall we had a luncheon chat last summer aboard the Saratoga with Admiral Arleigh Burke at which time I advised you of preliminary plans with respect to a visit to New York City of fifty retired World War II and Korea Navy Admirals and Marine Corps Generals.

The visit of these combat Flag Officers is now definite for the period 1-3 May 1957. They will attend certain affairs of the 55th Annual Convention of the Navy League of the United States which will be held in New York City 1-3 May 1957, which will be proclaimed "Navy League Week" by the City of New York.

In particular, they will be among the honored Dais Guests at the Annual Banquet of the Navy League to be held at the Waldorf-Astoria, Thursday evening, 2 May. Shortly after noon, 2 May, at City Hall, the Honorable Robert F. Wagner, Jr., Mayor, will receive the retired Flag Officers after a Motorcade and Parade of Armed Forces Units up Broadway.

The retired Flag Officers will arrive Wednesday evening, 1 May in New York City at La Guardia and will motorcade to the Hotel Roosevelt, where they will be billeted. It is anticipated that certain of the retired Flag Officers will appear on TV and radio programs on Wednesday evening.

We would welcome your support and counsel with respect to this activity and I would appreciate the early opportunity of discussing the matter personally and in detail with you.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Brother Ed,

I thought you might enjoy these pieces, which were dipped into liberally--without attribution--by Sen. Humphrey and Chet Huntley last month. I ghosted them for Hank Greenspun while spending the last six weeks in Las Vegas, undoing a marriage (mine) inadvertently committed last year in Salzburg. I didn't want to use my own name during the residence period, for reasons that will be clear to you if you should ever have the misfortune to run into my ex-wife.

I trust all goes well with you and your family. I managed to get my teeth into a good assignment here last year--"Fear Strikes Out"--with gratifying results. From the critics, anyway.

A happy '58, sire, to you and yours.

WHERE I STAND

By Hank Greenspun

There'll always be a niblick; so who needs Sputnik?

It's been a rough month for the U.S. Within the past 30 days, Federal bayonets have been unsheathed against American citizens in Arkansas. A new kind of Russian satellite, more ominous than any political puppet, has been cavorting through the solar system, beeping its message of Soviet scientific ascendancy. Wall Street has taken a sudden nosedive, sweeping away billions overnight. Soviet arms clank through the jittery Middle East, emboldening pipsqueak Arab chieftains to tug insolently at Uncle Sam's beard.

Time for dismay? Only for those who lack perspective. Before complaining about inept leadership, absentee government, inter-service rivalry and lack of achievement, let us look at the score card—beg pardon, the record.

From Washington comes the gladdening news that in these same history-crammed 30 days, the President managed to get in no less than 21 exhilarating rounds on the golf course. And it is officially disclosed that on one glorious nine-hole outing Mr. Eisenhower, for the first time in years, shot a 41!

Who then will dare suggest that this has been a month of bleak disasters, of defeats and disappointments without a ray of compensation? What cavilling grumbler will voice his worry about tensions ripping across the South, Soviet tanks in Syria, and Communist spearheads in outer space? Ike has pared down his score to 41. To paraphrase Ira Gershwin, "Who cares what stocks fall in Yonkers, as long as Ike has a putt that conquers?"

We must all learn to see with the measured eye of our high-level statesmen. Obviously our troubles have been exaggerated anyway, if you look at them from the comfortable vantage point of a cart rolling up to the seventh green. Arkansas? Just a friendly little family quarrel, blown up out of all proportion by the sneaky foreign press. They're all jealous of us, so they like to criticize. Sure Ike sent Federal troops into the still Reconstruction-conscious South. But what else could he do after Governor Faubus defied the courts and encouraged rioting? Arrest Faubus on contempt charges? People would have called Ike names.

It doesn't do to get too worked up about these things. Controversy can raise havoc with a man's approach shots. Just keep your head down, your left arm straight and your eyes on the ball—and the whole thing will go away. Especially if you remember to follow through.

The Russian satellite? Doesn't mean a thing. We could have done it long ago but we weren't in the mood. Or maybe the Army was, but the Navy wasn't. Anyway, when we send our satellite up it'll be snazzier. Or faster. Or something. Everybody knows you can't beat that old American know-how.

Military implications of Sputnik? Absolutely none. Oh, sure, it must have taken a hefty thrust to launch a missile that far into space—but we've got stuff just as good. Better. Troubles with our tests? Missiles burning up in mid-air—like the Talos that sputtered out at White Sands on Tuesday just after the Navy magnanimously turned it over to the Army? Oh, that's nothing to worry about. We probably made the test look bad on purpose, just to fool the Russians. Hey, did you see where Ike took a birdie on the eleventh?

Take all this fuss about the Wall Street collapse. Just one of those passing things. What if the market did drop 30 points, and wipe out savings all over the country? What if it is the worst plunge in four years? General Motors stock is still solid, isn't it? And everybody knows, what's good for General Motors is good for Charlie Wilson. Besides, banker George Eccles, financial confidante of Ike, explains that a little stock market dive is a healthy thing for the country—though it may be unhealthy for a lot of the people in it. A mild crash "stabilizes" things, Eccles tells us reassuringly. Stocks are "adjusting to more realistic levels."

That's the kind of talk we all need to hear—good, straight from the shoulder double-talk, so we can dismiss these trivial matters from our minds and get behind Ike . . . maybe even inspire him to an 80 score next week. Mr. Eccles is a soothing spirit in the true John Foster Dulles tradition.

I don't believe the country fully appreciates Mr. Dulles. Like so many monumental figures, he has been underestimated by his contemporaries. There are those who claim he is a throwback to the Nineteenth century. This does our eloquent Secretary of State an injustice, by at least a full century. To find his equal in imperturbability, in stern refusal to acknowledge the existence of unpleasant facts, we must go back to the European pundits of 1750, who proclaimed daily that "everything is for the best in this best of all possible worlds. . ."

Few of us realize how fortunate we are, in these disturbed times, to have at the President's elbow a man who can somehow see success in every apparent failure; to whom every rebuff to U.S. policy at the United Nations or by a zig-zagging Tito is actually a brilliant victory, if merely perceived aright; who pursues his specialty of detecting silver linings (invisible to the rest of us) with a dedication matching that of Mr. Eisenhower in addressing a trapped golf ball.

Not even the apparent Soviet gains in the Middle East can upset Mr. Dulles' aplomb. Thanks to his adroit intervention in the Suez Canal situation, our closest allies were covered with confusion if not ignominy, and the Egyptian dictator Nasser was rescued from certain oblivion.

Now that Nasser has expressed his gratitude by sending troops into Communist-led Syria, it is comforting to see that Mr. Dulles remains unshaken. If the peace of the world is imperiled by these moves, and the tiny bastion of democracy that is Israel is particularly threatened, we can console ourselves that it must be because Mr. Dulles planned it that way.

Certainly he has given no public indication of serious concern, or of feeling a need for an "agonizing reappraisal" of a Middle East policy that has put oil first, people and moral principle second. If Suez now lies almost within the grip of the Soviet imperialists, we must assume Mr. Dulles is just luring the Russians on, the better to humiliate them later with one of his masterful diplomatic strokes which are the envy of all European statesmen. [redacted]ve.

There is still no cause for alarm. The situation is in the capable hands of Mr. Dulles and the other earnest, devoted realists of Ike's Washington team. The President himself? It is evident that he is increasingly annoyed with the harassments of office, that he begrudges every moment spent at his desk as precious time lost from the links.

There is no reason to bother Mr. Eisenhower any further with the tiresome decisions of government. Not when he is—perhaps even as this is being written—on the brink of achieving a record-shattering 39. Let us encourage Ike to play.

For ourselves, it is time to make what Mr. Eccles would call a "realistic adjustment." Perhaps we should follow the lead of the Eisenhower team, banish from our thoughts the untidy complications of the world, and sit back in joyous contemplation of the one sphere in which —no one can deny it—we continue to make consistent progress: Ike's golf score.

Tomorrow: What happened in Little Rock while Ike was teeing off in Newport.

WHERE I STAND

By Hank Greenspun

Eggheads vs. blockheads.

The one-time fantasies of the space era are upon us, with the zooming speed of a rocket itself. A world that has barely begun to comprehend the tremendous power locked within the atom, suddenly, finds itself facing new possibilities that leave us gasping. A man-made platform hanging suspended between the stars—robot tanks crawling across the moon, televising its secrets or taking long range photos of our globe—gigantic spaceships hurtling through the solar system to Mars. Ready or not, the age of Flash Gordon has arrived.

Sputnik is the herald, we are told, of almost unimaginable things to come. And, to the astonishment and annoyance of all of us, it was launched from a country only recently emerged from peasant ignorance.

The first reaction of most of us, in and out of government, after the initial shock, has been an instinctive emotional one; Sputnik isn't so wonderful. It can't be. An administration spokesman, following the policy line laid down by Secretary of State Dulles, has gone so far as to angrily dismiss the satellite as "silly." A special propagandist has been detached from the U.S. Information Agency to put Sputnik in its place. New claims and counter-claims, like test missiles, fill the air. President Eisenhower himself assures us we have not fallen behind and simultaneously meets with Prime Minister Macmillan of Britain to figure out how we can catch up.

American scientists—at least those of them who are willing to talk more bluntly, like pioneer atomic physicist, Edward Teller, say that ten years ago America led the world in science; ten years from now, at the present rate, we will be trailing the Soviet. An M.I.T. expert attacks the "dangerous nonsense" of attributing Communist gains to their spies in America rather than their skilled research. Erik Bergaust, editor of "Missiles and Rockets" magazine, finds "laxity" in our government's approach to the issue. Eminent physicist Harold C. Urey makes a broader diagnosis, stressing the "low esteem" in which the intellectual is held in American society.

Before we get lost in a cloud of accusation and denial, it might be a good idea to take a hard look at the whole recent trend in our country's attitude toward scientists, mental effort, and education generally.

It so happens and not by choice that I am not an "egghead" myself, but I can remember a day not so long ago when it was no disgrace to be brainy; when a great President elected in the midst of national economic emergency deliberately surrounded himself with the most highly trained thinkers he could find, and proudly dubbed them the "Brain Trust."

Americans were glad to be yanked out of the rut of the depression, by professors or anybody else who had constructive answers. The great social advances of the New Deal—now so firmly imbedded in our lives and thinking that no subsequent administration would dare tamper with them—were laid out by men who frequently engaged in profound thinking and made no apologies for it. It might be true that they rarely posed for pictures on the golf links, but they were in there pitching for fair trade, social security, and minimum wages.

During this heyday of the intellectual in Washington, refugee thinkers from Hitler's Germany were welcomed in America. Fortunately for our country, the hate-'em-all creed of Nevada's late Senator, Pat McCarran, had not yet found acceptance. Sanctuary was found here by an "egghead" named Albert Einstein whose monumental theory of relativity, as adapted by his colleagues at Princeton's Institute for Advanced Studies, ultimately gave birth to the atom bomb.

In World War II, a high I.Q. was not yet considered a liability in America . OSS, OWI, and the Army's Psychological Warfare Branch, staffed with specialist historians, economists, linguists and sociologists from our leading univerities, were credited with saving thousands of American lives by their work in intelligence and propaganda.

Entire operations—such as the successful North African landings—were essentially political in planning. Overall Allied strategy was guided largely by another notorious "egghead" named Winston Churchill, who has probably read and written more European history than the entire graduating class of the University of Nevada.

Then, after the war, something happened—a sort of decaying in the soul of America. Fear—of the Soviet Union, of each other—took root among us. It was quickly sensed and exploited by headline-hunting demagogues. Congressional committees led by publicity-mad opportunists were in the ascendancy. It became the era of McCarthyism.

For such men, scientists and intellestuals were a natural target. For one thing, the researchers lived in a world apart. And that which is strange can quickly be made to appear suspect—especially where a touch of envy might be involved.

"Security" became the measuring stick. Had a physicist been seen talking on the street to a student whose father was born in Russia? Did a chemist attend a meeting ten years before where someone quoted the "Daily Worker?" Did a geologist admire the writings of that "wicked socialist" George Bernard Shaw? These became the key questions in evaluating our scientists, not only on official government jobs, but in the universities.

Such minor qualifications as international awards for research, or unusual teaching skills, were brushed aside in the demagogic howl for "security."

(To be continued tomorrow)

WHERE I STAND

By Hank Greenspun

In the supposed interests of "security," many brilliant scientists were lost to this country's vital research programs.

The vicious exterminating ray guns of the congressional committees led by publicity seekers and demagogues were turned on Princeton University's Robert Oppenheimer, world-renowned mathematical genius and colleague of Professor Albert Einstein.

Oppenheimer's cocktail-party conversations of many years before suddenly became more important to the welfare of the United States—according to his congressional inquisitors—than his brilliant work in atomic physics. He was accused of no overt act—no careless handling of restricted information, much less deliberate betrayal. But in the atmosphere of the time, with all scientists fair game, he was pilloried and denied the privilege of working on secret government projects, while his fellow citizens were denied the rich resources of his mind. He was good enough to earn the title of "father of the atom bomb" but denied the further right to make equally brilliant contributions to the scientific programs of this country. And all this took place at about the same time the Soviets decided to put every facility at the disposal of their scientists.

Oppenheimer was only one of many. All over the country, chemists and geophysicists were being yanked from their laboratories and hauled before investigating committees. Long forgotten incidents of their pasts were dug up, twisted, given evil emphasis.

The government was obsessed with "safety" and "security." It was carrying on like a football coach who spends all his time building up a foolproof undetectable set of signals—but no effective plays.

Men were hounded out of their campus jobs—good, able, loyal men. Some were fired. Others quit, rather than turn informer against their fellows for possible mistakes of judgment made over a decade before. It was the day of the McCarthy-dictated "loyalty oath." The day of the "burning of the books" in America—the revival of the "Salem witchcraft trials."

Lab work slowed to a standstill. Technicians were busy defending themselves in hearing rooms, where little men measured their integrity with yardsticks designed in Fascist Germany.

Americans continued to scoff at government-controlled Soviet science. How could men work creatively under such conditions? Yet in our own laboratories the idea of "free inquiry" had become a laugh. The first test of a man's fitness was his political conformity. Our scientists were no better off than those of the Reds. Actually, our people were in a worse spot. The Russians, having had no taste of political freedom, could hardly miss it. For Americans, born in freedom, intellectual slavery was stifling.

The little men of government wanted political purity

in our laboratories. We got it. In fact, for a time we attained absolute sterility.

It was inevitable that our children should soon absorb the prevailing attitude. Kids blushed to enroll in physics, shied away from courses in geology, algebra and geometry. Why be tarred with the brush of subversion? Everybody knew—or at least was being told loudly from Washington—that men who labored over mysterious logarithm tables and complex formulas were some kind of pinkos, vaguely subject to suspicion. Who else would shut himself up in some stuffy lab, fiddling with test tubes, when he could be out playing golf or swapping jokes with the boys?

The Brain Trust of F.D.R.'s days had given way to the Brain Mistrust—an era that reached its peak with the arrival of the GOP's "businessmen's administration" in Washington. Any lingering respect for intellectual achievement went by the boards. This was the age of the "practical" men—of the shrewd trade, the golf-course conference. Competence in juggling stocks or producing automobiles were considered more than adequate equipment for the functions of government. Anyone who could meet a payroll could meet an international crisis. No special training was required.

The Eisenhower administration had promised a "new broom" and it delivered. The new broom swept away anything it could not comprehend. Men like Chester Bowles, the ambassador to India who had endeared America to millions of "neutralist" Indians by studying their history and language, the better to understand their thinking, was promptly removed. A Republican business executive who could not tell the Senate the name of the Prime Minister of Ceylon, was appointed to represent us in that country.

When Eisenhower was asked at a press conference whether political contributions had weighed in the choice of the new ambassador, he told the reporters that he resented the implication, but he didn't deny the campaign gifts.

The word "egghead," symbolizing the alleged high shiny dome of the confessed thinker, came into disreputable existence. It became fashionable to sneer at the lowly, eccentric intellectual.

Sputnik, catapulted into the solar system by the Soviet, has caused some change in thinking. It now appears we might have to choose between the egghead and some even less admirable types.

Can we function as a government in this highly scientific age with anything less than eggheads, or shall we continue wth the blockheads, fatheads and even pigheads?

WHERE I STAND

By Hank Greenspun

The eggheads as against the blockheads.

With the advent of the Russian Sputnik the United States will have to choose between the eggheads and other types with which our country has been saddled these past years.

According to Editor Erik Bergaust of "Missiles and Rockets" magazine, "the United States would be ahead in the satellite field now if Charlie Wilson hadn't been so damn stubborn."

Stubborness is a form of pigheadedness and I would be the last to accuse our former Secretary of Defense of being a pighead, but he did impound $285,000,000 voted by Congress for military research last July.

It was Wilson who lopped $8 million from the budget of the Office of Scientific Research and it was characteristic of his pigheadedness when he refused to budge from his position at meetings of the National Security Council even after the inveterate optimist, Secretary of State Dulles, voiced worry about the Russians outstripping us.

There are also fatheads or blockheads, dedicated to the sole glory of their respective branch of the Military Services.

Dr. Vannevar Bush, wartime head of our military research, says: "We do not have unified military planning. The Joint Chiefs of Staff are supposed to do that, but they don't. We have three plans—Army, Navy and Airforce, instead of one. We put great big projects into being at tremendous expense without anyone reviewing them to determine whether they fit into a unified plan. The only fellow who can achieve unified planning is the President of the United States." The rest of us can only squirm while the Admirals and Generals engage in boyish rivalry.

We hear that a great "policy change" is in the making—that students will be encouraged to go back into the sciences, and teachers will be better paid. Such a change would be a complete reversal of policy; nonetheless, welcome if true. A comparison with Russia, supposed land of illiterate peasantry, is startling. The Soviets will graduate three times as many M.D.s as we do next year. Their high school graduates have had five years of physics, four years of chemistry, advanced mathematics through trigonometry. Ours? Your sons and daughters have the answer to that one but don't ask them which end of the test tube to hold up.

A Soviet researcher in physics, as a member of the nation's most honored class, gets superior housing and insurance benefits. His salary averages over three hundred American dollars a week—which comparatively speaking is more than an American scientist can generally make with a top corporation here.

Far from valuing higher education, our kids look at it as an amiable free ride in the course of a which a degree is picked up. Armed with the degree—like a "Good Housekeeping" seal—one has a better chance to get ahead. When a group of colleges like Yale, Harvard and Princeton, decide to de-emphasize football in favor of studies, they are hooted at from every corner of the land. Knowledge—a little or a lot—has become a dangerous and unpopular thing. Dr. Pusey of Harvard was accused by McCarthy of being "soft on Communism" because of a disagreement on educational standards for the professors of that university. Such is the McCarthy-fostered suspicion of the intellectual.

What we need today is not merely a handful of science scholarships. We require a drastic overhauling of our whole attitude toward learning. Wisdom is something to be respected. It is the egghead, not the blockhead, who has made such crawling advances as humanity can claim to date—the Newtons, Pasteurs, Edisons and Salks.

A nation has something to worry about when it belittles its best minds in a kind of angry resentment because it cannot match them.

We must urgently revise our offhand indifference to teachers—the most underrated, underpaid and generally neglected group in our society. Sam Levenson, the comic story-teller, started out as a school teacher. He loved his work but couldn't afford to stay in it. He earns more in a week, telling jokes on television, than a school teacher earns in an entire year.

No one, least of all a Las Vegan, wants to run down the importance of entertainers. Laughter is a precious thing in this lopsided world. But aren't children? Shouldn't we pay enough to those who are entrusted with forming children's minds, to make sure that superior people are drawn into teaching?

This is the generation that will have to keep pace with the rapidly expanding Russians. Knowledge, as the Russians have discovered, is a cumulative force. An advance made in one field is helpful in another. Our biggest weakness, we are told, is in basic research—exploration of the principles governing the universe; experimentation without any fixed objectives, nonetheless underlying all the hydrogen bombs and sputniks. This was the special field of the brilliant Dr. Oppenhiemer.

Our scientists have been operating under incredible handicaps—scorned, ill-paid and ridiculed as "pinkos" if they dared have a thought not readily acceptable to the blockheads. Now we turn on them with wounded cries and demand: "What's wrong with you birds, anyway?"

What's wrong is with the politicians—the super-secret, super-righteous, super-patriotic, publicity-seeking, opportunistic heads of the Congressional inquisitorial committees—and with an electorate that cannot be stirred from a lethargy long enough to demand that political hacks should not be permitted to push their betters around.

Nuclear physicists, higher mathematicians, missile theorists—these are the men, in all countries, who hold the future in their hands. Left to themselves, they would undoubtedly work constructively in the interests of all humanity. For these are peaceable men, dedicated to the pursuit of knowledge. To them it makes no difference whether a man is Russian, Chinese or American; white, black, brown or green. To subject such men to the petty calculations of power-hungry politicians, whether in Moscow or Washington, is a crime against all of us.

It is time to consider whether the age of the politician is not obsolete: whether we would not be better represented in the White House and Halls of Congress by the men who best understand the atomic age—its perils and its promises. Scientists in our places of power could be counted on for two priceless qualifications—wisdom and integrity. Living with objective truth all their lives, they have had no training in and no taste for double-talk.

Perhaps we are not yet ready to turn over the debates at the United Nations to the single group of men able to control the destinies of the rest of us, which is regrettable, but the least we can do is set our scientists free. Get the politicians off their backs. Give rein to the dreamers, who in a universe which has shrunken to one hour and forty-five minutes traveling time, are now the true doers. Restore to the learned man his dignity, and give him a place in the community commensurate with his importance to us.

And for our own sakes, let us encourage study—lest we find ourselves the New Barbarians, left behind with our frigidaires and Rock 'n Roll while the Russians take over world leadership.

Let us rescue the long-maligned professors—so that they may rescue us!

COMMUNITY NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS, INC.

October 18, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

At the request of my good friend, Senator William Benton, I am enclosing two typical recent issues of the newspaper we publish in Middletown, New York. As Mr. Benton may have told you, this newspaper was established less than 15 months ago, in competition with an afternoon daily 106 years old, and has attempted to pioneer in two directions:

1. We are using the cold type offset process as the means of mechanical production of the paper. The effectiveness of this process is, I think, best demonstrated by the appearance of the Record itself.

2. We are attempting to produce a lively and, at the same time, responsible community newspaper with a heavy concentration on local news and pictures, but with a well-rounded report on world affairs.

The rise of the Record has been, in relative terms, spectacular. In less than 15 months our circulation has grown from zero to 9,000, and our advertising volume is best revealed by a glance through the enclosed issues. While we have not yet passed a break-even point, it is so close as to be almost -- gratifyingly -- upon us.

Among the complications we have encountered has been the fact that we miscalculated the potential of the Record, since we had originally assumed that peak circulation would be not much more than what we now have. It is now clear to us that our potential circulation may well reach 15,000 - 20,000, and as a result we have just purchased a new press capable of meeting these physical requirements.

I am not quite sure why Mr. Benton was anxious that you have this information, but we are very proud of the progress we have made with the Middletown Daily Record, and on general principles are delighted to spread the knowledge of our success. If ever you can carve out a half day from your busy schedule, it occurs to me that you might be interested in seeing for yourself how we put out a newspaper which in its own small way may be revolutionizing the American newspaper industry.

The impact of the Record on the press as a whole is revealed not only by the fact that at the ripe age of eight months the Record won the 1957 Ayer Award (tabloid category), but also in the fact that it has attracted visiting publishers and editors from all parts of the country and many foreign lands. The State Department and USIA frequently steer foreign visitors in the United States in the Leader Exchange Program in our direction. We have been invited to establish newspapers identical to the Record in some 40 communities in the United States, as well as half a dozen foreign countries.

If there is any other information you would like to have, you have only to let me know.

Sincerely yours,

As we approach the finish on our project "Big Globe" I am moved to make one more attempt to get you to see it. Our problem is no longer financial. Our interest in your seeing it stems from your original enthusiasm for the concept in terms of its Educational value.

We have had a host of professors out to consult and to observe. Mostly from Columbia. And we have from them the corroboration that we have "the most accurate and informative relief globe ever made and that it would be a most important aid to teaching"

I could send a car for you at your convenience — and I've a feeling you will not regret the time once you've seen it.

Mary Sachs Named Park Commissioner

Miss Mary Sachs has been named commissioner of recreation areas for the Jerusalem Forest Park to be developed in Israel from contributions made in this country.

Her appointment was announced during a dinner held by Gov. and Mrs. Leader for representatives of the All-Pennsylvania Commission for the Leader Woodland in Israel.

Dear Ed -

You may recall my having written you 25 April 1957, concerning Miss Mary Sachs, a leading citizen, business woman, and philanthropist of Harrisburg.

You very thoughtfully wrote me that the "Murrow Hall of Fame" was booked for the coming months, but that you would be glad to place Miss Sachs' name on file. In this connection, I am therefore sending you the attached clipping concerning Miss Sachs' having been named Commissioner of Recreation Areas for the Jerusalem Forest Park to be developed in Israel from contributions made in this country. As this is an additional tribute to her philanthropy and ability, I felt that you might wish to place this in her file.

With warmest regards to you and your family, and with every sincere good wish for continued success which you richly deserve,

Sincerely

THE ADJUTANT GENERAL

25 April 1957

Dear Ed —

I am gratified to learn that on 5 May you are to be honored by the Einstein group. This is a richly deserved tribute, and I hope that it is for you a source of as much satisfaction as it is for your many admirers and friends, among whom I am proud to include myself.

Also attending the dinner will be Miss Mary Sachs, an outstanding public-spirited citizen of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. Believing that both you and she would find an exchange of ideas mutually interesting, I feel that you might like to have her background.

Her story is as full of romance of American business initiative as any written by Horatio Alger. Today the name of Mary Sachs, as Pennsylvania women can testify, stands for two of the most beautiful specialty shops in the country - one at Harrisburg, the other at Lancaster - and signifies to many thousands of women the finest in clothes.

But behind this success story is a record of a long struggle, a disastrous fire, financial difficulties - but most important of all, the character of a woman devoted to her business as a profession, and imbuing her life work with the imagination of an artist.

Her story began humbly in Baltimore. In her teens, to help family resources, she found a piece-work job in a factory. But when she was 19 years old, the great Baltimore fire completely destroyed the factory where she worked. That year, seeking a new job and a new environment, Mary Sachs went to Harrisburg, her heart set upon merchandizing. After working in a small candy store in nearby Steelton, she gained several years of experience as a saleswoman in a Harrisburg store - where she soon found herself in full charge of operations. All the while she was developing the character which was to give her the towering public stature she now enjoys.

Philanthropist, individualist, enthusiast in all public works for the good of the community, her broad horizons are exemplified by her timely messages to the general public. Miss Sachs has pulled herself up by her own strong bootstraps, and a great many others with her. Never satisfied with anything short of perfection, she still sets an example for her family of workers by putting in more hours daily and weekly than any of them, during which time her visions for the future progressivly take on form and substance.

Although the keenest of merchants, the commercial phases of her business are to her chiefly a means to an end - the welfare of her "people", and the betterment of the community into which she has put so much of herself. She has become an outstanding leader in this State Capital.

The thought occurred to me, Ed, that when and if you might be seeking subjects for your intensely interesting broadcasts, you might find in Miss Mary Sachs a subject of tremendous appeal and public interest.

Again, my hearty congratulations upon the well deserved tribute you are to receive on May 5th, and with my sincere good wishes to the family,

Sincerely

Tony

Dear Ed,

I am enclosing a translation of an editorial written by René Payot who directs the "Journal de Genève", as I consider it a very objective and clear resumé of the French elections.

In my opinion it is invaluable to have the reactions of a Swiss who is not personally concerned in the events in France. Most of my friends here agree with me that René Payot's editorial was the most accurate of any written after the elections. The French political picture is such a confused one today that I think it is helpful when one has the opportunity of reading a summary as brief and clear as this one.

With my best wishes, and love to you both -

As always Margaret -

P.S. I do hope to see you and Janet when I am home in February -

Journal de Genève: 7 January 1956

THE HEAVY RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE FRENCH PARLIAMENT

It is possible to deplore the result of the French elections on account of the fact that they have given rise to no coherent parliamentary majority which would be capable of ensuring governmental stability. Nevertheless the positive side of the elections should not be lost sight of. The French people have expressed their deep-rooted discontent and, by voting very heavily, have given considerable dimensions to their protests; in truth they are disgusted by the manner in which their régime operates and by the inability of political parties to resolve the essential problems, their petty struggles having caused them to lose all sense of national interests.

The fact that 146 outgoing deputies were not re-elected reveals the desire for renovation which exists in the nation as a whole. The success of the Poujade Movement also demonstrates that the country is anxious for a change. The Poujadists are not hostile to the Republican régime itself, unlike the disciples of the Action Française; they do not have a leading intellectual like Maurras to instruct and lead them. With the exception of two students and one chemist, the Poujadist deputies are composed entirely of small-scale industrialists, shopkeepers and artisans; in a word, people who are in daily contact with the ordinary difficulties of life. The fact that they are able to speak on behalf of 2 1/2 million electors is proof that in the French "petite bourgeoisie" there exists a considerable degree of uneasiness. However, on talking to the Poujadist leaders, we were struck by the fact that they were not only concerned with their own material interests. They deplored the fact that through its weakness the French Government had often lowered France in the eyes of foreigners. One of them stated that they found it unacceptable that the idea of a European Army, originally conceived in France, should have been sabotaged by Parliament. A great power cannot offer itself this sort of luxury.

Thus it will be well in the new Parliament not to treat these 52 deputies lightly or scornfully merely because they are tyros in the political world. Part of French opinion is behind them - a whole mass of good folk who are the very backbone of a nation.

At the same time it is well to realize the threatening aspect of the recent elections. A warning has been given to the traditional parties. This is the régime's last chance. If it shows itself unable to carry out the necessary reforms, it will go under very soon and suffer the same fate as the Weimar Republic. In actual fact, all the national parties suffered losses. Dissolution did not live up to the hopes of the Pinay-Faure-Teitgen coalition. It lost seats; the some 210 seats which it managed to gather not being sufficient to allow it to govern by itself.

As for Mendès-France, though he may be able to flatter himself with having given a new impetus to the Radical Party in Paris and in certain Departments, he did not succeed in winning over a large section of the public. The Republican Front, of which he was the instigator, and which - besides his own political friends - includes the Socialists and some Independents, accounts for no more than 150 seats.

Since no one on the Left, at least for the time being, is considering even the possibility of accepting Communist offers to participate in the Government, the only possible majority can be brought about by means of a broad national understanding presided by someone who has not been involved over closely in the electoral struggle. This is the solution which commonsense indicates and is, moreover, the only one to take account of parliamentary necessities. The MRP proposed it even before voting began; the Moderates are prepared to accept it. Though M. Mendès-France still appears reserved in his attitude, he is sufficiently clearsighted to see that, at the present juncture, an extreme policy would be the worst possible.

However it is also clear that it will not suffice to bring together men of varying opinions in order to form a government capable of action. They must be united as a program covering those problems which it is no longer possible to defer; with Algeria - where the situation is growing steadily worse - as a first priority.

By the manner in which it has voted the nation has demanded this reevaluation. Whatever the bitterness which the electoral campaign has left behind it -- a campaign moreover where personal passions and injustice played much too large a part -- the nation would not appreciate it if its wishes were not respected.

Dear Mr. Murrow;

Several months ago you were kind enough to give me an interview and, at the time, asked me to come back when the then current situation was more settled. Now I would very much like to have the opportunity to talk to you again at your convenience.

I am taking the liberty of enclosing my resume. As you can see I have had no television training as such but have had wide and varied experience in special projects, both in this country and abroad. I am convinced that, given the opportunity, I could make a definite contribution to your organization. Yours is, in fact, the only office with which I have really been interested in connecting over the period of the past two years.

Mr. Walter Cronkite

Dear Walter:

I take the liberty of addressing you by your first name because I have faithfully followed your reporting and broadcasting thru many years and I feel that I know you. Tonight I was shocked at the policy of the network for which you work. Its editing of the official Democratic movie at the convention deprived me of seeing those things which the Democratic Party considers important. This past perhaps is not so great a loss to me since I am old enough to have seen and to have heard Woodrow Wilson, Alben Barkley, Franklin Roosevelt and other makers of the Democratic tradition. But there is a whole younger generation who do not have my vantage point. I thought it was the job of good reporters to permit a political party to tell the public of those things which are its past accomplishments. The views of reporters are of course interesting, but they cannot compete with the official record the party itself wishes to present.

As an independent voter I have the right to expect that I will receive from a medium of communication an impartial and full story of each party's convention. I dialed to CBS, bearing in mind its past performance, with the greatest of confidence.

It is with great reluctance that I shall forego the pleasure I have always felt in watching you and Ed Murrow, but for the next two weeks I shall follow the reporting of another favorite of mine, John Daly. My neighbors tell me that his network seems to have instructed him not to depart from the action on the rostrum unless said action was clearly of the "breather" or "light filler" type.

It has seemed to them that Carroll's old friends, colleagues and admirers might welcome the opportunity to pay him their tribute of regard and affection, and that a bound volume of letters from the people to whom he is bound by ties of affection and association would mean more to him than any tangible birthday gift of which they have been able to think.

Thanks for your note of May 31. I quite understand your decision to keep PERSON TO PERSON away from political matters. I would almost certainly do the same thing if I were in your place.

Dear Barry:

Rightly or wrongly, we have decided to try to keep PERSON TO PERSON out of the political tent. One reason is that once we start, we would have a hell of a time knowing where to stop. Second, is that the air is going to be full of politics on other programs. This may be a mistake, but we are going to try it that way.

I await to hear from you on the matter of the candidate.

Dear Ed:

May I make a suggestion for a possible "Person to Person" program next Fall? An interesting subject would be Adlai Stevenson, Jr., and his wife in their small but picturesque $60 a month apartment in Cambridge. Young Adlai will then be in his final year at the Harvard Law School.

They are living a very simple life, which exactly corresponds to the life of so many young-married graduate students. Nancy Stevenson, who is charming and good-looking, has decorated the apartment most attractively. There are only three rooms and a bath, all of them small, so Adlai, Sr., when he visits them, must sleep on a mattress on top of an old-fashioned icebox in the kitchen.

An interview with these young people would be attractive, I believe, and it might be possible to bring John Fell into the picture as a casual visitor. It is only fair to warn you that Nancy is expecting a baby on election day, so she will not be at her most glamorous during October, but she is so completely natural in her manner that I do not believe she would be embarrassed by appearing on television in an acutely interesting condition.

If the idea should appeal to you, I am sure young Adlai and Nancy would be happy to cooperate.

As I said to you in the moment we saw each other at the Gridiron Dinner, I am still extremely eager to take advantage of your recent offer in regard to the candidate himself. I will be watching for the first opportunity after the California crisis is passed.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

Barry

Dear Barry:

We are still hoping to do the Bookmobile piece sometime, but our problem is now complicated by the fact that Brother Paley has directed us to deal with sixty or ninety-minute pieces which makes it kind of tough. The only thing I can say is that we are still trying to find a way to do it.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Ed:

I enclose a tear sheet containing a story by James Goble on the operation of the 101 Bookmobiles now serving Kentucky. I thought you might not mind taking a look at this new bit of evidence of what the Bookmobile program is accomplishing. I still have high hopes that you will be able to make some use of this subject.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

Kentucky Bookmobiles Do An Efficient Job; But It Isn't A Breeze

By JAMES GOBLE, Courier-Journal Staff Writer

THE Muhlenberg County Bookmobile is scheduled to arrive at exactly 8:30 a.m. Tuesday at Dunmor Post Office.

Why should that be of any interest to Kentuckians throughout the state? At first glance, it seems to be an insignificant happening in a place that's not even on most maps.

But it's important simply because Dunmor is a little place. It's important because not even Dunmor's handful of citizens have been overlooked in the careful planning of the Bookmobile's schedule. It's important because Dunmor is only an example of the little-known places being served all over Kentucky by 101 Bookmobiles.

The libraries on wheels are much in the news now in Kentucky's weekly papers. Their schedules have been revised with the opening of schools; and that's of great interest up many a dirt and graveled road, as well as along the asphalt and concrete highways.

Schedules Fixed

The Muhlenberg County Bookmobile will leave Dunmor Post Office at 9:30 a.m. At exactly 9:40, it is scheduled to arrive at Dunmor School. It will leave the school at 11:10. The next stop will be at 11:25 at the home of Mrs. Andrew McElwain in Penrod. At 12:30 p.m. the Bookmobile will halt in Belton at the home of Mrs. J. F. Morris. It will reach McClearn's Store in Ennis at 1:35. The last stop of the day will be at 2:30 at Forsythe's Store in Browder.

There's no use looking for Penrod, Belton, Ennis and Browder on the ordinary map. Lots of map-makers haven't heard of them. But the folks who welcome the Bookmobile at the homes and stores in these communities have heard of many a far-off place in fact and fiction from the books brought to them on a regular schedule.

It was to supply the rural need for literature that the Bookmobiles were given to the State late last year by Kentucky Bookmobile Project.

Opportunity Limited

Before that, many a rural citizen had no opportunity to borrow much in the way of literature. Not unless he went to the library in his County seat. Provided he could get transportation. And provided the County had a library.

The planning that has gone into all the Bookmobiles' schedules should be heart-warming to the people who donated funds for their purchase last year.

While the Muhlenberg County Bookmobile is stopping at Dunmor early Tuesday morning, the Todd County Bookmobile will be at Corinth School, the Harrison County Bookmobile will be at Renaker, the Shelby County Bookmobile will be at Christiansburg, and the Monroe County Bookmobile will be at Hickory Grove.

No School Missed

Those are only the first stops to be made on Tuesday. Each Bookmobile will make many more during the day. And on other days in the week, they will be operating on exact schedules for other routes in their counties. Each route is revisited every week, every two weeks, or once a month, depending on individual Bookmobile schedules. No school is missed. Neither are the adults in any area a Bookmobile can reach.

The wheeled libraries are welcome for more reasons than one.

It's a chance to ask the driver a question or two about a book that might have been a bit puzzling. And it's an opportunity to inquire about the news in nearby communities. Some drivers are even asked to deliver packages to town, or to give a person a ride down the road.

SWAPPING'S ONE WAY TO GET FRESH BOOKS

The Bookmobiles operate only about half the week in many counties. The driver often is the County librarian; and he or she must spend some time in the library in town, whether it be fortunate enough to have its own building or just a room in the School Board's quarters.

More Books Needed

Many of the rolling libraries need more books. Each was equipped last fall with an average of 2,000 volumes by the State Library Extension Division. (The title to each Bookmobile is vested in the State agency, which supplied them to counties willing to support them.)

The books were both old and new. The old volumes were collected in a statewide drive by the Kentucky Bookmobile Project. Later, some were donated locally to individual Bookmobiles. New volumes were bought with a special assembly appropriation and with funds solicited by the Bookmobile Project.

Kentucky soared from near the bottom in national public-library-service ranking to near the top when the 101 Bookmobiles began rolling. But prestige doesn't buy new volumes or repair old ones. The financial going hasn't been too smooth on many a county level.

The Woodford County Sun of Versailles, for example, reported the Bookmobile Library Board "will gladly accept donations of books, and would like to have a copy of 'The Caine Mutiny,' and any books by Jesse Stuart. Horse and dog stories are also wanted, and the Bookmobile needs at least two copies of the new or revised editions of the Bible . . ."

'Children Disappointed'

And at Tompkinsville, Bookmobile Librarian Curtis Murphy made this report in The Monroe County News:

"The Bookmobile now has 1,500 books checked out, and I could have checked out several hundred more if we had them. Children have been disappointed at many of the schools because there are not enough easy-reading books to go around . . ."

In Muhlenberg County, the Bookmobile Control Board is continuing the unusual method it used last year to finance its wheeled library. It accepts donations from business firms to supply gasoline and oil for the Bookmobile, according to The Greenville Leader.

But the best example of ingenuity in Bookmobile operation comes from Harrison County. The librarian, Mrs. C. E. Judy, used rare uncommon sense in getting a supply of fresh books; and she deserves more widespread credit than The Log Cabin of Cynthiana was able to give her.

In this day of big planning, committee meetings, surveys and collection drives, Mrs. Judy tackled the problem in a very direct, practical manner. She simply traded books with the Nicholas County Bookmobile librarian, and now each has a freshened stock.

BILL LADD'S Television Almanac

'Medic' Star, D. Boone Descendant, Has Some News for One D. Crockett

ESTES PARK, COL.

I HAVE just received a communique from Richard ("My name is Konrad Styner. I'm a doctor of medicine") Boone of the "Medic" TV show.

"This business of little kids running around screaming 'bang bang' and shooting off old Betsy at you is enough to break your nerves," says Richard.

R. BOONE

I might have put this down to a fit of professional jealousy until I found in the last paragraph that Richard is a seventh-generation descendant of Daniel Boone. May still be professional jealousy, but Boone claims not so.

"Uncle Dan," he says, "was 52 and about ready to retire to his rhododendron when Davy was born on a mountain-top in Tennessee.

"A good thing, too. Daniel killed so many animals in his day (that) if Davy had been around at the same time, he wouldn't have been able to find a possum to make a hat out of.

"And I get the impression that Davy felt life was pretty tough and dangerous in his time. Fact is Uncle Dan had beaten the Indians at Boonesborough, and life in the Kentucky-Tennessee area was just about as perilous as a rainy Sunday in Philadelphia by the time Davy came along.

"There has been a little debunking of the Crockett myth in the last few months. I'm glad. He stole a whole lot of his material from Uncle Dan. That business about he killed a b'ar when he was only 3!

The b'ar probably was 3. Davy was about 39!

Quite A Speller, Dan'l

"Why, he even stole the spelling of b'ar from Uncle Dan. And if there was anything Uncle Dan was original in, it was his spelling.

"There is one thing the Boone family admits: Crockett beat us at the advertising game. Maybe because he was a congressman, he didn't spare the horses when it came to recounting his own exploits."

"Actually, though," Boone says, "we are great admirers of Crockett. It's just we are tired of seeing all the kids running around looking like poor men's Kefauvers."

Boone is probably more at home with scalpel and suture than with guns. He should have had enough of them during the war when his Navy air squadron was torpedoed on the carrier Intrepid, bombed on the Enterprise and kamikazied on the Hancock.

This bang-bang business leaves him cold.

Best-Bet Summer Shows

HOLLYWOOD'S best bets for summer shows which will be heard from this fall or in subsequent seasons:

The Johnny Carson Show, C.B.S.: Show people point out that Carson is a real performer with a new style of comedy especially suitable to TV.

Jonathan Winters: Another comic tailormade for TV. The problem here is that he requires a special type of material—or at least has used one to a great extent so far. Who can keep him supplied? Or can he change pace and do anything else?

The Whiting Sisters: Folks in Hollywood feel that this show has definite possibilities in the situation-comedy field.

WASHINGTON SIDELIGHTS

Attitude of French Toward N.A.T.O. Has American Diplomats In A Sweat

For The New York Times and The Courier-Journal

WASHINGTON.—Sharp differences between the attitudes of France and the rest of Western Europe toward the United States, the Soviet Union and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization are worrying United States diplomats.

Just after the Geneva Conference in July, French public opinion briefly joined that of Britain, West Germany and Italy in hailing President Eisenhower's contribution to peace. But now, according to evaluations of the views of French officials, newspapers and key private groups, French public opinion is settling back into an old pattern.

In the pattern are neutralism as well as suspicion aggravated by fear of United States intervention in behalf of the nationalists in North Africa.

Also, few Frenchmen seem to feel that their security is assured by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, to which West Germany is now admitted under provisions for limited rearmament.

If it would prevent German rearmament, an All-European Security Pact, as proposed by the Soviet Union, would appeal to many Frenchmen, it is believed, even though this might mean the end of N.A.T.O.

What worries some United States diplomats is that N.A.T.O. is physically based on France. Headquarters is at Rocquencourt just outside Paris. All main lines of communication—military highways and fuel pipelines in particular—have been and are being built from the western shores of France across France to the Rhine.

'Over A Barrel'

THE REPUBLICAN state chairmen adopted a resolution at their meeting here the other day telling the President they were "looking forward" to supporting him again next year. But they did not ask him outright to run.

"We didn't dare," one of them admitted privately. "He's got us over a barrel so that we're afraid to do anything he might not like. We're afraid he might stamp his foot if we did."

Vice-President Richard M. Nixon apparently convinced a good many chairmen who had doubts about him that he really should be renominated next year. They came away from a luncheon at which he spoke full of praise for his political shrewdness and ability as a speaker.

New York Republican leaders are not entirely counting out former Governor Thomas E. Dewey as a possible candidate for the Senate next year against Senator Herbert H. Lehman, Democrat. And if President Eisenhower should not run again, the New Yorker, who twice ran for the presidency and lost, may still have powerful support for a third try.

What's A Dewat?

THE TREASURY has started another drive to create "dewats." If you have an undewat in your home, the Treasury wants you to dewat it right away.

A dewat, the department explains, is a deactivated war trophy, a captured enemy firearm that has been rendered unserviceable by welding the chamber shut and welding the barrel into the frame or receiver.

'Rope of Sand'

JOHN L. LEWIS greatly fears, he says, that if the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations merge according to the terms of their craft constitution, "the new merger will part like a rope of sand that it is."

Lewis's "rope of sand" phrase started a lot of speculation about the source of this piece of imagery. In recent years, it has been used as the title of a whodunit and of a movie. Many people took a hint from Lewis's fondness for Shakespeare. Others guessed the Bible.

The A.F.L., by way of retort, said Lenin had likened the form of labor organization in this country to "a rope of sand."

The phrase originated with none of these. Burton Stevenson's "The Home Book of Proverbs, Maxims and Familiar Phrases," cites half a dozen uses of the phrase, the earliest being that of Aristides about 475 B.C.

It was used by Francis Bacon, by Robert Burton in "The Anatomy of Melancholy," by Samuel Butler and by lesser-known writers over a span of 2,000 years.

DREW PEARSON Says:

Cuba's President Batista Has Put Humane Touch To Handling Revolts, Latin-American Style

HAVANA—If we are to have Latin-American revolutions, then I would rather have them under a man like ex-Sergeant Fulgencio Batista.

When he took over the Cuban Government in 1952 without the loss of a single life, a colonel came to him with the news that President Carlos Prio refused to leave the Presidential Palace.

"Is he comfortable?" asked Batista.

"Apparently so."

"Then let him stay there," ordered the new President of Cuba.

Calling another colonel, Batista gave this instruction:

"Here are your orders. Listen carefully. Take four armored cars and go to the Presidential Palace. There, take up your station at each corner of the palace. You will make sure that nothing happens to Carlos Prio.

American Admired

President Batista did not tell me this when I talked with him in this same Presidential Palace. It was told to me by an American, Burke Hedges, formerly of Patchogue, Long Island, now head of the largest textile industry in Cuba and a naturalized Cuban citizen. Hedges was offered a position in the new Batista Cabinet.

Hedges also told me how he had once gone to Batista with a report on graft on the part of a personal Batista friend holding office in his administration. Batista told him he would not convict on gossip, but to bring concrete evidence. Later Hedges produced the evidence.

"This touches a spot of great affection," said the President. But he fired his friend.

I asked President Batista when I saw him why it was that he was now allowing ex-President Prio to live in Havana and lead the opposition against him. This is not customary in Latin-American countries. Uruguay is full of political exiles from neighboring Argentina. Peru harbors exiles from nearby Bolivia, while Mexico is the haven for a host of Guatemalans who fear to return to their homeland.

Arms Effort Admitted

Prio's position in Havana was even more unusual, for he had lived in the United States for a while where he was twice indicted by the U.S. Government for collecting a vast horde of arms with which to invade Cuba. He has admitted publicly that he collected these arms. Yet Batista recently allowed him to return to Havana, where he harangues the Batista regime.

"No Cuban should be barred from his own country," Batista replied.

"I've also been asked whether I would prosecute Prio," he continued. "Prio spent $5,000,000 for those arms and obviously didn't get it practicing law in the United States. However, the courts are separate from the executive branch of government in Cuba and personally I do not believe in revenge.

PRESIDENT BATISTA
Has promoted civil liberties

"We caught a million dollars' worth of Prio's arms just the other day," Batista confided. "They had just come into Cuba. We have taken the arms, but we are not jailing the leaders. The arms were purchased with Cuban money, so we're turning them over to the rmy. Prio and his friends have more arms than the entire Cuban Army, so we are gradually rearming the army with his arms."

Batista smiled at the humor of the situation. Later, and not apropos of his political enemies, he remarked:

"It doesn't pay to get angry. Keep your sense of humor and you stay young."

Philosophy and Enemies

Though he was talking about his own personal philosophy, he seems to apply this to his enemies. On the day I arrived I turned on the TV set in my room and heard one of Batista's political opponents haranguing at length. Next day, ex-President Grau San Martin and elder statesman Cosme de la Torriente delivered political blasts at a Lions Club luncheon and got Page One treatment in all newspapers.

This is a lot more civil liberty than I have seen on other trips to Cuba, and a lot more than exists in many other Latin-American nations.

In contrast, it was only a short time ago that top political leaders under Grau and Prio had their own small private armies which beat up and murdered at will. These are no more. Political murders have practically evaporated.

I tried to get the President into a debate on the relative merits of Yale, Harvard and Princeton by asking him why he sent his eldest son to Princeton. He has, by the way, eight children. But Batista was too good a politician to alienate the alumni of Yale and Harvard.

"There are many excellent universities in the United States," was his diplomatic reply, "but we decided on Princeton because it seemed to offer the things my son and I wanted."

I am sure this is my first "fan" letter, if you can call it such — but I feel compelled to write you a few lines about last night's program on the Israel-Egypt conflict.

It was a masterful presentation and so completely absorbing and gripping that we sat for the entire 90 minutes without moving or speaking. It gave us the story of this tense situation as we would never get it from newspaper columns, and as always — you left us with much to think about!

We almost never miss one of your programs, and always enjoy them — but this program last night was the most outstanding of its kind I have ever seen.

The following suggestions were effective with the particular lighting used. If the lighting changed, there would have to be a makeup change in colors used and in the amount used.
The products used were panchromatic shades for film and television.

Numbers 7N and 8N were blended together for the over-all base. Number 10N (three shades darker in tone) was used for shading under the chin, both sides of the nose, and on the lower cheeks. A product called "Erase", which is really a highlight in makeup language was applied under the eyes, on the nasal lines on either side of the nose, and especially to soften the darkness of the line between the eyes. Very little makeup was used. A good makeup depends upon careful blending of all of the above mentioned products. This consequently doesn't present a made up look, and adequately provides a clean, clear picture, without changing the individual.

Dear Ed:

I recently wrote you on our struggle to get action in Congress on the OTC Bill but I guess you have been too busy going to strawberry festivals with the President to drop me an answer. In any event, I am nothing if not determined and here is an angle that you might be able to use on your nightly radio broadcast.

As I told you in my last letter, all the individual Chambers of Commerce are voting on the resolution on OTC and any action taken by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce will be based on the results of this poll.

I am enclosing a copy of a letter which the Monsanto Chemical Company sent out to every Chamber of Commerce in the United States, some thirty two hundred in all. In reading this Monsanto letter you will note that the chemical company urges the Chambers of Commerce to take no action at all, in other words, not to vote for or against the resolution.

It is a parlous state of affairs indeed when a great chemical company would urge American citizens to discard the democratic process of voting in favor of a laissez-faire attitude.

Believe you me, we need every bit of help we can to persuade the Congressional leaders to bring the OTC Bill out of the Rules Committee. Naturally, we had been hoping that the President would take charge of the situation but obviously that is impossible. I certainly hope that you can step into this fight which is of course of great concern to us all. I am also enclosing a recent press release which ties in with this story.

Good luck and best regards.

PRESS RELEASE

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
JUNE 7, 1956

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
JUNE 7, 1956

Mr. George L. Bell, President of the Committee for a National Trade Policy, today made the following statement commenting on the recently concluded fourth round of tariff negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

"It is most gratifying to note that, in the recently concluded fourth round of tariff negotiations under GATT, the United States, which was limited in its negotiating power to tariff cuts of not more than 5% a year for three years, was able to secure such significant reductions in the tariffs on our exports by the other negotiating countries. For instance, almost 80% of Germany's tariff reductions were of 25% or more, while half of Canada's reductions were more than 21%.

"Obviously, the American exporter is going to benefit to a much greater degree when the foreign tariffs against his products have been lowered immediately 25%, than is the foreign shipper whose tariff barrier in this country is cut only 15% over a three year period. Foreign countries reduced tariffs on American goods which totaled $400 million in 1954, and this export figure will undoubtedly increase greatly as these tariff cuts go into effect. In addition to the direct concessions which the U.S. obtained, U.S. exporters will also benefit substantially from concessions which other countries granted to one another. The reciprocal balance with the other countries was achieved by our granting the much smaller cuts authorized by Congress over a wider range of imports.

"Another result of the negotiations favorable to U.S. industry is that since many of the concessions to this country were on items in growing industries such as air conditioning, television, refrigeration and nylon yarn for which there is great demand, the concessions will undoubtedly stimulate and increase trade in these industries.

"Much of the most determined opposition to the Trade Agreements Program has come from among such manufacturing groups as chemicals, machine tools, glass, textile specialities, etc. It is ironic indeed that these same groups, which bitterly fought that portion of H.R. 1 giving additional power to the President to cut tariffs, are specifically cited as benefiting from the tariff concessions granted the U.S. by the other 21 participating nations.

"Naturally, if our negotiators had not been able to offer something in the way of a reduction in U.S. tariffs the other nations would not have reciprocated with us.

"The success of these negotiations, in terms of gains to the U.S. economy, demonstrates again the worth of multilateral trade negotiations and the importance of their effective administration. U.S. participation in the Organization for Trade Cooperation, which would administer the GATT, is vital to this end. In this connection, I can do no better than quote from the statement made to the President last month by the non-governmental advisors to the U.S. delegation for the negotiations just completed: 'We were particularly impressed with the unfailing concern of our negotiators to advance the broad interests of the United States. By no stretch of the imagination could the tariff negotiations, as we observed them, be called a giveaway program ..... On the basis of our observations in Geneva, we are strongly of the opinion that there is need for the permanent administrative machinery that is provided for in the proposed Organization for Trade Cooperation. The adoption of this administrative machinery subscribed to by all the interested nations would clearly be in our enlightened self-interest..... Failure on the part of the United States, the world's greatest trading nation, to join in setting up this organization would cause great dismay and disappointment throughout the free world at a time when the Soviet Union is stepping up its foreign economic efforts.'"

ST. LOUIS 4, MISSOURI

May 31, 1956.

You have been asked to step into the middle of a hot controversy.

You have received a copy of Referendum No. 95 from the U. S. Chamber of Commerce regarding its proposed policy declaration on international trade agreements and a letter from John S. Coleman, president, urging your vote and implying that it be affirmative.

Mr. Coleman's advocacy of the proposed declaration is understandable. He was chairman of the committee which drafted it! He is also well known for his "liberal" views on trade and for his chairmanship of theCommittee for a National Trade Policy, Inc., which has proposed that U. S. tariffs be further reduced, even if it means serious injury to certain industries - the latter to get government assistance in lieu of lost business.

We believe that your own organization, as well as the U. S. Chamber, would err seriously in any declaration made on this highly controversial subject of trade and tariff.

It is necessary at times for you to take a stand on controversial issues, but this is not such a time. Your affirmation of this policy declaration would be contrary to the public views expressed by manufacturers of cotton and wool textiles, wearing apparel, glue and gelatin, colors and pigments, coal, chemicals, steel, non-ferrous ores and metals, aluminum wares, silverware, wood products, leather, paper, plywood, building materials, scientific instruments, surgical and medical supplies, optical goods, tools, electrical equipment, machinery, refractory materials, bicycles and motorcycles, clocks, guns and ammunition, miscellaneous metal products, counting devices, fishing tackle, toys, games, plastic products, buttons, glass and glassware, chinaware and pottery, ceramics and tiles, rubber products, sugar, raw wool, miscellaneous food products and others who would be put out of business by a flood of imports.

On the other hand, your negative vote on this referendum would be contrary to the wishes of importers, Americans for Democratic Action, the motion picture industry, major oil companies (who import oil) and, in general large corporations with major export markets or which manufacture components abroad for final assembly and sale here.

It is impossible for you to vote on this referendum without antagonizing large and meaningful segments of local industry represented in your organization. Therefore, we strongly urge you to refrain from voting on Referendum No. 95.

Please use the enclosed postage-free card to inform us of your organization's action. We are extremely interested.

Sincerely yours,

Edwin J. Putzell, Jr.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Senator Kefauver forwarded your letter of April 5th to me, in which you said you would be glad to talk with me if I should be going to New York at some time. Due to the fact that I have not known when I would be coming to New York until now, I have not written before.

I shall be leaving Chattanooga next week-end by car and will be in New York Monday, June 3rd. If you will see me then, or as soon after as possible, I will deeply appreciate it. It was very kind of you to offer to see me and advise me. I realize you are a very busy man and appreciate the honor you are giving me.

I shall call your office on Monday, June 3rd and hope you will give me an appointment for an interview. Having seen you so often on Television, I feel that I know you personally. I am looking forward to the pleasure of meeting you. Thank you again for your offer to talk with me.

Dear Brother Estes:

Thank you for your letter of April 3rd.

I would be more than glad to assist your friend, Mr. Michael Blancard, but unfortunately know of no prospects of that nature at this time.

However, should he be coming to New York at some point, I would be glad to talk with him and attempt, at least, to steer him in the right direction.

Dear Brother Ed:

I am greatly interested in assisting a very good friend of mine, Mr. Michael Blancard, who is presently with radio station WAPO, Chattanooga, Tennessee.

Mike has had considerable experience in radio and television work and for some time I have been endeavoring to get him connected with a network that would recognize his ability and allot him more time in doing news announcements. Right now he is a night announcer at WAPO, which has very little news. Mike has had considerable experience in newscasting.

I certainly hope you are in a position to be of assistance to him, as I feel sure he would do a very good job and be an asset to CBS. Let me hear from you and be assured of my deepest appreciation for every consideration shown Mr. Blancard.

All good wishes and kindest personal regards,

Roy Huse, 48, Ephrata, Dies

EPHRATA — A prominent Ephrata attorney, Roy A. Huse, 48, died suddenly Tuesday noon at his home.

Huse was stricken by a heart attack shortly after lunch.

A well known member of the community, he was a partner in the firm of Huse and Baird. He also served as secretary and attorney for the Quincy-Columbia Basin Irrigation District and was a director of the Security State Bank.

During the early 1940s he had served as an assistant state attorney general. He came here in 1946.

Huse also was a director of District Six for the Washington State Alumni Association and president of the Ephrata chapter of the Cougar Club.

He had been active in many civic groups and was extremely active in work dealing with the development of the Columbia Basin Project. Huse had on numerous occasions represented irrigation interests in Washington, D. C., before various congressional committees.

Survivors include his widow, Janet; a sister and two brothers, including Harry Huse, former Washington state director of licenses.

How to Win Friends

"Report From America" is a filmed TV series designed to show this country to Britons—and any other country that wants to look—as we really are. It is produced by an NBC film team headed by Don Cash under the auspices of the British Broadcasting Corporation and the United States Information Agency and already, after only three shows, it is a huge hit with the British public.

John Crosby

As an example of the sort of comment the new series has evoked, "The Bristol Evening Post" has remarked: "It is astonishing what a great disservice the majority of American films do to their native country; how inaccurately they portray the American way of life. Alistair Cook's 'Letter From America' did much to remedy this. The new 'Report From America' series is meant to be the visual equivalent of these. And I think they will succeed."

The series is designed not to boast about America—there has been entirely too much of that abroad already and it does not win us any friends—but to show our problems and how we meet them. The first one, for instance, was about our parking and other traffic problems, and it started out by showing that it is practically impossible to park not only in New York but anywhere in the country. Well, traffic and parking are not just American problems, they are almost world-wide problems and are especially acute in England. The English reaction to the fact that we had the problem as badly or worse than they did was universally sympathetic.

This, I think, is propaganda at its wisest. For one thing, it makes human beings of us. For another, it's honest. The traffic show started with a shot of Joseph C. Harsch, the NBC Washington commentator who narrates all these films, trying to find a parking space and not finding one. Then you see the congested city streets, the innumerable "No Parking" signs and you meet a lot of Americans, grappling with the problem as best they can.

There are some nice touches of quiet humor in this one which ought to win us some friends, too. Of course, the picture isn't all black. America's great superhighways, its cloverleaf intersections, its freeways all get very good notices. Harsch pointed out that much of the nation's cargo moved freely on our 3,000,000 mile network of highways. Of this bit the "London Evening News" said: "Such things as the conversation between the long-distance truck driver and his acquaintance in a roadside cafe were so convincing that one could hardly believe they had been staged for the purpose." (But they were. The "long-distance truck driver" was actually an NBC announcer.)

Second of the series was about the small town newspaper, "The Suffolk County News" of Sayville, L. I., and how it managed to compete with New York's big newspapers with local crusades and local reportage. This afforded an opportunity to show a picture of one of our older small towns. Sayville was shown to be a town where people chipped in to build a new Lutheran church and started an ambulance service manned by volunteers. After this was shown on the BBC, thousands of letters from Britons poured in on the "Suffolk County News." One man sent a coat, explaining that regulations forbade him from sending money out of Great Britain but that they could sell the coat and turn the money over to the fund to rebuild the church.

So far there have been five "Reports" and a sixth is in the cutting stage. Three have been shown on BBC and the idea is to supply one every fourth Wednesday from now on. The others are concerned with how Pittsburgh licked its smog problem (which instantly started Londoners to asking why London couldn't do the same thing about its own smog problem), education, American shopping habits, and automation.

Already the program has received the highest rating of any filmed documentary on the BBC. So far Britain is the only country it has been shown in but the program will be translated into practically all languages including Arabic and Chinese, and it is hoped that it will get world-wide circulation. That is, it will be shown everywhere except here because there is a regulation forbidding the showing of any material put out by the United States Information Agency in this country. Don't ask me why.

Columbia Points Up Issue of Book Banning In Film Short Entitled 'Freedom to Read'

A fourteen-minute motion picture short subject made by Columbia University in connection with its bicentennial celebration was presented here yesterday at a press screening held at the Johnny Victor Theatre, 40 West Forty-ninth Street.

Entitled "Freedom to Read," the film was produced to stimulate civic and classroom debate, through television and group showings, on the bicentennial theme, "Man's Right to Knowledge and the Free Use Thereof."

The film was financed by the Fund for the Republic, independently established by the Ford Foundation. Erik Barnouw served as supervisor, and Julian Roffman directed and photographed the picture from a scenario by Philip Lewis.

Filmed entirely in an unspecified public library "somewhere near New York City," the action dramatizes a conflict, as personified by an experienced librarian and a determined citizen, over the advisability of banning certain books from the shelves. In the library board meeting that serves as a climax to the picture, both sides are heard and considered.

The citizen, a father, contends that the works of Voltaire, "an exposed Communist," and John Milton, "a well-known fellow traveler," are unsuitable for young minds. The "best defense against communism is offense," he maintains, advocating "quarantine" measures against "spreading disease."

The librarian, also a parent, calls book suppression a direct violation of her country's "freedom heritage." She quotes, as follows, from President Eisenhower's statement to the convention of the American Library Association.

"As it is an ancient truth that freedom cannot be legislated into existence, so it is no less obvious that freedom cannot be censored into existence, and any who act as if freedom's defenses are to be found in suppression and suspicion and fear, confess a doctrine alien to America."

The resolution, however, is left entirely to the spectator in a fade-out that poses the question, "How can a library best serve our freedom?"

Prints are available for rental or sale from the Center for Mass Communication, a division of the Columbia University Press, 1125 Amsterdam Avenue.

Dear Dudley:

Sorry to be so late in answering yours of July 11th, but I have been out of town most of the summer.

Sorry, but there is no chance of our undertaking the program Mrs. Walker suggests. While there is a chance that the subject might be of interest to audiences outside of New York, still I am afraid the appeal could scarcely be on a nation-wide level, and if we were to do such a program we would be overwhelmed with requests from other organizations of a similar character.

Dear Ed:

While this is a little bit out of the scope of I.I.E., I thought you would be interested in the enclosed letter from my friend, Mrs. Whitehouse Walker, of the New York City Mission Society.

The suggestion that you might consider undertaking a TV show describing the program of this worthy organization in providing camping facilities for city children seems to me very worthwhile. It seems to me that the subject matter would have great interest to audiences, not only in New York, but in other cities which have the same problem. I will very much appreciate your considering Mrs. Walker's suggestion, and should you decide you can do anything with it, would you communicate with Miss Button of the New York City Mission Society.

I would like to have talked to you about this personally, but my imminent departure abroad won't make this possible until my return around the middle of August. If there is anything I can do at that time to help, I certainly will.

With kind regards,

Sincerely,

NEW YORK CITY MISSION SOCIETY
105 EAST 22nd STREET • NEW YORK 10, N. Y. • GRamercy 5-6070
FOUNDED 1812

July 10, 1957

Dear Dudley,

I am so grateful to you for being willing to talk with Edward R. Murrow about the possibility of a t.v. show on camping in New York State. I was very much impressed with his Puerto Rican film presented this spring on his show SEE IT NOW.

I represent the New York City Mission Society on a Community Camping Committee, organized by the Community Council of Greater New York. They have responded enthusiastically to a suggestion of mine that Edward R. Murrow is the person who could best present the contribution of camping to education and welfare, and what changes have taken place since the early days when organizations like the New York City Mission Society sent children to the country for "fresh air."

In a survey made in 1953 by the American Camping Association, there were 693 camps in New York State: 436 are agency camps; 166 private camps; 91 listed as sponsored by "other sources." Of this total number, 488 were residence camps, 205 day camps. There was a total enrollment of 203,497.

The Community Camping Committee is made up of key lay officers and board members of agencies operating non-profit camps and is a cross-section of agencies both non-sectarian and those representing the three major faiths.

My special interest is in three City Mission camps: Sharparoon, Green Acres, and Minisink. The first two are located near Dover Plains, Dutchess County, not far from the summer residence of Edward R. Murrow.

Green Acres is a family camp, the two others are co-educational camps. The Director of Camp Sharparoon, Rev. P.J.Zaccara, would be happy to see Mr. Murrow and to discuss this idea with him. Dr.Zaccara is active in the American Camping Association and would be able to outline the new developments in camping in the last ten years.

One of the newest and most significant developments is an emphasis on service to families with young children. For example, our Camp Green Acres is just three years old but is answering a great need for people who do not have funds to pay for a vacation and whose children are still too young to go to the regular camps. Many of these are Negroes and Puerto Ricans who are often discriminated against in other vacation spots. The Bronx-House Emanuel Camp is outstanding in the area of family camping. Family counselling and child guidance are available at these camps with plans for a careful follow-up in the city in the winter.

Another emphasis is on the joy of living and learning in small groups in the woods where each child has value and can plan with skillful leaders the things that he wants to do. For children on crowded New York streets, such a camp becomes a dream come true.

The third development in camping is making the experience available on a year 'round basis. At the present time the New York City Mission Society has facilities for winter camping in its three camps. This is more adequate use of buildings and facilities and is becoming increasingly popular in many other camps.

The public in general is far from realizing the great strides that are being made in the camping world by providing not only physical help for children and their parents but also mental and spiritual help. Here is a way to attack the juvenile delinquency problem at its roots and to promote better mental health.

We would be happy to furnish Mr. Murrow with a list of camps and help in any way to make it possible for him to get a good idea of the truly unusual value of camping.

I imagine that Mr. Murrow's schedule is a heavy one and that he is dated up a long time ahead of the presentation of his films. I keep wishing that it were possible for him to take some pictures of some of the camps this summer and present them next spring. It was the consensus of the Committee that there is a great need for public interpretation of the value of camping to the community. It would require a person of Mr. Murrow's ability and understanding to do this task adequately.

This is a long letter but I am sure that, if Mr. Murrow could investigate this idea, he would become as enthusiastic about camping as we are.

The New York City Mission Society will be happy to put Mr. Murrow in touch with key people in the camping field if he will call Miss Button at this address. Of course, I, too, will be glad to help any way I can. The City Mission office will always know where to reach me.

With many thanks for anything you may do to get this to Mr. Murrow's attention, and do have a lovely trip abroad.

Affectionately,

Helene

WINTER CAMPING is a completely new experience for city children who have never known snow to stay white and clean, nor seen how ice decorates a forest.

SUMMER is still the best time to go to camp, and for about 2700 City Mission campers it means new friendships, good times and a new awareness of God.

Future Citizens and Parents

MUSIC is one of many skills, like crafts and discussion techniques, that potential community leaders can be taught.

There are now 324 high school age young people enrolled in a program that, so far as we know, is unique to City Mission—its youth leadership training program. They meet at three centers—Minisink Community Center, Good Neighbor Community Center and the Church of All Nations, the last two being new programs in 1956. These young people meet weekly for both practical and theoretical training in the skills of leadership—organizing groups, leading discussions or songs or games, personal care and development, teaching crafts or hobbies, and numerous other skills. And as they learn, they begin to understand how to use their talents in service to others in the community, church and civic life. These are only a part of City Mission's comprehensive program of leadership training. Our 21 college and graduate scholarship students

Green Acres →

YOUNG PEOPLE who have been through leadership training courses become counsellors at camp and leaders in church and other community groups.

THE FAMILY is at the center of much of what we do because we know that the future of the city depends on what happens to family and home life here.

worked under supervision in churches and centers, developing skills in working with people. In the summer 282 college-age young people from 20 states and 11 nations worked on our camp staffs, gaining experience in the techniques of Christian leadership with boys and girls from city streets. They are learning to be effective citizens —and parents. One of our chief joys is the large number of young families which are the happy and stable union of young adults whose ideals of marriage and parenthood were developed in City Mission programs.

Increasingly all our program is becoming family-centered. Our family camping is just one of many programs City Mission is developing to serve the 3572 families in our active constituency. We spend much time visiting in homes; staff and volunteers made 18,349 calls in 1956. We are convinced that basic to many of the city's problems is the urgent need to build healthy family life.

RENOVATED community house of North Church becomes new mission center in area where over 5,000 children lack recreational and group work services.

CROWDS at Second Spanish Church are indication 75-year-old Broome St. Tabernacle is outgrown and a new building is needed to house growing program.

City Mission

By our most recent estimates, City Mission's total building program in the period 1952-1958 will cost $1,500,000. In all honesty, we would rather spend money on people than on buildings, but the need for adequate churches and centers in the deteriorating inner-city has been urgent, and we have felt compelled to do our part in this emergency.

We have been careful in our capital expenditure. This amount of money will have provided the city's neediest areas with six churches (three new and three remodelled or expanded), two community centers (renovated and equipped), and a new family camp.

Our completed projects, previously reported, are the Church and Community Center of the Good Neighbor (which now requires some remodelling for expansion), the inter-denominational Church of the Open Door, the Bronx Spanish Evangelical Church and the Green Acres Family Camp. In 1956 we renovated the Minisink Community Center and started foundations for the DeWitt Church. We have preliminary sketches for the Mt. Olivet Community Presbyterian Church which should be completed in 1958. Yet to be resolved is the future of the

Camping Year-round

Camping is now year-round in City Mission. With heated and insulated buildings available at our three camps—Minisink, Sharparoon and Green Acres—no week-end, even in the coldest weather, goes by when there are not groups of young people or adults tasting the fun of all-season camping and taking time in retreat programs to get a good healthy perspective on city life. It helps too that so many of our campers are the same youngsters our staff works with throughout the year. Camping thus becomes a high point in a year-round experience of education, fellowship, recreation and worship for more people than ever before.

Minisink is always filled to capacity, and in 1956 took in 1245 campers in the summer, as well as 277 in other seasons. Sharparoon also had a peak season, with 683 campers in the summer, 505 on other week-ends through the year and 170 at young people's conferences.

Green Acres had its first full season as a family camp, with 129 children, 69 mothers and 44 fathers registered last summer. As an approach to the problem of family life, our family camping has been an exciting success.

Most city children still spend most of the summer in the city. We have been studying what we should do about it. Our vacation day schools help meet their needs. 1429 children spent 19,088 days at these centers. We did some experimenting with flexible programming with results that have led us to plan for considerable expansion of our City Mission vacation schools in 1957.

INSIDE THE CLAY is a fascinating shape to be discovered by creative fingers, and inside each child is a unique person to be guided toward healthy maturity.

Dear Mr. Bouche:

Many thanks for your letter.

I am glad you enjoyed the program with Ambassador Alphand. I am most interested in your suggestion that I do a television program discussing the position of art in today's life.

I am afraid it won't be possible to do anything about it before the end of the season because we are already fully committed on our programs up to that time.

However, I would like to think about it for a later date.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Murrow —

Before I return to New York I wanted to thank you for your very kind remarks in your Person-to-Person Show with Ambassador Alphand.

It was nice to have had at least some sort of communication with you — even if only indirectly — after all those years.

I have such admiration for what you stand for in Television and for the vital meaning you have given to this medium.

I often wish that some day I could get you interested in discussing on TV the position of the artist in today's life! And I don't mean this intellectually but quite realistically.

You feel too, I am sure, that with our present prosperity there is a great development of interest in art and cultural enjoyment today, with millions of art lovers and artists searching avidly to reconcile the esthetic with the functional side in art, not as esoterically as the classical European conception.

All those questions, to name only a few, like:
1.) the borderlines between fine art and commercial art (or is there only the professional versus the amateur artist, the sincere versus the smart?) or
2.) why is the painter today the only creative artist left out of participating with royalties in his own success (in contrast to the writer, the composer or even the actors and performers)?
3.) Why the stage fright for most people to judge or to buy art (while spending casually on more perishable items), why their militant differentiation between realism, abstraction and other isms?

Wouldn't you agree that this subject is of lively interest to a much larger audience than one might think? —

And if, my dear Mr. Murrow, I could get you up to my studio again I would make it all a shade lighter by showing you some portraits of intelligent men and beautiful women (not the reverse!), lots of drawings of celebrities (like the one of yourself), sketches for stage costumes and mock-up models for stage sets and, of course, drawings of the last 15 years of changing fashion and society.

Oh well, forgive me, I got too longwinded and I mustn't take more of your time! But I would like to hear from you!

as ever very sincerely,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

It would almost be safe to say that during World War II I listened to Edward R. Murrow until I felt I knew the man! And yet when the idea was presented to me and I decided to implement it, I first thought of getting in touch with Frank Stanton, who was also tapped by President Eisenhower to be a chairman in the President's People-to-People Program. Finally, I decided on the direct approach. So here I am on your doorstep.

I keep getting broadsides from many of the other forty chairmen of People-to-People committees appointed by the President showing the wondrous things they are doing and their great enthusiasm. Frankly, the only thing that I can show for my nine months of labor and the work of my committee is represented in the attached copy of a speech that I made at Absecon, New Jersey on May 2, and the attached photostats of articles from the Times, the Herald-Tribune, and the Louisville Courier Journal. The last one I liked best, because I had nothing to do with its getting into the May 12 issue of the Louisville Courier Journal! Barry Bingham saw to that, and sent me the clipping. You might read into this that I worked hard for what I got in the Times and the Tribune; and you could be right!

Can I persuade you to get one of your assistants to read my Absecon speech enclosed and tell you what the shooting is all about? Perhaps you will have time to read the newspaper clippings.

Best Story of America Sought to Win Friends

Readers Asked to Help Pick Book About Liberty, Justice, Freedom

Readers of the New York Herald Tribune were asked yesterday to help the United States win friends by helping to select a book that would best tell the story of America—"the story of liberty, justice and freedom"—to influence people abroad.

An appeal to name the book which would best tell the story of America was made by George P. Brett jr., chairman of the book committee of the People-to-People program. The program was launched by President Eisenhower last September to promote understanding of America abroad.

Mr. Brett, who is also president of the Macmillan Co., publishers of 60 Fifth Ave., suggested that readers submit their nominations of suitable books to the book committee, The People-to-People Program, 60 Fifth Ave., New York 11, N. Y.

Mr. Brett's suggestion was made during an interview at his office at the Macmillan Co. where he explained some of the details of the book committee's program which he first outlined before a textbook publishers convention in Absecon, N. J., on Thursday.

Publishers Asked Too

The publishers, too, were asked by Mr. Brett to nominate a book which, he said, "describes our country as it is—a friendly place." It would be a book, he said, which "could be most effectively used abroad in bringing home to cultured people—to policy makers—the virtues of our way of life."

Mr. Brett also asked the publishers to contribute to a $100,000 fund to establish an organization to distribute the books and pay for 2,500 copies of each book ultimately selected from those nominated. The publisher of the book selected would be expected to sell these 2,500 copies at non-profit rates. These copies would then be distributed to educators and persons in public life abroad.

All kinds of American books should be taken into consideration in making the selection, Mr. Brett said. However, he asked that books with "political connotations" be not named. "We will leave it to the government—The United States Information Agency or other government agencies—to propagandize," he said.

As time goes on, and given the receipt of sufficient funds, Mr. Brett said he hoped numerous other groups would be asked to name their choice of a book for the purpose outlined by the book committee. Such groups, he said, might range "from plumbers to psychiatrists."

The next appeal for book nominations, Mr. Brett said, will be made before the American Book Publishers Council at Harriman, N. Y., on May 20. The final choice of the book or books to be chosen will be made by a committee of "five well known university educators," Mr. Brett said.

Grouping of Students By Age Is Challenged

The traditional grouping of students by age rather than mental ability was challenged yesterday in a six-year study made by the Fund for the Advancement of Education.

More than 1,000 students of high academic promise were admitted to twelve colleges and universities before finishing high school under the program. They were approximately two years younger than the average college freshman, and only a few had completed twelve years of schooling.

The Fund said in its report that the students outperformed their classmates by a wide margin academically, and also outperformed a special group of comparison students who had entered the same colleges at the normal age and who were about equal in academic aptitude.

The report said that a high proportion of the students were elected to Phi Beta Kappa, two won Rhodes Scholarships, and several won National Science Foundation fellowships.

The students, numbering 1,024 boys and 326 girls, entered the [illegible] colleges in four [illegible] of four years. The first two groups have been graduated, the third is scheduled to be graduated in June, and the fourth is completing the junior year.

The report said that the evidence obtained in the experiment "clearly indicates that the superior student can be hurt by being detained in an intellectual environment he has outgrown."

The report said there was some evidence that in many cases "early admission to college freed scholars from the boredom and frustration of an unchallenging high school environment, gave them new intellectual momentum and enhanced their social and emotional maturation."

Colleges participating in th experiment were the Universi of Chicago, Columbia Universi Fisk University, Goucher Colle Lafayette College, University Louisville, Morehouse Coll Oberlin Colege, Shimer Col University of Utah, Universi Wisconsin and Yale Univ be made to reach a binding agreement on halting atomic and hydrogen tests has been echoed in influential quarters. The Pope has expressed the same hope. Japanese leaders have vainly sought reassurance from us and from the British. Most recently Dr. ALBERT SCHWEITZER, the great humanitarian, has written from his African post a solemn warning.

Our answers to these fears and doubts have so far been defensive rather than reassuring. Dr. WILLIAM F. LIBBY of the Atomic Energy Commission issued a statement apparently answering Dr. SCHWEITZER's warning, but a careful reading of it is not very comforting. Dr. LIBBY says that the "average" of "external dosage from fallouts, that is those which might cause genetic effects . . . has been from about .07 per cent to about three per cent of the natural radiation exposure. . . ."

gress, but charged only with the determination of effects from tests, not with desirability or success of the weapons tested. Dr. LIBBY made much point in his statement of the comparatively small risk we run from testing compared to the big one of being caught without weapons in case of an H-bomb war.

But the risk is not comparatively small if, in the race to keep ahead, we and our potential enemies succeed in poisoning the earth and everything that lives thereon, including even our unborn children. Peace bought at this price would indeed be a desperate mockery. Even the thought of it should urge men of goodwill everywhere into the most intense and prayerful efforts to postpone all testing everywhere, at least until the dangers and risks involved are clearly understood by all the competing nations.

America's Essence In Two Volumes

IF YOU HAD TO CHOOSE two books that best tell "the American story" to people in other countries, what would you select? That is the question asked of a group of publishers by GEORGE P. BRETT, Jr., of the Macmillan Company. His one warning is that no propaganda items are wanted.

Our nominations would be CARL SANDBURG's towering biography of ABRAHAM LINCOLN, and MARK TWAIN's Huckleberry Finn.

Neither of these works presents a Pollyanna picture of America. LINCOLN was a man martyred not only by an assassin's bullet but by the yet deeper wounds of a war that tore apart the country he loved. TWAIN's classic contains such dark elements as a fatal family feud, the flight of a Negro from slavery, and the petty meanness and ignorance of small-town life on the fringes of the frontier.

We think these are assets, rather than liabilities, in presenting a believable picture of America to foreign readers. Both books, in their widely varying ways, breathe the fresh, keen air of a democracy. Their healthy sweep and vitality are the very spirit of American life. The TWAIN classic shows what made America different from every other country. The SANDBURG book shows what made America great.

POEMS FOR OUR TIME

By David L. Morton

WHAT WITH INSTANT and global communications, and the scattering of populations among people, a convention among us, one might suppose that the sense of "belonging" to a given region would be on the wane; and nostalgia for one's native acre would be among the "diminished sentiments." In fact, it seems to be otherwise. Modern poetry is rich—and the word is "rich"—with poems of acute homesickness. The author of the lines below is a resident, at the moment, of the Near East, but his heart was left behind in another country.

FOR RELEASE THURSDAY, MAY 2, 1957
ADDRESS OF MR. GEORGE P. BRETT, JR., CHAIRMAN OF THE BOOK COMMITTEE, INC. OF THE PEOPLE-TO-PEOPLE FOUNDATION, INC. DELIVERED AT THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE AMERICAN TEXTBOOK PUBLISHERS INSTITUTE AT ABSECON, NEW JERSEY

Mr. O'Shea, Ladies and Gentlemen:

I wish to open my remarks by saying that I owe a great debt of gratitude to Lloyd King because of his thoughtful manner in presenting my case to you. I refer to his letter of April 25 addressed to all registrants to the Annual Meeting, in which in paragraph #2 he told you of my connection with the People-to-People Program, and in which he told you that he had included a circular descriptive of that program. I do hope that all of you have had an opportunity of reading that circular, because, if you have, my job will be a lot easier.

Before going on with my discussion of the People-to-People Program, I'd like to put in a little background material -- make a few remarks myself about communism, which will, I hope, convince each of you that the free world is confronted with a horror that must be vanquished. Like thousands of young men of that era, I joined the army in World War I as a buck private. In the course of my military career, I kept hearing a great deal about Communists because of my interest in military intelligence. The more I heard, the more I read about communism and the sinister methods which it was to employ in communizing the world, the more revolted - yes - the more scared I became. From what I learned, I knew I did not want to live in a communized world. At that time, in the late teens and early twenties, the average man was hearing very little of the horrors of communism. I certainly would not have paid more attention to it than most other people had it not been for my military service. As time went on and I learned more of communism, I kept hearing repeated over and over again that the Communists were out to Communize the entire world. That was their sole objective. Ladies and Gentlemen, that is the sole objective of the Communists today. So their pattern has changed not at all in the last thirty-five or forty years.

Back in the early twenties, communism only existed in one country, in Russia. Between then and now, more square miles and more people have been forced behind the Iron or Bamboo Curtain than you could possibly imagine. Indeed, the sinister methods employed by the Communists have conquered more territory and gained control over the lives of more people than any other conqueror in the known history of the world. The conquests of Genghis Khan were minute as compared with the conquests of the Communists between 1919 and 1957.

There is not enough time at my disposal to enable me to name all the countries that have gone under the iron heel of communism; but you will get some idea of what has happened when I tell you that between 1920 and 1957, in Hungary, Rumania, China, and all the other countries, the Russians have conquered without open war an area almost double that of the United States, an area of 4,922,000 square miles, and they have successfully placed 744,236,000 human beings behind either the Iron or Bamboo Curtain. Communism continues to march on. Communism's objective is still to conquer the entire world. I think it is the lack of knowledge of these facts which makes the people of the United States apathetic to the inroads of communism; and I submit that we must dispel the apathy of the people of the United States if we are going to prevent the Communists from pushing the Iron or the Bamboo Curtain further into the free world; and I submit that we must do everything in our power to stop the march of communism, because we in the United States, I am sure you will agree, could not exist as a free people if the entire world outside the United States was Communized.

So, my friends, I am giving you the background which makes me hate communism -- the background which makes me want to do my utmost in this People-to-People Program which was invented by President Eisenhower.

Now I must confess and tell you frankly that never before in my life have I been as baffled by an assignment as I have been over this assignment, given to me by President Eisenhower, to fight communism by being the Chairman of the Book Committee of the People-to-People project. Naturally, I was flattered when asked by the President of the United States to undertake this job, and I made up my mind to give it all I had. But I had not been at the job very long before I realized that I had not a practical idea in my head as to what useful thing the Book Committee could do in waging this war against communism. Since accepting this assignment about nine months ago, I have visited Washington seven times, trying to get steeped in the latest information. Indeed, in my last visit I was there for a week during which I heard the most fascinating lectures from about 9:15 in the morning until five or six at night. More often than not, we watched Communist movies in the evening.

I asked Mr. Francis R. St. John, the head of the Brooklyn Public Library, to join me as Co-Chairman of the Book Committee.

He and I asked some publishers and some librarians to join us to discuss the problem. Virtually everybody that we asked for help helped us. With the aid and the advice of these friends, we slowly increased the membership in our Committee, carefully selecting those we felt could do our Program the most good. Today our membership is about twenty and on its way to thirty.

We have worked hard for the better part of nine months. We have evolved a plan of which we feel that we can be justly proud because we are satisfied that it will make a useful contribution to the People-to-People Program. But the plan is no good unless I can sell it to you, and you will soon see why.

Our enemies, the Communists, accuse us of being warmongers, while actually we are a peace-loving nation. But how do we go about proving that fact? In one of his talks to us in Washington, the President said, "If we are going to take advantage of the assumption that all people want peace, then the problem is for people to get together and to leap governments -- if necessary, to evade governments; to work out not one method but thousands of methods by which people can gradually learn a little bit more of each other. The problems are: How do we dispel ignorance? How do we present our own cause? How do we strengthen friendships? How do we learn of others?"

Well, the Committee on Books of the People-to-People Foundation has decided that books are invaluable in finding the answers to the President's questions. As I said a minute ago, the fruit of our efforts of the last nine months is in your hands to carry forward or to destroy. If the scheme that the Book Committee of the People-to-People Foundation has devised cannot be sold to book publishers, presumably it cannot be sold to anyone. If, on the other hand, it can be sold to book publishers, we of the Book Committee see the possibility of this scheme mushrooming all over the United States.

Now what is this scheme? Well, it is very simple. We would like you, while you are here in Absecon, to take part in a contest. We are going to give you, the members of The American Textbook Publishers Institute, the opportunity of picking from your individual libraries the one book that you would consider as being the best book available in the United States today to tell the world the American Story, the story of liberty, justice, and freedom. We are not, I reiterate, not, asking you to pick from your library books that might be considered to have a political connotation. That is the last thing we want from you. We will leave it to government -- USIA or other government agencies -- to propagandize. No, what we would like you to pick from your library is the book that you like best as a book which describes us, which describes our country as it is, a friendly place. Don't forget, we ourselves have been through civil war. We survived it. A book like Bruce Catton's A STILLNESS AT APPOMATTOX is, in my opinion, great literature. I wish I had had the good luck of publishing it. Well, you do the choosing, but keep away from books that might be considered straight propaganda. You, being publishers, know your books. You have read them. Each of you should have a very clear idea as to what book from your personal library you think could be most effectively used abroad in bringing home to cultured people -- to policy makers -- the virtues of our way of life. You are then asked to write down on a slip of paper the author and title of the book you nominate, together with your own name and address, and turn these slips over to Mr. Malcolm Magruder, who has volunteered his services to the Book Committee of the People-to-People Foundation, and who is setting up a table in the lobby between five and six o'clock this evening.

Mr. Magruder, do you mind stepping up here and facing the audience so they may all know what you look like.

A committee of five well-known university educators has volunteered to go over the slips you have turned in and select from the books you have nominated the one book which it considers best suited to the purpose. Our next move would be to go to the publisher of that book, whoever he may be, and tell him that we want to buy 2500 copies to send abroad. We will tell the publisher that we are prepared to pay him the cost of paper, printing, and binding, royalty, and the publisher's audited overhead, but no profit. We will tell the publisher that we want him to tip in opposite the title page a page which will relate how this book happened to be chosen to be sent abroad in this People-to-People Program. We will explain that the American Textbook Publishers met at Absecon on this second day of May 1957 where they nominated this book as the one best suited to explain America to the recipient. This gift will indeed be a contribution from people to people, since it will be sent abroad from American textbook publishers to selected individuals, libraries, university libraries, educators, public policy makers, and USIA libraries.

Now how is this to be financed? Where is the Committee going to get the money with which to implement its program? We of the Book Committee just know that if you will think carefully of the implications of communism, of how it might destroy our way of life if we do not stop its relentless march, you will wish to make a substantial contribution to this national cause. We need money to get this program started; we need it badly. We need a lot of money. So we are asking you to contribute from five hundred to five thousand dollars to the Book Committee of the People-to-People Foundation. Your check should be made out to the Book Committee, Inc. of the People-to-People Foundation, Inc. We point out that any contribution of five thousand dollars is going to cost your company only approximately twenty-four hundred dollars, because your donation to this program is tax exempt, and you would therefore be paying twenty-six hundred dollars out of the five thousand dollars in income tax in any event.

I hope in making this substantial contribution to this national cause you will give consideration to the Book Committee's natural desire to get this program moving promptly. We will appreciate your mailing your check to the Book Committee, Inc. of the People-to-People Foundation, Inc., 60 Fifth Avenue, New York 11, New York, where Mr. Magruder and I will be all of next week hoping to see the checks roll in.

Now you ask, how could this thing mushroom all over the country. Well, if the Book Committee gets enough money from you and enough money from the American Book Publishers Council when we go to them for money the week after next, we will have lifted this thing off the ground by producing two books and giving them free distribution abroad. And we hope to save enough money out of your generous contributions so as to enable us to hire the services of competent people to run this program thereafter under the direction of the Book Committee. We propose turning this second phase into a charitable act by looking for intelligent employees from among crippled people and those over sixty years of age who have retired, but who are still active and whom we have found through our own examination to be vitally interested in this program. When we have hired these people, they will be major partners in this enterprise, because if they cannot keep it going, they lose their jobs. We see these paid employees following somewhat the procedure that is being followed here -- they finding a way of being invited to conventions of all kinds of industries in all parts of the country in the hope of selling in those conventions the same idea that we are trying to sell you here.

Ladies and Gentlemen, this program is now in your hands. As I have said, the time, the energy, the brains of a substantial committee have been used over a nine-month period in evolving the program. We shall have failed if we cannot raise one hundred thousand dollars from the two sections of the publishing industry. Why, you may well ask, do we need one hundred thousand dollars in order to assure the manufacture of 2500 copies each of two titles. Well, that is the smallest part of our effort. Every organization approached will be asked to select a book; but every organization will be asked to raise far more money than just the sum necessary to purchase the book and get it distributed abroad. We cannot in all conscience persuade good people to come with us unless we can give them continuity of at least a year or two. We need a ten-thousand-dollar or fifteen-thousand-dollar-a-year man to head up this work. He needs a very competent assistant. They need a secretary and a small office. And money must be provided to these people so that, having learned the ins and outs of the program here in the United States, one or two people can be sent abroad to perfect the distribution system at the receiving end of the line. So you see a budget approaching fifty thousand a year is not unreasonable, nor do we feel that it is unreasonable to ask the book industry to give us the money to insure a vigorous start.

We feel that as books are your business you will wish to whole-heartedly support the Book Committee of the People-to-People Foundation. We count on your generosity. Thank you.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Please don't feel I am pestering you.

Here is one that pleases me very much because it comes from behind the Iron Curtain. The letter was of course written in German, but this is a copy of the translation of a letter of August 16 from Ewald Konig of Dresden.

Dear Mr. Brett:

At my recent vacation stay in Western Germany I had the opportunity to notice in "Die Welt" Essen, ("The World" published in Essen) your esteemed article "The Book for the improvement of the understanding between nations" which has found my full enthusiasm.

For these endeavors I wish you full success with all my heart and am convinced that this plan will find much of an echo. This is also a way to keep the peace for mankind through a better understanding of each other. I will be glad to take part in these proposals and to submit at a given time some titles.

I am myself a modest salesman, 53 years old and I hope to contribute a small part to these sublime strivings. Many good wishes for success. Permit the expression of my best regards.

Yours very sincerely,

Dear Mr. Brett:

This is a hasty but appreciative reply to your note of June 10th.

Thank you for the generous comments on "Automation." The response, although not heavy, has been favorable.

I am just off to Yugoslavia for a week and will hope to see you when I get back.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Three generations of Bretts watched your program from 5:00 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. yesterday afternoon. You see, we had the grandchildren and their parents visiting us over the weekend. We all found it a fascinating hour and a half. I waxed so enthusiastic that I sent you a wire congratulating you on the program just as soon as it was over. I hope you received it.

This People-to-People Program continues to haunt me. The power of the press continues to amaze me. Attached is a photostat of a letter dated May 31, which was written twenty-eight days after the brief story in the Times. I think you will find it interesting. I am also enclosing a copy of the May issue of SOCIAL EDUCATION in which the Hastings High School effort is written up on page 209.

I am discovering that a lot of folk thought of a People-to-People program before the President!

Dear Mr. Brett;

The news release in the New York Times for May 3rd concerning you, talk to the American Textbook Publishers, mentioned that you are chairman of the book committee of President Eisenhower's People-to-People program. I had not been aware that there was such a program. Does the Teen Age History of the World which my History Club at Hastings High School, is compiling, fit in with what is being done? May we be a part of it? So far we have collected thirty-five very short histories from thirty-five countries, each written by a teenager about his own country. The best two are in Arabic and in Russian and we have not yet had them translated, but we will. Under separate cover I am mailing to you a copy of Social Education which contains a report of our project.

Sincerely yours, Fannie L. Pingray

Teen-Age World History

Jennie L. Pingrey

COMPILING a history of the world written by teen-agers about their own countries, is the audacious project undertaken by the History Club of Hastings High School, Hastings-on-Hudson, New York, U.S.A. Two years' work has already resulted in a collection of 33 national histories, several promises, and many interesting contacts. The project is based upon the belief that world understanding will be improved by young people knowing more than they know now about what other young people believe to be their own country's history. Since, however, adolescents are not likely to pick up huge tomes, only UNESCO members have been invited and a limit of one thousand words per history has been set. Fairness would prescribe variation of the length according to the antiquity of the country and the complexity of its history, but such careful weighing of factors would be far too difficult an undertaking too difficult for teenagers and the application of an elastic rule would probably cause more trouble than it would avoid.

We requested that each history be written in one of the United Nations languages, if possible; so far, all have been in English except Brazil's (A History Club member has a Brazilian cousin who is a professional translator!); Hungary's (Two students in our school offered Hungarian-born grandmothers as translators); France's and Cuba's, which were taken care of by the French and Spanish departments of our school. No specific requirements or even suggestions were made as to the type of material to be included in the histories the young people prepared—political, economic, or cultural.

Many of the histories we have received show the optimism of youth so greatly needed in our discouraged world. An English boy writes, "Yet today we look forward with hope to the future." Another history begins, "Austria, my beloved country! Where is your place in space and time? What is your importance in the world?" And another says, "Yet Korea is . . . still . . . waiting . . . the new age when justice and peace will reign on the earth." The Belgian history says, "We are proud to bring together more and more often, men of good will." Lebanon is still more specific in its good offices: "It is in the hands of Lebanon more than any other country in the East to help interpret the Arab World to the West. It is also in their hands, especially the Christians amongst them, to help interpret Western civilization and culture to the East." Canada closes its history with this ringing proclamation, "Now in 1954, Canadians can proudly stand among the democracies of the world, confident in the knowledge that it is not by chance that freedom is their heritage but by the 'blood, toil, tears and sweat' of their fellow men."

Civil rights are mentioned in other histories, too. Greece proudly states, "Athens . . . established the ideal of genuine, direct Democracy." Sweden describes its early introduction of trial by jury. Korea refers to its early use of examinations for civil service. Luxembourg proclaims, "Liberty of the press was introduced." The English boy writes that England, "stands today as an example of true democracy where men can freely express their thoughts and ideas without any fear of reprisals being taken against them because they uphold what they believe to be right." Brazil describes the liberation of the slaves in 1888, and Argentina writes that there is no color line there.

Economic history, as well as political, is to be found in these accounts. A Ceylonese student writes, "These Aryans introduced agriculture, irrigation, and a settled social order, thus improving and beautifying the country," and, further on, continues, "Enormous tanks and canals (still in use) were built." Holland's history, the first received and an excellent one, is, of course, sea-dominated. "For centuries the Dutch have fought against their greatest enemy, and friend, the sea. . . . Hydraulic engineering developed. People made plans for the reclamation of land." This should be of especial interest to teen-agers in arid lands. Luxemborg's history relates that she, "survived relatively well the inflation and economic crisis of the 30's. . . . After the war [World War II] . . . new roads were built, bridges reconstructed and the standard of life increased as it never had before." Argentina says, "There are large stretches of desert, which will be as fertile as the Imperial Valley in California once they are irrigated."

Cultural history was included in these student accounts also. Ceylon's history says "Prosperity followed the coming of Buddhism. Architecture, sculpture and painting flourished." The Korean student says that their people, "have been from beginning highly religious." Lebanon states that, "In spite of their warring the Crusades proved to be a movement of fruitful economic, social and cultural interchange between the East and the West." Greece proclaims, "Western civilization as we know it today finds its basic roots ensnarled in the foundations laid by the amazing people who tried to solve the most difficult problems with thought as their only weapon and in so doing taught humanity the power of the mind." Holland includes a reference to Rembrandt. Austria, after emphasizing how small a part of the globe it covers, says it has, "in time full of glory and full of affliction, given immortal cultural values to the whole world."

Some countries specifically note the contributions of other countries to their own. Belgium says, "The Romans were more civilized and taught the Belgians lots of things they didn't know. So the Belgians derived lots of advantages from that situation." And, later in its history, adds this glowing appreciation, "The Constitution passed on the 7th of February, 1837, takes the best part of the ancient communal rights of the famous French 'Declaration of the Rights of Man' which in turn derived from England's constitution and liberties." Argentina referring to one of their presidents, says, "Sarmiento brought teachers from the United States of America to start this country's excellent school system." Holland, after describing the terrible damages of the 1953 flood, adds, "The Dutch succeeded in repairing the damages caused by the flood. To a great extent they have been helped in this task by volunteers from foreign countries, while Holland received important gifts and donations from all parts of the world. The Dutch have felt greatly impressed by the spontaneous acts of sympathy which they will not forget soon."

Some histories emphasize recent history, others their beginnings. Where to start so brief a history might well puzzle an adult; it is not surprising that accounts written by teen-agers show great variations. "The dawn of Korean History dates back as far as the mid-Neolithic Age." Sweden, too, starts with the Stone Age. The Greeks declare that their history has been continuous since the twentieth century B.C. Ceylon begins with 543 B.C. Belgium starts with the ringing statement that, "As far back as you can learn our history, Belgians have always been fighting for independence." Burma writes that, "Modern Burmese history begins in 1551."

To get the varied and delightful histories quoted, we have used many sources of addresses —pen pals, Ministries of Education, servicemen, cultural attachés, friends, relatives, the International Institute of Education, and the New York Herald Tribune student exchange. We have asked only for the address of one good school for teen-agers in each country. An amazing coincidence was that a letter sent to a pen pal in Argentina was assigned for an answer to a girl whose mother had once lived in our village! A startling incident was the reception of a vituperative letter from a man who had seen our request posted on a bulletin board in Venezuela and answered it, criticizing American policy and attitude, and scolding the student chairman for meddling in world affairs instead of raising babies! (She happens to be the oldest in a family of 13 children.) He said he was Polish. We thought his name sounded French and some of the phrases in his letter sounded like Mein Kampf. A touching letter came from a refugee from North Vietnam to South Vietnam who promised to write a history of his country as soon as he could but said apologetically that it was his first letter in English and he had been there only four days! We never heard from him again.

The History Club hopes that a teen-ager in each of the other UNESCO nations will soon seize this opportunity, not for self-glorification and propaganda in the undesirable sense, but, as these teen-agers have done, to relate his nation's history as he sees it, hoping that this will produce a volume that will be read around the world and will be a significant contribution of youth toward international understanding and peace.

he Togoland Plebiscite: United Nations Landmark

L. H. Phillips

HE peoples of the former West African territory of British Togoland have attained independence, and in so doing established a landmark in United Nations y. On March 6, 1957, occurred the double of the transformation of the colony of Gold into the nation named Ghana, and the with it of the Trust Territory of British land. This union is the result of the first cite ever held in a United Nations Trust tory, and marks an implementation of one ideals of the United Nations Charter—the ple of self-determination of peoples.

area known since 1946 as the Trust Terri- f Togoland under British Administration of the two divisions of the former Ger- rotectorate. In 1914 this area was occupied itish and French forces, and became in a part of the League Mandates System; astern (and larger) portion was placed French administration and the remainder British administration. In December, these Mandates became United Nations Territories, with no change in Administer- ithorities.

ish Togoland constituted an area of 13,041 miles, slightly larger than the State of Hampshire and more elongated, being 320 in length and varying in width from 10 miles. It was landlocked, extending north- from a southern boundary located about les inland from the Gulf of Guinea. It rdered on the west and south by the Gold with French Togoland on the east. The population of British Togoland in 1954 totaled 423,000, with the southern area of forests and swamps somewhat more heavily settled than the northern grasslands. Among some 20 principal tribal groups, the northern may be traced to Sudanic origin while the southern, including the well-known Ewes and some Ashantis, are more Negroid.

For more than 35 years British Togoland was administered as an integral part of the Gold Coast colony, with due regard to the special obligations of its status as Mandate and as Trust Territory. Since 1947, however, the unification demands of the Ewe tribe, whose peoples inhabit areas which extend across southern Gold Coast, British Togoland, and French Togoland, presented the British government and the United Nations with a continuing problem.

In the meantime, the political development of the Gold Coast, exemplified by the successes of Prime Minister Nkrumah, led in 1954 to a memorandum by Britain to the Trusteeship Council, announcing that should the Gold Coast become independent, the continuation of the existing Trusteeship Agreement would be impossible. This circumstance led the General Assembly to instruct a Visiting Mission to conduct a survey and submit recommendations. This survey was accomplished in mid-1955, and the Visiting Mission unanimously recommended, in pursuance of Article 76b of the United Nations Charter, that a plebiscite should determine the wishes of the inhabitants of British Togoland. This procedure was acceptable to the Trusteeship Council, and after lengthy consideration the General Assembly adopted on December 15, 1955, by vote of 42-7, a resolution for such a plebiscite. Eduardo Espinosa Prieto of Mexico was appointed by the General Assembly to be United Nations Plebiscite Commissioner.

The Togolanders were not without experience in the use of the ballot box. For elections to the Gold Coast legislature in 1954, universal, direct, secret suffrage had been established. Four-my opinion," the author writes in reference Togoland plebiscite, "not enough attention g given by our media of public information minor but solid accomplishments. It is through xperiences as this that the orderly world of ure is being built." Dr. Phillips is Professor ernment at the University of Redlands in ds, California.

Dear Mr. Brett:

Referring to your most appropriate suggestion of selecting a book which best tells the story of America, its challenges and how its people meet them under their basic philosophy of cooperative competitive coexistence, I would like to nominate the book Vision by Harold Mansfield, and published recently by Duell, Sloan and Pearce.

Vision is a unique story of an aircraft manufacturing company with which I am intimately acquainted. But Vision rises far above the usual in every respect. While completely authentic in every respect, as I know from personal knowledge, it breathes the creative spirit of American industry and delineates the type of leadership which characterizes the best in the way of life which is unique in this land.

E R M: Perhaps we would like this! GPB

Meanwhile, please accept my congratulations on your inception of this program.

Very truly yours,

Interim Report

The People-To-People Book Committee, Inc.

September 9, 1957
The People-To-People Book Committee, Inc.
60 Fifth Avenue
New York 11, N. Y.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE PEOPLE-to-PEOPLE BOOK COMMITTEE, INC.

Your chairman sees no immediate need for a meeting of the Committee, but does feel that you should be kept informed of what is going on. Therefore, this interim report.

As I promised you in my last letter of July 15th, I am sending you with this report a summation of all the projects which have been put before us. Attached to this is a list of all the books that have been suggested for overseas shipment by the Book Committee. I hope that you will read these two documents carefully, and make whatever recommendations you feel would assist us in mapping out a really constructive program.

At the moment we have just a little over eight hundred dollars left in the bank, which means that our need for financial support is at the critical stage.

Malcolm Magruder, of Macmillan's International Sales Department, who has been so ably helping in this effort, came up with what your chairman considered a brilliant idea. The results are now pouring in.

Mr. Magruder suggested that the Committee write to the leading newspapers in twenty or twenty-five countries giving these papers background material about People-to-People, background material about our own Book Committee as contained in one of your chairman's speeches before the book publishers, and a statement to the effect that we would appreciate it if these newspapers would run our story about the People-to-People effort, and more especially that we would appreciate it if they would ask their readers to suggest to us what books of their own country they would recommend be imported into the United States as being books which would enlighten the American public as to the nature of their country and their people. At the same time we asked what books of United States origin their readers thought best represented our country and our people to them.

Mr. Magruder's idea was followed through, and we may have hit the jackpot. Our Embassy in Buenos Aires has forwarded to the State Department a big spread given to our story in La Prensa of August 20th. We already have fifteen letters from individuals in Argentina, notwithstanding the short time between the publication of this story and today's date. We have received a similar response to the lead editorial we were given in The Nation of Rangoon, Burma, and to the editorial which appeared in Die Welt of Germany. So far six newspapers have promised their wholehearted cooperation to our efforts. Typical of the interest created by our appeal is the following quotation from a letter from Buenos Aires.

> "I have read with much interest the letter you sent La Prensa. I think that the idea of the People-to-People Book Committee about exchange of books permitting a better knowledge among the peoples is an excellent one. I also believe that peace can be obtained only on the basis of a mutual understanding, and understanding is only possible through knowledge."

Of course, one of our problems now is that we have to find ways of translating letters from Spanish, German, Indonesian, and many other foreign languages. It is getting a little tough on Macmillan's International Sales Department, but out of this may come a pattern which will persuade a foundation to come to our financial rescue.

IDEAS SUBMITTED TO THE BOOK COMMITTEE FOR CONSIDERATION

IN THE IMPLEMENTATION OF ITS PROGRAM.

Before outlining the ideas which the Book Committee has already received, it would perhaps be wise to remark before-hand that most of them are different from any schemes presently being used for the distribution of books abroad. It should also be noted that most of the projects will require a certain amount of research, research which cannot be conducted without a considerable expenditure of money. Bearing these preliminary remarks in mind, I list hereunder ideas for consideration.

1. HASTINGS-ON-HUDSON HIGH SCHOOL HISTORY CLUB PROJECT.

An idea which the Hastings-on-Hudson High School History Club presented to the Book Committee is an outgrowth of the project it undertook two years ago of writing a brief history of the United States in 1000 words. When they completed this essay, the members of the Club wrote to high schools in all UNESCO countries, asking their students to write similar histories of their countries. So far, over two-thirds of all requests have been answered, and most of the remaining countries have written to advise that they will be submitting their histories in the near future. Once all the histories have been received and edited, the Hastings History Club would like to have them published in book form for overseas distribution. The interesting aspect of this project lies in the human desire in young people the world over to know more of one another's history and culture, and thereby eliminate some of the barriers which have resulted in misunderstandings among nations.

2. PROPOSAL TO CREATE AN INTERNATIONAL COUPON CURRENCY REDEEMABLE ONLY IN BOOKS.

It has been suggested that book publishers, authors, charitable institutions, or any one so inclined, send contributions to the Book Committee for deposit in its account in the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. For these funds, on a dollar-for-dollar basis, book coupons would be issued to the donors. The donor would then send the coupon(s) to a friend, telling him to buy any book of American manufacture he wishes. Advantages:

a. Books become the easiest of all international gifts to make.
b. The donor eliminates all exchange difficulties.
c. Book stores abroad get American dollars.
d. American books get a tremendous boost abroad.
e. A universal book currency is created.

3. ENCOURAGE CHILDREN IN AMERICAN SCHOOLS TO TAKE UP COLLECTIONS AMONG THEMSELVES TO BUY BOOKS FOR SOME OF THEIR LESS FORTUNATE FELLOW-STUDENTS ABROAD.

In this scheme, students in the elementary and high schools of the United States would organize campaigns among the student body to receive money to buy textbooks for overseas distribution. The money collected in this manner would be sent to the Book Committee for deposit in a sort of Grants Account. Needy foreign institutions, anxious to use American textbooks, but unable to purchase them, could then appeal to the Book Committee for the books required in their courses. When the books were sent, the school abroad would be advised that these books had been given to them by such and such a school in the United States. Contact would then be established and the project in the United States high school might be repeated year after year. In other words, this project would be similar to a scheme, presently operative, whereby an American town adopts a foreign town. The students in the American schools should be discouraged from specifying what books they wanted to have sent abroad, since in almost every case they would not know the needs of the schools abroad to which the books were to be sent.

4. THE ROLE OF THE BOOK COMMITTEE AS AN ADVISORY AGENCY TO AN ORGANIZATION COLLECTING BOOKS FOR DISTRIBUTION ABROAD.

At the moment, there are any number of organizations, schools, and civic groups actively engaged in book-collecting drives. As an advisor to organizers of future book drives, the Book Committee could be fulfilling a most useful function. Even now, armed with the knowledge that the American book is in great demand throughout the world, and aware particularly of the need for technical, medical, and scientific works, the Committee is in a position to give much needed and sought-after advice.

In this connection, the Book Committee should have a permanent and up-to-date file of the book needs of all areas of the world. In another file, a record should be kept of all agencies throughout the United States interested in collecting books for overseas distribution. If a need arises somewhere, one or more book collecting agencies in this country would be contacted and asked whether in their drive they would be interested in filling it. If they were, the book Committee would offer any advice necessary for the successful accomplishment of the project.

5. PEOPLE-TO-PEOPLE LETTER TO EDITORS OF FOREIGN NEWSPAPERS.

Recently the Committee sent a letter to approximately 70 editors of foreign newspapers informing them of the activities of the People-to-People Program and particularly of the aims of the Book Committee in promoting a better understanding among the peoples of the world. In this letter, Mr. Brett asked the editors to feature in their newspapers an article similar to the ones which appeared in the New York Times and the New York Herald-Tribune. He hoped especially that the editors would ask two questions of their readers:

a) "The people of the United States are eager to know more about your country and its people, and would appreciate having your readers suggest to the Book Committee those books published in your country which would depict to us your philosophies, your culture, or mode of living, and which we could import and make available through libraries in the United States to the American people," and

b) "We feel that your readers will have heard of books of United States' origin which they would want to find available in their libraries in your country. We would hope that your article would ask the readers to name the books of United States origin that they would like to have more readily available in your country."

It is expected that the replies the Committee gets to this article will give an indication of what people abroad really want to read about the United States, not what we want them to read about us. And by the same token, we will have some idea what books from foreign countries should be published in the United States.

6. MR. BRETT'S PROPOSAL FOR ENCOURAGING ORGANIZATIONS THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES TO PICK THE BOOKS THEY WOULD LIKE TO HAVE SENT OVERSEAS.

This idea is embodied in speeches Mr. Brett made in Absecon, New Jersey, when he addressed the American Textbook Publishers' Institute, and at Arden House when he addressed the Book Publishers' Council. On these two occasions Mr. Brett called on the book publishing industry to make contributions to the Committee. Each group was then asked to choose, by majority vote of its members, the one book for overseas distribution which it considered best tell the American story. Depending on the size of the contribution the Committee received from the publishers, it was going to buy from the publisher of the winning title a certain number of copies to be distributed abroad. So as to make this method of overseas distribution a self-perpetuating one, Mr. Brett then suggested that this scheme be presented to all conceivable types of organization. And with the money that each organization contributed, it would likewise nominate the book it considered best suited for distribution abroad. If for instance the Association of Plumbers at its annual convention in Topeka, Kansas, voted $3000.00 to the Book Committee, the book it selected would be distributed abroad in as many copies as possible, after deducting the cost of overhead.

7. REVERSE FRANKLIN OPERATION.

The idea here would be to pick through a committee of scholars, or their equivalents, in a given country the best books annually, or on some other basis, in appropriate fields, to produce a translation by the best possible person or persons, and to make the text available to United States publishers on a normal royalty basis, and with a purchase order for a thousand copies. The copies would go to the leading public and university libraries, and regardless of the sale of the book, such copies would not only give access to the cultural output of the given country but would give that country a sense of real contact with American learning and public opinion. The subsidy would of course also include provision for a large number of review copies sufficient to cover the leading newspapers and learned journals.

8. A TRAVELLING BOOK EXHIBIT.

The Committee recently received a letter suggesting a book exhibit featuring not our uniqueness, but our universality; not our differences, but our similarity; not our independence, but our common heritage; not our isolation, but our powers of assimilation. Included would be the following types of books:

a) Books by first and second generation Americans, telling of their integration into American life.
b) Books by American authors telling of their experiences in foreign countries.
c) English translations of foreign books (current and popular).
d) Seasonal books of cartoons (on travel, holidays, foibles, castes, fancies, frailnesses of our social structure) of our American ways.
e) The most exotic and international in children's books and textbooks.
f) Exhibit would be dressed up with large sprinkling of colored posters.

9. SUPPLY THOSE LIBRARIES ABROAD WHICH LACK FUNDS TO PURCHASE AMERICAN BOOKS.

A number of letters have recently come in from foreign libraries requesting our assistance in supplying them with American books they do not have the funds to purchase. Requests have already come in from such places as Yugoslavia, Italy, Indonesia, England, and Thailand.

10. A SURVEY OF EXISTING PROGRAMS IN THE BOOK FIELD.

In order to avoid duplicating the work of other book organizations and committees, it was recommended at one of the first meetings of the Committee that a survey be made of all existing known book programs. The members felt that prior to embarking on a program of its own, the Book Committee should see how it might be duplicating the work of some other organizations.

11. EXCHANGE OF PUBLISHERS AND LIBRARIANS.

The Committee members have all recommended the urgent need for a coordinated program of exchanging visits with people in the book business all over the world. Many publishers and librarians abroad, for instance, are anxious to come to the United States to study our advanced publishing techniques, but at the present time there exists no central agency which is aware of the visits of these people, and for whom, as a result, nothing can be planned. The members of the Committee felt, therefore, that a hospitality program within the book field should be inaugurated as soon as possible.

12. ESTABLISHING CONTACTS BETWEEN THE STUDENTS OF THE UNITED STATES AND THEIR FELLOW-STUDENTS ABROAD, BY THE PUBLISHING OF A SERIES OF PHOTOGRAPHIC STUDIES CALLED "CONTACT ASIA," "CONTACT EUROPE," "CONTACT AFRICA," ETC.

An American professor of English who has recently been through Asia was so impressed by how much the students in that area of the world wanted to know about young people in the United States that he has begun putting together a book of photographs depicting the lives of these students and their school activities. Included in this book are native recipes, dress designs, and art work typical of the Asian countries. His first book he plans to call CONTACT ASIA, and if he can get it published, he would like to have it distributed not only in the United States but throughout the countries he has visited; and if it is successful, he would like to develop CONTACT EUROPE, CONTACT AFRICA, and CONTACT LATIN AMERICA. He feels very strongly that these books will contribute towards a greater understanding among young people the world over.

13. ELECTION OF FOREIGN HONORARY MEMBERS TO MEMBERSHIP IN THE AMERICAN PROFESSIONAL SOCIETIES.

Funds would be raised in the learned professions or from foundations which would enable such professional societies as the American Historical Association, the American Economic Association, the various scientific and humanistic groups, etc., to elect foreign honorary members who would receive subscriptions to the journals free. There should really be an effort to place these in the hands of almost every leading scholar abroad. The great advantage for books in this case is the availability to the foreign user of adequate reviews of books in his field. If the money could be raised, this might be coupled with a grant that would allow each honorary member to buy say $25 or $50 worth of American books a year in this field.

INTERNATIONAL P.R

PUBLIC relations is now almost a technical profession in which all kinds of things are described as "saleable". People are "sold", as much as wares; attempts are even made to "sell" one country to others. The last has usually been the job of Government publicity and information agencies and sometimes they slip up, or act with the unimaginativeness and rigidity associated with bureaucracy. In the United States recently, however, an attempt has been made, through an organization called the People-to-People Foundation, to mobilize the efforts of people not connected with the Government to get the United States projected to the outside world. Writers, business men, cartoonists, athletes and publishers are among those enlisted in forming a "second line of foreign policy," to initiate a two-way traffic of knowing other countries and getting other countries to know America. The publishers, for example, aim to distribute 2,500 copies each of books which most truly portray the American scene, usually non-political works. They are also anxious to hear of and obtain books which accurately convey the life and environment of other countries. Other groups like the cartoonists and business men have comprehensive and original schemes to break down the barriers of prejudice and ignorance which divide countries.

Whether this will get very far remains to be seen. Certainly it has possibilities, particularly in a country like the United States where conspicuous talent is often to be found in walks of life outside the Administration. In few countries is independence, even defiance, of Government so characteristic, particularly in domestic matters. As this is not generally understood abroad there is naturally suspicion of motives behind organizations like the People-to-People Foundation; it seems inconceivable to many that there is no subtle political wangle involved. In fact it seems quite free from motives —no organization which holds together so diverse a throng as includes Charles E. Wilson, William J. Donovan, William Faulkner and Al Capp could be monolithic in policy or ideology.

PEOPLE - TO - PEOPLE

We have before us a letter from the President of the Macmillan Publishing Company in New York which asks us to make an appeal to our readers—not for money, but for ideas. The President of Macmillan's has become the Chairman of the Book Committee of something called "The People to People Foundation, Inc." a peculiarly American organisation which has been set up in New York. The "People to People Program" was started by the President last September when he called several score leaders in American business, professions and the arts to the White House, and outlined his ideas.

The guiding theme was that Americans, outside and unconnected with Government activities, should form voluntary associations to promote people-to-people contact around the world. The result of this talk was that some 500 men and women of distinction in many walks of life have banded together in a mass of newly-formed citizens' committees—fortyone in all—to engage in a self-steered effort by individuals and groups outside the Government to communicate with the people of foreign countries. The group includes such diverse personalities as the ex-President of General Electric Charles E. Wilson, the Nobel Prize-winning writer, William Faulkner, the famed comic strip cartoonist, Al Capp.

The idea is that it should be an entirely spontaneous programme which will be free from the suspicions attached to official propaganda, and will be a genuine effort of the non-official American public to get to know more about the world outside their own country, and vice versa to teach their foreign friends more about America. We are not familiar with the details of the work which the other forty committees plan to do, but the letter from the President of Macmillan's tells us that the People-to-People Book Committee works on the conviction that books have traditionally been a sure means by which people of different lands have been able to understand one another's culture.

The Committee's aim therefore is to implement as many schemes as are found feasible to discover other countries through the literature of those countries and to make available abroad a choice of books which the people of foreign lands regard as best explaining what they want to know about America. The President of Macmillan's has therefore asked us to ask our readers to send in suggestions on: (1) books published in Burma which would depict to the American public the philosophy, culture, and mode of living of this country to be made available through libraries in the United States, and (2) books of United States origin which our readers think should be made available in Burma.

If any of our readers are interested in making suggestions on books, or on any other aspect of this programme, we shall be happy to forward them to the President of Macmillan's together with the name and address of the reader concerned. We understand that the People-to-People Programme also has committees for pen-friends, and for stamp collectors, so people interested in those hobbies may also communicate their suggestions to us if they wish, or to "The People-to-People Program" at 60, Fifth Avenue, New York 11, N.Y., in the interests of furthering international friendship.

INTRODUCTION

What is the weather today? How will it affect your plans, your business, your social activities? What happened yesterday? Were your actions changed by rain, by sun? What about tomorrow?

No topic has greater interest than that of weather. It would be impossible to go through an entire day without being conscious of the weather picture. It can mean pleasure, unhappiness, work, play, new friends, loneliness, fortune, failure.

It has been said that everybody talks about the weather but nobody does anything about it. True enough, you can't "do" anything about it, but you can "tell" enough about it to know what can be expected in the next twelve to twenty four hours. And you don't have to be a trained "Weather Man".

A few simple directions and rules will give you enough information to make a reliable weather forecast. It is fun and it is a hobby anyone can master and enjoy. Match your forecast against that of the professional. You will be surprised at your accuracy.

This kit is not designed to act as a crystal ball which magically produces an answer of "fair and warm", or "cold and stormy", but has been assembled by trained meteorologists to show you how to forecast weather from knowing its basic principals and by using standard air measurements that are easily obtainable:---AIR PRESSURE, TEMPERATURE, HUMIDITY, WIND DIRECTION, CLOUDS, AND PRECIPITATION.

To understand your forecast you must know why we have weather and what causes our daily changes. The envelope of air which surrounds the earth is standard enough to support the life it does, yet so changeable as to give the wide variations that we experience daily, weekly, seasonally, and geographically. Why these many changes? It is the battle of forces of heat, moisture, earth's movement, and air flow.

Now let us see what role these forces play in effecting our weather.

First - The heating of the earth's surface differs widely, warming at the equator, cooling at the poles. This unbalance sets the air in motion, causing it to rise at the equator and to descend in the northerly latitudes when coding has taken place. Warm air is light, cold air is heavy.

Second - As the air proceeds north or south it is affected by the rotation of the earth (Corealis Force), making impossible any such simple north-south flow.

Third - This basic circulation in not uniform from latitude to latitude. Obstructions in air flow may occur resulting in the setting up of eddies which are instrumental in the development of either high or low pressure Areas. For example, an "obstruction" within the air flow may cause deflection to the left or right from a standard direct flow. Such a deflection may cause a piling up or thinning out of the air, resulting in increasing or lowering pressure areas. You have seen such a deflection in a steam of water when it meets a stone and piles up before such an obstruction and eddies behind it.

Fourth - The air will either take on or give off moisture depending on the physical characteristics of the earth's surface over which it passes, or the air masses which it encunters.

Fifth - Because of certain consistencies in air flow, there are areas on the earth's surface that are predominantly either Highs or Lows. Such areas are very changeable as to their strength and effect. This together with eddy action is of the greatest importance for it is the strengthening, weakening, or movement of these Highs or Lows together with temporary Eddy formations along fronts and within existing weather paterns that give us "Weather". These are the most interesting and most difficult of all weather problems to frecast. Even the best , with comparatively unlimited information, make errors and are not correct all the time.

YOUR RESULTS WILL SURPRISE YOU.

DEFINITIONS

Cyclone - Any storm where the general flow of air is in a counter clockwise direction.

Diurnal - Changes experienced from sunrise to sunset such as temperature, pressure, humidity, or wind changes. Due to the effects of solar heating.

Drizzle - Precipitation falling in very fine drops. When steady, usually indicitive of warm front action and a long period of precipitation.

Fog - Vapor condensed to fine particles of water forming a surface cloud.

Front, Cold - The forward line, or edge, separating a cold air mass from a warmer body of air. When the cold air mass is the agressor, it forces the cold front into the warmer air causing the warm air up over the cold with usually showery conditions along the line and abrupt changes in ~~conditions~~ other weather elements as it passes.

Front, Warm - The forward line or edge separating a warmer body of air from a cooler one. In this case the warm air is the agressor causing a wide band of solid clouds and steady precipitation over a large area in advance of it. Such an abrupt change of air is not as noticeable as in the passage of a cold front.

Front, Stationary - A line between two different air masses which is agressive in neither direction. Such a front may disintergrate or may generate into a storm.

Hail - Roughly formed spherically shaped pellets of ice or frozen snow. Formed in the winter by the freezing of rain before reaching the earth's surface or occasionally during a thunder storm in summer (Cumulonimbus clouds)

High or Anticyclone - A body of air whose winds circulate clockwise, having relatively common characteristics of temperature and humidity and notably high barometric pressure. Characterized by generally fine weather. The opposite of low pressure area.

Humidity - The percentage of moisture in the air as compared to what the air could hold if saturated. Temperature is important. Cold air will hold far less moisture than warm.

Hurricane - An intense low or cyclone with extremes in all characteristics of a low pressure area.

Isobar -

Low or Cyclone- The opposite of High or Anticyclone. An area of mixing with wide differences in temperatures from point to point. Generally characterized by bad weather, cloudy skies, abrupt wind changes, and low barometric pressure.

Occlusion - A combination of a cold and warm front. Has largely the characteristics of a warm front but moves much like a cold front. Or, moves more rapidly than the warm front but has a more steady type of precipitation.

Pressure - (Inches-Millibars) The measurement of the weight of the column of air immediately overhead as recorded in inches or millibars of mercury.

Rain - The drop formation of moisture in the air to a size great enough to fall to the earth's surface. In contrast to the droplets that make a cloud.

Rain, Freezing- Rain drops that freeze upon contact with objects at the surface. Usually found in warm front action.

Shower - ~~The~~ brief ~~period of sometimes~~ and rather intense periods of predipitation, either rain or snow, in contrast to the steady "allday" rain storm.

Sleet - Precipitation in the form of frozen or partly frozen rain. Particles would not be of the magnitude of hail.

Snow - Crystals of various sizes and shapes formed from the freezing of particles of moisture in the air at below freezing temperatures.

Temperature - Degree of hotness or coldness measured on a scale.

Thunderstorm - A cumulus cloud which has risen into the upper air far enough to cap itself with ice crystals. The cumulo nimbus cloud charged with electric action of lightning. Many times violent in up and down drafts, winds, and heavy showery rains.

Tornado - A violent whirlwind type of wind storm extremly difficult to predict as far as formation, path, or disappearance is concerned.

Wind - Direction and Velocity Direction usually classified as that from which it blows. That is, a north wind is one that blows from the north. Velocity is best classified by ranges of speeds as grouped in the Beaufort Scale (See page)

Wave - A low pressure center which is in its infancy and which has formed on a front due to eddy forming effects.

THE INSTRUMENTS AND CHARTS

You will learn that the use of te instruments in the Forecasting Kit is an interesting part of the science of weather. Individually these instruments are of little value but together they produce the evidence necessary for building a reliable picture of the weather to come.

The Barometer

The Barometer is an instrument that measures the weight of the air directly over head. Since we live at te bottom of a great ocean of air, it's weight can tell us if we are below a great "mountain" of air or below "a valley". If there is a great"mountain" above our locality, this air pressure measuring device (The Barometer) indicates a high reading, such as 1020 Millibars or more. Then, too, the reading might be as low as 990 millibars which would tell us that we have a valley above us.

The presence of these mountains and valleys, better known as Highs and Lows, is of great importance. Most of us like to live under the "mountain" or High Pressure Air Mass because of its clear and pleasant weather, but even more important to most of us is the question,"How long are we to have this sunshine or rainy weather"?

Here the barometer becomes a help by showing us the movement of the "mountains" and "valleys" above us. Are we moving into a High? Is the High leaving us , or, are we headed for the low pressures of a"Valley"and bad weather?

Although the actual air pressure reading can be important, it is far more significant to know whether or not the pressure is increasing or decreasing, for this is the informer which tells us in what direction we aregoing. For this reason, unlike most barometers, ours has no "rain", "change","Fair", etc. infomation printed on the face of the dial. In reading the instrument, the most immediate way of learning whether ornot the pressure is going up or down, is to tap the face lightly. You will note that the indicator will usually move up or down. In most every instance this give you the clue as to which direction the mountains or valleys are moving. The time to make your reading for your observation record is after tapping.

Because we all do not live at the same elevations and we usually think in terms of sea level pressures, it is necessaryfor all aeroid barometers to have some means of adjustment. The small set screw on the back of the barometer makes this setting for you. You can learn what setting to use by listening to your radio weathor broadcast when the air pressure is given. Set your barometer accordingly.

The Psycrometer

The Psycrometer is the instrument which will keep you informed as to change in Temperature and Relative Humidity, two other important measurements. Through practice we learn to recognize that there is a difference in air masses. There is the warm dry air of the Mid West States, the warm moist air of the South, the cold dry air from the North West, and the cold moist airexperienced when the air circulates over a large expanse of water (such as a north east wind blowing across Lake Michigan during the winter months).

A rapid change from one of these airs to another will be noted in your observations and you have discovered additional information about the movement of air masses.

The Wind Vane

The Wind Vane will be one of your most important helpers in determining where you are inthe weather pattern today and where you will probably be in the weather pattern tomorrow. It is important to have your weather vane located in a position where the wind is least obstructed by buildings, high trees, etc.

Use your wind vane to locate the source of the wind and add this wind direction information to your Pressure, Temperature, and Humidity discoveries, and, you are well along toward putting together a reliable forecast.

The Vector-Rule

To forecast weather it is necessaryto have as much information as possible about the types of air that are affecting or are about to affect your location.

By use of the Vector-Rule it is possible to learn a great deal which, when added to your observations of SURFACE WIND DIRECTIONS- PRESSURE -TEMPERATURE - RELATIVE HUMIDITY- CLOUDS - PRECIPITATION - Ect., gives you enough information to make a very reliable forecast, one which you can match against that of the professional.

The Vector Rule gives you the following information in relation to your location:

1 - The general direction of the cold air

2 - The general direction of the warm air

3 - The general direction of the unstable air
(Unstable air brings high winds, gusty conditions, possible showers)

4 - The general direction of the stable air
(Calm, clear conditions)

5 - A close approximation as to the orientation of any nearby weather front. (An example of this : From your Vector Rule, if the surface wind was from the South, and the upper wind is from the West, you would assume that a nearby front would be oriented from the Northeast to Southwest. This being a line falf way between the two wind direction indicators. Learning from your SYSTEM LOCATING CHART that a South wind on the surface usually precedes a cold front, you would then assume that your front is to the West of you.)

CHARTS AND FORMS

Next let us go to the charts and forms in this weather forecasting Kit to see how helpful they are in the analysis of your instrument readings and their ultimate guidance in the making of a dependable weather forecast.

1 - The Observation Form is needed for the recording of your day by day observations of the various weather elements. Always remember continuity in observation and analysis is important for the drawing of proper conclusions regarding future weather.

2 - The Weather Change Chart gives the great majority of weather changes tat affect our middle latitudes. It is a quick reference guide to help find your true location in the weather pattern and to place yourself on the weather map.

Using the recent data from your Observation Report Form, noticing the immediate trend of changes, it is possible to locate your position quite exactly.

Having located your position, you next proceed to your Forecast Chart.

3 - The Forecast Chart gives the forecast that corresponds to your location in the weather pattern. It is important to remember that footnotes may be required for some locations where strong local conditions may give sectional differences such as the cities near the Great Lakes, in the mountains etc.

4 - The Weather Map graphically pictures ts weather pattern for you without the need of drawing a map each time. It is helpful to always have a mental picture ofthese air mass formations and storms in order to vixualize what is to come.

5 - The last step is to record your forecast on the Fomcast Forms provided. Carry your forecast with you so that you can verify its accuracy with the events of the day and match it against the published forecasts.

HOW TO USE THE Weathercaster

1 - Record wind direction and velocity—note any change in 12 hour period.

2 - Record pressure — Note any change in 12 hour period.

3 - Record Temperature — Note any change in 12 hour period.

4 - Record Humidity — Note any change in 12 hour period.

5 - Record cloud conditions — Note any change in 12 hour period.

6 - Use Vector-Rule according to directions. Check on reverse side.

7 - From first five points use Weather Change Chart for locating yourself in the weather pattern.

8 - Place yourself in the weather pattern etched on the transparent map.

9 - Overlay this spot on the map of the U.S. to give a picture of the weather pattern surrounding your area.

10- From your Forecast Sheet and your Weather Map, make your forecast.

11- Write down your forecast and compare with the weather that follows.

FORECAST CHART

After you have completed your observations and chosen the most representative situation on the WEATHER CHANGE CHART and you have oriented the OVERLAY WEATHER MAP with respect to your geographical location on the map of AMERICA, you are ready to make your forecast. You now know the part of the weather system that you are in. You now need only to pick the description of this area in the left hand column of this forecast chart and read your forecast from the column opposite. Due to local forces such as large bodies of water or mountains it will be necessary to add footnotes to these forecasts to suit your particular situation.

YOUR POSITION IN WEATHER PATTERN	YOUR FORECAST
1- NORTHWEST SECTOR OF LOW PRESSURE AREA - Low to the southeast moving in an easterly or northeasterly direction	SKY - Solid cloudiness but showing signs of breaking - breaking will be more rapid in next few hours. PRECIPITATION - will soon end or has ended. WIND - Moving to a more westerly direction in the next 24 hours increasing in intensity during but decreasing toward end of period. TEMPERATURE - Cooler air will be the rule while wind is from the north to west. HUMIDITY - Lower while wind is from north to west. PRESSURE - Will increase until wind is from the west--then will become steady before starting to fall. REMARKS - Fair weather is moving in.

2 - WEST NORTHWEST SECTOR OF LOW

PRESSURE AREA - Low to east moving in easterly or northeasterly direction.

SKY - Clouds are very few and low now

PRECIPITATION - None

WIND - Northwesterly remaining northwesterly to westerly for next 12 to 24 hours. Increasing, then decreasing toward end of 12 hour period.

Temperature - Cooler for next 12 to 24 hours.

HUMIDITY - Dryer for next 12 to 24 hours.

PRESSURE - Will continue to increase until the wind is well established as coming from the west.

REMARKS - Fair weather is the picture but WATCH for a WIND CHANGE to the southwest which could change the whole picture rapidly.

3 - EAST SIDE TO CENTER OF HIGH

PRESSURE AREA - Low now well to the east or northeast - No effect now from the low to the east.

SKY - Clear - only a few tufty clouds if any.

PRECIPITATION - None

WIND - Steady but light from the west

TEMPERATURE - Steadily cool but warming very gradually

HUMIDITY - Steadily dry.

PRESSURE - High with little change.

REMARKS - The above conditions can continue for 12 or more hours. If the pressure shows signs of falling and the sky shows a change in cloud cover, expect a new storm to be moving in. This situation can change rapidly away from such fair weather.

4 - CENTER TO WESTERLY SIDE OF HIGH PRESSURE AREA - Next nearest storm is undoubtedly to the west, southwest, or south.

SKY - Beginning to show signs of change- becoming hazy or milky in appearance.

PRECIPITATION - None now but a chance of some by end of the next 12 hrs.

WIND - Westerly changing to southwesterly toward the end of a 12 hour period.

TEMPERATURE - Showing signs of increasing.

HUMIDITY - Showing signs of increasing.

PRESSURE - High but showing signs of falling.

REMARKS - Momentarily clear-cool-dry-pleasant with chance of change to opposite conditions within 12 hours. If change is approaching pressure will continue down-temperature and humidity noticeably higher- the wind will mov e to the south and clouds will predominate the sky.

5 - WEST SIDE OF HIGH AND EAST

SIDE OF LOW PRESSURE AREA - Getting near to low or front approaching from west, southwest or south.

SKY - Definite signs of increased cloudiness.

PRECIPITATION - None yet-as clouds thicken, precipitation draws closer.

WIND - Has moved to the southwest or south now becoming stronger.

TEMPERATURE - Increasing steadily

HUMIDITY - Increasing steadily

PRESSURE - Falling steadily

REMARKS - These changes will continue, increasing in intensity for a number of hours, at the end of which time, more visible evidence of approaching storm should be noticed.

6-7-8- LOW PRESSURE AREA NEAR TO THE SOUTH SOUTHEAST OR EAST or west

SKY - Solid overcast increasing in thickness, will increase to precipitation.

PRECIPITATION - None yet but soon starting - slow and fine increasing over 6 to 18 hour period, approx.

WIND - Moving from southerly to easterly- The rapidity of change will indicate the continuance of bad weather - Expect no change until the wind goes to the north.

TEMPERATURE - Fairly constant with slight decrease as the wind moves to the east and on toward the north.

HUMIDITY - Steadily high - Expect no lowering until the wind gets to the north.

PRESSURE - Falls as the wind goes to the east ~~west~~ and begins to steady or increase when the wind goes from northeast to north.

REMARKS - Such a storm is unpredictable - It can come and pass in the matter of 10 or 12 hours or last for days - Your best indication for change is to watch for a wind change or steady pressure increase - A good guess for duration is 18 to 24 hours.

9 ~~10~~ -SOUTH EAST OF LOW PRESSURE AREA - Low passing to the north in an easterly direction.

SKY * Heavy cloud cover which will continue- Time of change would be determined by speed of wind change and tendency for pressure to steady itself.

PRECIPITATION -Light but steady, increasing as pressure reaches its low point.

WIND - Moving to a more westerly direction- clearing when wind gets to west.

TEMPERATURE * Generally moderate but very apt to increase rapidly when affected by the warm air to the south of the Low- Then rather rapid change to colder as the wind goes to the west.

HUMIDITY - Same situation as temperature.

PRESSURE - Decrease until wind is in the southwest, then noticeable rise.

REMARKS - ~~Weather elements existing between storms.~~

~~1a~~ - SOUTHEAST OF LOW PRESSURE

REMARKS - The duration of such a bad weather period would depend onthe rate of change of the elements observed. an average of 8 to 15 hours would not be unreasonable.

1b - LOW TO THE NORTHEAST now moving into a High Pressure area.

SKY - Clouds breaking with obvious appearance of dissipating.

PRECIPITATION - Has ended with perhaps an occasional stray shower.

WIND - Moving to more westerly or northwesterly direction, increasing in intensity.

TEMPERATURE - Falling for next 12 to 24 hours as wind moves to northwest.

HUMIDITY - The same as temperature above

PRESSURE - Will increase for 12 to 24 hours until the wind goes from west to northwest and back to west.

REMARKS - A fairly long period of good weather should exist with more moderate weather elements existing between storms.

1~~c~~ - NORTHEAST SIDE OF HIGH PRESSURE

AREA - Entering fair weather of High

SKY - Clear with a few low scattered clouds during the day.

PRECIPITATION - None

WIND - Moderate with no sudden changes.

TEMPERATURE - Steady and cool.

HUMIDITY - Steady and low.

PRESSURE - Steady

REMARKS - In such a steady condition, no rapid change shoulc take place. These conditions should last for 24 hours or more.

11 - GENERAL SUMMATION FOR POINTS 1 THROUGH 8 - Your location is to the east, or northest of a storm approaching from the west or southwest moving rapidly in a northerly to northeasterly direction.

SKY - Overcast from a high thin condition gradually to a low heavy situation in rain or snow. Breaking in shower clouds toward end of storm.

PRECIPITATION - Steady rain or snow, from light increasing to moderate as clouds thicken . Ending in showery conditions before clearing.

WIND - First noticed as from the south and changing gradually to the south-east ~~west~~ and then to the ~~west~~ east, growing stronger as the pressure falls.

TEMPERATURE - Beginning relatively warm, growing colder as the wind moves to the east ~~west~~ and north.

HUMIDITY - High and remaining high until wind has moved ~~westerly~~. northerly

PRESSURE - Decreasing until wind moves to the ~~west~~ north or north west.

REMARKS - Such a rapid moving system is the sort that generates in the south, moves northeasterly, spreading a wide area of steady precipitation (in the winter bringing moderate to heavy snows- in the summer, rain) Passage is usually within 12 to 24 hours.

12 -GENERAL SUMMATION FOR POINTS 9 THROUGH 12 - Your location now is an the northwest, west, or southwest of a storm generated to the east, southeast, or south of your point of observation.

Description of wave

SKY - High thin overcast increasing in thickness as storm moves northerly and closer.

PRECIPITATION - None in high thin overcast changing to light steady to moderate steady as pressure lowers and clouds become lower. No showery conditionw here.

WIND - First noticed from the southeast moving gradually to the east and growing stronger, deminishing slightly as the wind moves to the north.

TEMPERATURE - Seasonably warm changing slowly to colder until a rapid fall when the wind has switched to the northwest.

PRESSURE - Falling from southeast to northeast, then steadies and rises slowly through passage of stem.

REMARKS - Such a storm can be most widespread and long lasting if it does not pass steadily to the northeast. A low of this sort brings steady precipitation for a long period. The duration, normally about 24 hours, can exceed this depending on its speed or change of speed as it moves northeasterly.

14 General Summation of Parts 9-11

NOTE - The above situations cover the weather picture for the fall-winter and spring particularly well.

Summer weather conditions are less clear cut because , first, the systems do not move across the country as fast; and, second, they tend to "flatten out" or extend themselves giving longer periods of the same type of weather. In the summer usually a stagnating of weather brings greater chance of the local "afternoon" type of shower or thunderstorm.

Dear Ed:

Any further news on our proposed project for an hour's documentary by your own good self in the interest of the United Negro College Fund — more particularly the entire matter of negro education in the USA?

I hate to bother you — just throw this in the waste basket if I am following up too soon.

I am continuing my practice of visiting with you in various homes on TV. It is too bad the whole affair is so censored that you can't ask some of the questions that occur to me!

Here's the recipe for a sputnik cocktail: 1/3 vodka and 2/3 sour grapes.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Because Father has spoken so warmly of his recent luncheon with you, and because -- thanks to your LL.D. -- you're another Hamilton alumnus, I am taking the liberty of writing you to ask a favor.

In 1953, when I did a "This I Believe" broadcast, you were gracious enough to give me the finest introduction I have ever received anywhere. You were kind enough to say:

> "Lee Hastings Bristol, Jr. is an Advertising Manager of the Bristol-Myer Company. In addition, he is an author, organist and composer, and a prominent Episcopal layman. This substantial achievement in such diversity of fields would be remarkable in a man of any age. It is all the more so in view of the fact that Lee Bristol has done all this at the age of 29."

This coming winter, Little, Brown & Company is publishing my biography of an Episcopal Bishop (Robert Nelson Spencer). Called SEED FOR A SONG, it is the true story of a modern saint.

For the jacket, my publisher will want to give a brief biography of me. Instead of the usual blurb, we wondered if you'd be willing to allow them to publish as a quote from you what you said before (slightly "up-dated" in order to be current). As you see, you'd not be committing yourself on a book you haven't yet seen. This is how the altered quotation would read:

> "Lee Hastings Bristol, Jr. is Director of Public Relations of the Bristol-Myers Products Division. In addition, he is an author, organist and composer, and a prominent Episcopal layman. This substantial achievement in such diversity of fields would be remarkable in a man of any age. It is all the more so, in view of the fact that Dr. Bristol has done all this at the age of 35."

I don't mean to impose on you, but I was so touched by what you were good enough to say, I hoped you'd be willing to let my publisher quote it on the jacket of my religious biography.

Kind regards in any case. Best wishes on all you are doing.

Sincerely,

Lee H. Bristol Jr.

Dear Ed,

The film is under way.

Financially our big assist will be Walter Reuther & UAW. Roger Stevens will also help personally. As for the rest we will see.

This is our crew.

1) Larry Tighe (LA.) - writer - director if necessary. We will send you a format for your perusal & suggestions.

2) Charles Mesario (LA) - camera

3) Gene Milford (NY) - film editor

The people for this film so far are Ed Plant (in unofficial capacity), Paul Butler (officially), Lee Miller (m.e. New America), Roger Stevens, Mat McCluskey, Walter Reuther, Mrs Roosevelt, Sen Clinton Anderson & others here.

We are planning to shoot

The Governor's narration Sun or Mon in Chicago or Libertyville. The boys get into Chicago Sunday morning, barring any last minute changes

Mrs Roosevelt footage will be shot at her apartment in New York Oct. 23 at 4:30 pm

Sen Clinton Anderson is available at any time & let Larry work ~~that~~ out when with him tonight

We have a meeting re-format & script tomorrow at 10:30 am. Will keep you informed.

There are a couple thousand other things but I'm just too tired & have 3 pills in me

Sleepy

Oh yes Dr Harrison Brown has been consulted, as well as Leonard Woodstock V.P. of UAW. They like the tentative format. Man in the street we will pick up

Dear Ed,

How can a political miracle — in your opinion — be effected?

How does one reach the middle ~~class~~ age (35-49), the undecided male voter between 21 + 49, + of below average income?

There are 2 programs in two media that I can influence for sure. A 5 minute (11:55 am. 5:15 pm.) twice daily (repeat the second time) radio program called Car Pool — a discussion in a car pool by 4 riders, one republican (yesterday's dealt w. Nixon, today's with taxes) Monday thru Friday over KABC. And a weekly 15 min television discussion between Richard Richards + 2 men running for Congress — moderated by a charming lady. (I'll do the one on Nov 5) over KTTV — 6:30 - 6:45 pm Mon night.

TELEPHONE HOLLYWOOD 9-0804 · 144 BARODA DRIVE · HOLMBY HILLS · LOS ANGELES 24, CALIFORNIA

Please tell me if you can.

Best
Phyllis

I'll be in New York w. Robert Oct 27-
Nov 3 for Robert Wagner. And I expect to see the Governor for the last time before the election Friday at Long Beach. I shall try to call you.

---

1) Middle age: 35-49 — How old were they during the depression? Has the current prosperity any influence on their thinking? Are they voting economically? or fearfully?
Is their reaction a personal one - towards AES's person —
he is not too much their elder & Eisenhower is?

2) What can be done about the middle class?
That's an economic vote. Or is it a personal one, too?

3.) Why male between 21-49 most undecided?
Why male? Is that personal prejudice. Is the Governor not warm & affable enough, not paternal enough? How do others appeal to this mass? (Important (other than AES. i.e.)

Vanessa Brown

4.) Why is the of below-average income, male, between 21-49 undecided? Below-average is generally Democratic. Why male? Why the age 21-49? What about over 49? and why?

5.) I'm going to try to see Mr Walter H. Eaton & find out more about the nature of the survey & how the sampling was done. I'll have some more poll information in a few days from a research man who works for me.

Eisenhower Leads Adlai 51.2-38.4% in L.A. Poll

Copyright, 1956, Mirror Enterprises Co.

BY WALTER H. EATON, Director the Los Angeles Poll

If Adlai Stevenson expects to lead Los Angeles back into the Democratic fold, he has a major job of campaigning to do between now and Nov. 6.

This fact is revealed by the current Los Angeles Poll, conducted for the Mirror-News by the independent research firm of Walter H. Eaton & Associates.

Last week hundreds of voters in all walks of life and sections of Los Angeles County were asked:

In November, do you think you will probably vote for Eisenhower or Stevenson?

Here are the survey results:

Eisenhower	51.2%
Stevenson	38.4
Undecided	10.4
	100.0%

In order to capture this political heartland of a vitally important State, Stevenson must now swing nearly all of the county's undecided voters to his support. And he must also convince a substantial number of Eisenhower partisans that they should vote Democratic in November.

Conceivably, the job can be done. A solid majority of voters here are still registered—at least—as Democrats. And as Harry Truman demonstrated in 1948, political miracles can sometimes happen. But at this moment the odds in Los Angeles County are clearly in favor of Eisenhower.

Exclusive

The Los Angeles Poll found little difference between the Presidential preferences of men and women voters.

When analyzed by age groups, Stevenson support was weakest in the middle-age brackets—among voters between 35 and 49 years of age.

Democratic strength was particularly evident among voters with below-average incomes. Middle-class voters favored Eisenhower by a margin of nearly 2 to 1. And this margin increased to almost 3 to 1 among voters in the upper income brackets.

The typical undecided voter was male, between 21 and 49 years of age, and of below-average income.

Respondents who expressed a definite candidate preference were also asked: Why would you prefer this candidate?

Here are the chief reasons — in order of popularity — given by Eisenhower supporters:

1—They believe that Eisenhower has done a good

Turn to Page 4, Column 1

L.A. Poll Hints Ike Victory

job; they like his over-all record in office.

2—They feel that Eisenhower is honest and sincere, and has brought increased dignity and stability to the Presidency.

3—They credit him with ending the Korean war and maintaining peace in most of the world since that time.

4—They are Republicans—and will vote for Eisenhower because he is the Republican candidate.

5—They believe that prosperity has increased under the Eisenhower administration.

6—They prefer Eisenhower because of his broader experience, both as President and as an international leader during and after World War II.

Voters who prefer Stevenson give these principal reasons for favoring the former Governor of Illinois:

1—They are Democrats—and will vote for Stevenson because he is the Democratic candidate.

2—They believe that Stevenson will do more to help the working people of America.

3—They approve of the Democratic platform and program; they "like what Stevenson stands for."

4—They disapprove of Vice-President Nixon.

5—They are concerned about Eisenhower's health—his ability to survive another four years in office.

6—They believe that the country is more likely to enjoy continued prosperity under a Democratic administration.

A comparison of these views will do much to clarify the sources of Eisenhower's strength — and the problems that confront Stevenson during the remaining weeks of the 1956 campaign.

In the first place, Eisenhower enjoys the great advantage of already occupying the Presidency. Not since the troubled depression year of 1932, and not for many years before that time, have Americans failed to re-elect a President who wished to continue in office.

As the incumbent, Eisenhower has a record to point to—and it appears that many voters are well satisfied with that record. Stevenson, on the other hand, has been out of office for four years. He can offer a program and policies for the future. But his actual capacity for leadership in government has not been shown since 1952—a long time ago as events are viewed by the average voter.

Even more important, perhaps, is the respect and personal affection which many voters appear to feel for Ike. Whatever charges may be leveled against the Eisenhower administration, the President himself continues to be regarded as a man of honesty, integrity and stability.

A great many voters say that they will support Eisenhower simply because they like him—or like certain of his personal characteristics.

This motive, perhaps unreasoning but certainly effective, did not appear in interviews with Stevenson supporters.

Stevenson—for all his brilliance and the integrity of his own views—has apparently failed to establish this warm sense of liking and confidence in the minds of most voters, Democrats as well as Republicans.

No Democratic Party worker can derive much comfort from the fact that the most common reason for preferring Stevenson—as given by his supporters here—is the fact that they are Democrats and he is the Democratic candidate.

Important also is the fact that peace—a major theme in the Republican appeal for votes—was seldom mentioned by voters who favor Stevenson.

It thus appears that Stevenson's criticisms of Republican foreign policy have had little effect on the thinking even of his own supporters.

Such criticisms, whether valid or not, seem to have run aground on two stubborn facts. The Korean war ended during the Eisenhower administration. And peace, of some kind, now prevails in most of the world.

But no measured analysis, complete with columns of percentages, can tell the story of political opinion as vividly as the people themselves — in their own words.

Here are some of the more typical views in favor of each candidate:

FOR EISENHOWER:

Wife of a city employee: "Eisenhower is an honest, religious person. He has the highest principles himself, and he has done a swell job."

Building contractor: "Things have been going along fine under Eisenhower. Under Stevenson, money would tighten up and there would be unemployment due to business failing."

Dental assistant, male: "He is more personable. I like his character and the things he stands for as a person."

Drugstore owner: "We have great confidence in him, and he will be more inclined to keep us in peace. I have a great respect for his foreign policy, as well as his handling of his whole administration."

Commercial artist, female: "I have been a Republican for years. I like the Eisenhower family. I object to Stevenson's divorce, since I'm a Catholic."

Barber: "He's done a fine job. Why change horses now?"

FOR STEVENSON:

Wife of auto mechanic: "We've always been Democrats, and I think Stevenson will make a good President. He's sincere and a hard worker and he has the interests of the average people at heart."

Retired upholsterer: "I think the Democrats are the best party. As far as the men are concerned, they are both good men. It's the party. The Democrats are better for the poor man, the veteran, the farmer—better for the poor people in general."

Wife of steam fitter: "He's a better man. Eisenhower is ill, and I don't think he could last out another term."

Sheet metal mechanic: "I made up my mind when Eisenhower cut big industry's taxes and didn't cut ours any. Then he came out in the papers and said it would be bad for the country to cut taxes for us. And I voted for him!"

Elderly widow: "I like him, but I'm really voting for the party. I'm a dyed-in-the-wool Democrat since Roosevelt."

Wife of railroad brakeman: "I think he could solve some of the problems this country has. Eisenhower is all right, but he isn't too strong either."

DIRECTOR OF THE DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

August 27, 1957

Mr. Edward Murrow,
Pawling, New York.

Dear Ed:

It was so satisfactory to talk with you over the phone and to learn that you think the idea of a "Husband to Husband" letter has merit. It was equally satisfying to hear that you would consider wording such a letter. I shall be very much interested to hear Janet's reaction, too.

In the show of hands of members of the Alumnae Fund Committee, fourteen voted in favor (including two qualifications as to whom we would get to write the letter), and two voted against the idea. I add that Mr. Gettell is very enthusiastic about this plan as is Al Guest of Amherst.

I do not need to go into detail as to the main idea which is, of course, to urge the husbands in turn to urge their wives to give to their Alma Maters the equivalent of the husbands' gifts.

Six years ago, Stu Russell, one of our Trustees, a Dartmouth man, paid for an ad in the Dartmouth Alumni magazine of January 1951. I enclose a copy of that.

Also enclosed is a list of average gifts to Men's and Women's Privately Endowed Colleges. On the whole the average gifts to State Institutions are not as high, obviously. These averages are for the college year 1955-'56. We do not have the figures for 1956-'57 except Mount Holyoke's which was $15.18 as compared with $12.18 for 1955-'56.

You spoke of possible content for your letter, as including both the light touch and a good punch based on comparative figures. I trust that these two enclosures will provide background material for both.

Please know how delighted everyone will be if you feel disposed to word this copy for us. As I explained, it would be a printed letter without individual salutations--just "Dear Mount Holyoke Husband". I do not know whether, in connection with your signature, you will want to identify yourself as the husband of Janet Brewster '33. I believe that everyone knows this. In any case, we would like a clear signature (black ink on white stock) for the cut for the letter.

DIRECTOR OF THE DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

I have checked the number of envelopes which are already addressed, and find that there are approximately 2500. We addressed envelopes only to those whose questionaires indicated that the husbands were extant and living with their wives. We did not do non-grads of any of the institutions.

Again we thank you for your favorable reply, but assure you that we shall understand if you think it unwise.

My love to Janet and all kinds of best wishes to you.

Yours,

Gertrude V. Bruyn

Buck, Pearl

January 9, 1957

Dear Pearl Buck:

Thank you very much for writing as you did about the Chou En-lai interview. I find myself in complete agreement with your analysis. The interpreter did not, in fact, expand on Chou's replies, we cut some of the Chinese in order to give a verbatim translation of what he said.

I confess myself still puzzled by the whole experience. I have interviewed a number of dictators and always in the past they appeared to be assured, self-reliant, and confident; Chou was none of these things. He was uttering phrases reflecting the captive mind, when he is supposed to be the captor. He repulsed all my efforts at private conversation, even though as you know he speaks and understands English perfectly.

I had the feeling throughout he felt that someone, almost literally, had a gun at his back. I don't know who that someone is, but he certainly did not appear to be "his own man."

Thank you again for writing as you did.

Sincerely yours,

Miss Pearl Buck

My dear Mr. Murrow:

I congratulate you on a most interesting and important accomplishment in that interview with Chou En-lai, filmed as we saw it last night. Of course it was obvious, as Carlos Romulo said, that Chou En-lai was completely at the mercy of Communist powers. At first I could not understand how a man, reputed to be clever and intelligent — I do not know him myself — could make himself seem such a dupe. His face was a mask of despair. The dapper young interpreter was so cold, so cynical, so "correct." In his translations he amplified considerably on Chou En-lai's remarks. Since I know Chinese, I know that Chou's written replies, seen, were seldom as detailed as the interpreter's translation, although all of it was blatant propaganda .... It was Chou's face that was the most puzzling, that and his manner. Had he the slightest enthusiasm for what he was saying, his face would have lightened. Only once, I believe, was there a glimmer of the natural and really almost inevitable humor one finds ~~almost~~ universal in the Chinese, and that was in direct response to you.

After thinking it all over, I wonder if there was a calculated cynicism, a communicable despair, in Chou En-lai's behavior upon this occasion. It is incredible that he could imagine that we could be so stupid as to believe the Soviet drivel he spoke. Can it be that he was deliberately showing us that his heart was not in it, that he was saying what he had to say and saying it without enthusiasm, his face a mask, his eyes hopeless, even furtive. Was his refusal to comment on internal affairs in China an effort to convey to us that they were bad, too bad to talk about? He could have lied and boasted that all is wonderful. Reflect, please, on his lifeless manner, his parrot-like voice, his expressionless face, his weary indifference toward his translator, his obvious and deep unhappiness. He was so plainly the tool, and he was letting us see it. Is this not significant?

Whether I am right or wrong in these queries, certainly it was one of the most dramatic episodes I have ever seen on television. I am deeply indebted to you. Indeed, I think this interview was the most dramatic I have ever seen in human times, with the possible exception of one event in Senator McCarthy's public career.

With highest regard, I am

Yours sincerely,

Pearl S. Buck.

Dear Bill:

I am familiar with Dean Sharp's project, and did indeed encourage her. I explained to her that I no longer had anything to do with radio programming here, but I would submit her manuscript, or at least a sample of it, to people who did. That, I am in the process of doing and I will let you know.

Your recommendation of Dr. Ditzen is indeed persuasive. Anyone who could get you to join a church must have unusual abilities. We look into the matter and let you know.

Dear Ed:

Our College Department has had a proposal from Dean D. Louise Sharp, Central Michigan College of Education, Mt. Pleasant, Michigan, for a book to be entitled GO TEACH. It is to contain one hundred short inspiration pieces about teachers and teaching, and Dean Sharp informs us that your highly successful "This I Believe" stirred her up on this idea originally. She also tells us that you personally encouraged her on two occasions, at the original conception of the idea, and then again last month.

We have been told that you asked to see some samples, and therefore we are sending twenty-three of them to you now. We were also informed that you might be able to use them, or some of them, on the air as you did with "This I Believe." I hate to impose on you this way, but since Dean Sharp tells us that you have been involved in this project personally and have given it some encouragement, I would appreciate having your thoughts on it, if that would be possible.

I suggested this to you once before, and received no answer, but I would like to propose again as someone you might visit on "Person to Person" the minister of The Reformed Church in Bronxville, Dr. Lowell Russell Ditzen. He is one of the warmest, most articulate, and personable humanitarians I have ever met -- in fact I even joined the church because of him. A short meeting with him would prove to you that he would be a great addition to the "Person to Person" show.

Warmest personal regards.

Sincerely,

/s/William E. Buckley

Your description of what life is like in September in the shop is altogether accurate. However, I am aware that too often we become so involved with the urgent that we never get around to the important.

Please ask Mr. Maccoby to give my office a ring and I will see him at the first possible opportunity.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I know what life is like after Labor Day, but I wonder if you could spare a minute some time in the next week or so to talk with a very bright young man who works for Harvard College. His name is Michael Maccoby, and he has what he thinks, and what I think, is a very good idea for a series of broadcasts on problems of the shape of the future--in science, in politics, and in human living. His notion is that with a little imagination and planning it should be possible to bring the liveliest ideas of outstanding scholars into programs that would have a wide appeal.

We at Harvard are trying to get hold of all the money there is this year, so that we have a sharply practical interest in advertising our talent--but what seems just possible is that a series of programs in which Harvard professors looked at the future might make sense from your point of view.

Mr. Maccoby will be calling your secretary, and if you are interested, he will come in at your convenience. If not, I can only repeat that I know what life is like in September.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Winston:

This may sound like I'm trying to cast you as a housing agent, but here is the problem: Marlene Dietrich is coming to Rome sometime in July and August to make a picture, and is looking for a place to live - either a four or a five-room apartment or some relatively quiet hotel.

In a moment of boastfulness, I told her I had a colleague in Rome who knew all about everything and she believed me. Therefore, would you at your convenience drop her a note on this world-shaking subject at the Hotel de Paris in Monaco where she will be for the next few weeks.

Many thanks for the excellent report on the Italian elections you gave me last night.

Burke, Arleigh

December 7, 1956

Dear Admiral Burke:

Permit me to say my belated thanks to your "well done" on our report on the Navy. My delay in replying was due to the fact that I spent a little time in Israel during the unpleasantness there. However, I am as usual not sure that we didn't leave a better program on the Cutting-Room floor than we put on the air, but we did the best we knew how to do.

Permit me to express my thanks and those of Fred Friendly for the courtesy and cooperation of Admiral E. B. Taylor whose services in connection with the editing were invaluable. Lieutenant Paul Trahan was unflagging in his efforts on our behalf.

It may interest, or amuse you to know in view of our off-camera conversation on the SARATOGA that I have received no sign from my friends in the Air-Force as a result of the report on the Navy.

To do what one enjoys doing and to learn in the process is a rare privilege, and that is precisely what happened to me in the course of working on this report.

Sincerely yours,

Admiral Arleigh Burke

CHIEF OF NAVAL OPERATIONS

19 November 1956

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Your excellent documentary "Revolution in the Navy" was very much appreciated by all of us who saw it. It explained clearly and well the giant strides being taken by the Navy to be ready for the great tasks facing us, and it insured increased public understanding of the mission and capabilities of the Navy to carry out United States policies.

Today with two-thirds of our fleet disposed at sea - standing by for any eventuality, your program provided a terrific lift for all these Navy men and their families by showing how their presence in potential trouble areas is so vital to our national defense. The support of the American people is the finest boost to morale that any fighting man can receive when he faces the privations of overseas deployment.

Thank you for producing and so skillfully editing this hour program to make it interesting, instructive and stimulating to your vast audience. Such a production reflects not only the skill of your camera crews and technical staff, but your own thorough understanding of the world situation and the increasing importance of Naval power to the free world's peace and security.

Please extend the Navy's appreciation to all your personnel, and to you and Fred Friendly my special thanks for your courtesy and patience in arranging our interview. You have done the country and the Navy a real service.

Sincerely,

Arleigh

My dear Edward R. Murrow:

I have just returned to my office from my sojourn in the east. One of the highlights of my trip was our luncheon at the Century Club and the stimulating conversation you provided on "Modern Scepticism".

While in New York City I addressed an air mail letter to Monsignor Sheehy at St. Patrick's Rectory, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, telling him of your forthcoming visit at Grinnell.

My luncheon with you was a pleasant adventure in friendship; it was also a pleasant adventure in stimulating thought. Keep up your good work, for to me democracy will always be a way of life and will never be a ready-made solution to our problems.

It was a warm and welcome meeting and I am sorry it couldn't have happened under happier circumstances.

Your report on the duck club fills me with a longing to come out, but I just don't know how I can do it. This is my first day back in the shop and it's just plain hell.

Somehow I must find a way to make a living somewhere out West where friendships last and old age doesn't overtake one at such a furious pace.

Dear Ed:

Since I saw no press reports to the contrary, I believe it is safe to assume that the pilot who had such a time getting you on the ground at McMinnville enjoyed better luck getting you back and down in Bellingham.

It was indeed a pleasure to see you again and have such a nice visist with you even though the circumstances of our meeting did notlend a bit to a "night of revelry and riotous living."

This past week I had a most wonderful letter from Myron Foster and also one from Roy Sandberg, who has been through the years one of the really good friends that one meets up with along life's highway.

Over the weekend, I spent a couple of days installing blinds down at the duck club, and conditions appear to be extremely good for this season. On Monday the State Game Commission met in Yakima, and we have the longest duck season granted us here in the Pacific Flight Way on record. It will open on October 13th, and will extend through January 15th, of 1958. I doubt if I can stand up under such a lengthly season and still work at it as I have in the past. Depending on the weather, as the season progresses, I am going to keep in touch with you with the hope that perhaps you could arrange to get out here and enjoy a few days of real good hunting.

I think Fred Redmon, who has been quite a friend of Lacy's for several years and who is a personal friend of mine, wrote you recently. The Monday Morning Quarterback Club would enjoy very much throwing their annual dinner to fit the occasion of your visit here, and believe me, Ed, that is quite a deal for a town the size of Yakima.

Over four hundred of us are leaving here by chartered bus to support the efforts of our favorite son, Pete Rademacher when he faces Patterson over the fifteen round route at Sick's Stadium in Seattle.

I hope your trip home for you and your family was a pleasure, and again it was mighty nice to see you even for such a short time. My kind regards and best wishes to you.

Sincerely,

Joe Burks

I understand you had an interesting evening with Bob Fowler a couple of weeks ago. He has indicated to Mr. Dunton, Chairman of our Board of Governors, that you displayed some interest in the "Wayne and Shuster" show. I have a 16 mm print of it in my office and although I called your Secretary about sending it on to you probably I was not too bright that day and I am not completely sure as to whether you wanted it and, if so, where it should be sent. I wonder if you would be good enough to let me know.

I realize you are terrificly busy but I think it might be worth your while to take a look at this particular show or if you can't do it yourself at least have some of your expert associates do so.

I hope to be in New York the week of November 18th as I have been asked to talk to the Radio Pioneers. I hope to be able to see you for a few minutes at least if only to do a bit of reminiscing. I can assure you I have no important business to talk about.

Kindest regards.

The attached information relates to a worthy cause in which you may have an interest. In any event, I rise to endorse the gentlemen who submit it. Frank Price, Jr., is my lawyer, which means he has to be good to try to keep, and ultimately to get me out of trouble. The Foundation and its board are responsible, and very much in earnest about the good work. I suppose the theme of a story might be along the line that "there are those who love the U. S. A."

I missed you when I was in New York, but I had the pleasure of speaking with Janey, who told me of your gypsy tour with Casey, which had started the day before...

I am taking over a near-bankrupt TV station at Yuma, where the temperature yesterday was only 119. I will commute for a while but naturally will base at Santa Barbara...Even I am not that crazy...

I have been hoping your trek would lead you to the Valley Club and to some more of my money...it awaits you, as does the latch string at the Butcher house, surrounded as it is by growing avocadoes, and work, work, work. Mollie has become the woman with the hoe.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

For many years you have been one of the foremost interpreters of world affairs to the American people and have built lasting bonds of good will between Americans and people throughout the world.

We would like to ask your cooperation in work of similar purpose, althought on a different level. The DIRECT RELIEF FOUNDATION was established ten years ago to provide direct aid to people in need throughout the world, especially Europe. We are enclosing material about our organization for your information.

This year the DIRECT RELIEF FOUNDATION is launching a major campaign - "Share Your Christmas Person to Person with a Family in Free Europe". We feel that it would be of great interest to the American people if you could arrange interviews with some of the recipients of the Direct Relief Foundation in Greece, Italy, Austria or Germany on your colorful program, "See It Now".

The charge is frequently made that the people of Europe do not appreciate the aid given by the American people. As you can see from the enclosed letters, recipients of aid are truly grateful for the help they receive. Perhaps, this can serve as a demonstration of what foreign aid can do and how much it is appreciated. Especially, this is true when it is given directly to individual recipients, and with a minimum of red tape.

INCORPORATED IN 1948 AS A NON-PROFIT CORPORATION
CONTRIBUTIONS DEDUCTIBLE FOR FEDERAL INCOME AND ESTATE TAX PURPOSES

If this project appeals to you and you would give consideration to participating in carrying out help to needy people in Free Europe in this fashion, a representative of this Foundation would appreciate an opportunity of meeting you.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

THESE ARE THE PEOPLE

THE CHRISTOPHER FAMILY IN GREECE . . . Father, mother and two boys, aged 9 and 6½, live in a small shed with dirt floor. The Greek father had his own home and shop in Rumania but returned to Greece to serve in the war of 1940-41. He was not permitted to return to Rumania where his property was destroyed. Suffering from hernia, rheumatism, inflammation of the kidneys and cancer — he cannot work. The mother cannot work either because the youngest child is paralytic and needs her care. Poor neighbors share their little food with them. They were ragged, barefooted and in need of food, clothing, shoes, blankets, and medical care—when they applied to DIRECT RELIEF FOUNDATION for help.

HELMUT . . . An 18-year-old boy stricken with polio at the age of one. He still sits in the same crib where he was placed as a baby. His sister is crippled also. Nothing is done for him. The father died recently and the mother has been in the hospital for major surgery and cannot carry him downstairs and out into the sunshine. She has tried in vain to get a wheelchair so he can get around on his own.

MARGARETHE IN GERMANY . . . She's a 67-year-old widow and alone. A refugee from Estonia, her son was killed in the Katyn Massacre and her husband was missing after Soviet occupation. She suffers from angina pectoris, diseased liver, and gall bladder trouble. She needs milk, butter, eggs — and cannot even recall when she last had such basic items.

March 12, 1957

Save us from starvation. We have no one in the world to help us. My husband is sick, he suffers from his stomach. We have no money to go to a doctor.

I am a woman with education and go from house to house to wash, to make a living for my sick husband and 3 children.

Piraeus
Jan. 18, 1957

Dear Sirs:
We never can forget your kindness. We received the check of $7.50 which helped us a lot. My grandmom thanks you very much, she is very old. She is suffering with her eyes. The doctor said she needs an operation but unfortunately we can't afford to pay one thousand drachmas ($33). We hope on you.

Olga has been adopted by a very poor Austrian family and cannot obtain German or Austrian citizenship since no one knows her proper name. So Olga hangs between two citizenships — on one foot — and cannot receive any contribution for an artificial foot. Now Olga is 16 years old and needs an artificial foot very urgently; cost—approximately $100.

HOW IT WORKS

The case is investigated through the Red Cross or other agency . . . and aid is then sent directly to that individual.

I thank you for the Christmas check and the package. I altered the dress for Karin and she's very proud of it. Due to your kindness, I could arrange something for Christmas. On both days we even had meat. The Christ Child came also in our modest apartment. Many times I've been in despair over my illness and poverty. You were and will always be for me a ray of hope for my family and myself in these difficult times.

The fleeing was cruel since I had nothing except what I had on my back but I came through and wish I could have remained well in health. I would do any work with pleasure but the worst is to see the children suffer in poverty without being able to help. I carry alone all worries for my children and old mother.

Athens, Greece
June 20, 1956

You completely saved my child. Those dollars saved my child from death. Now my little daughter is very ill and is suffering from tuberculosis. The various doctors I consulted in the Athens institutions said that the condition of my daughter is very critical and only by immediate help will she be saved.

Refugee Camp
Athens, Greece
Feb. 6, 1957

I thank you very much for the package you sent to me. Everything contained in it is very useful, especially for my daughter who is very glad for she will be able to go to school dressed as all other children.

HELPING THE DESTITUTE and the ill in foreign lands has been the aim of our DIRECT RELIEF FOUNDATION since its beginning in 1948.

REFUGEES AND CHILDREN living in poverty and despair are at present the principal beneficiaries. Tuberculosis, anemia, hunger, all forms of illness and lack of warm clothing are prevalent among refugees—both adults and children. Many who escape from behind the Iron Curtain are physically unable to comply with the requirements of countries admitting such displaced persons as immigrants.

PRESIDENT DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER asked Americans in his proclamation on THANKSGIVING DAY . . .

"TO HELP the ill, the destitute, and the oppressed in Foreign Lands."

April 12, 1954

Received your package and thank you very much. Always I believe in the love that the American citizen has for the Greek citizen and I pray always to God with my family for the continuous friendship of our countries because I am a father of 7 children and I wish to plant in their soul this friendship. You cannot imagine my happiness and emotion at this moment. I wish to you and all America

Piraeus

Your aid offered to my family relieved us so much that we never forget! My family's prayer every day is for the people who protect the poor and orphan children in the Glorious Country of U.S.A. where the new civilization was born of liberty, success and progress. This will be always marked in our hearts till we die.

AFTER SURVIVING INCREDIBLE HARDSHIPS — many are unwanted by the countries to which they are forced to flee, with no opportunity of earning the barest living. Without home, country or possessions, they become the POOREST OF THE POOR — for them all hope is lost.

THESE PEOPLE KNOW THEIR ENEMIES. THEY HAVE NOT YET FOUND THEIR FRIENDS. Direct Relief Foundation exists to befriend these tragic ones wherever they are and without discrimination of nationality, race, creed or color — IN THEIR HOUR OF MOST PRESSING NEED.

FLEEING FROM THE TERRORS OF FORCED LABOR AND INTERNMENT CAMPS — they come from all stations of life — often walking hundreds of miles, HUNGRY, RAGGED, COLD AND WEARY BEYOND BELIEF.

OUR HELP CONSISTS OF SHIPMENTS OF FOOD, USED CLOTHING, MEDICAL SUPPLIES AND MONEY — all everyday items to us but MIRACLES to those in need.

THEIR DESPERATE NEED is not only for food and clothing but also FOR THE PROOF THAT SOMEONE CARES — that they are not alone and not forgotten.

DIRECT RELIEF FOUNDATION appeals to YOU to become a PARTNER in this work of salvaging human beings and RESTORING THEIR FAITH IN THEIR FELLOWMEN.

The destitute on our waiting list are increasing daily. To assist more families who are fleeing from oppression DIRECT RELIEF FOUNDATION needs your help at once.

COUNT YOUR BLESSINGS AND GIVE GENEROUSLY

$5.00 will provide for cost of shipment of one 20-pound parcel of used clothing TO ONE FAMILY.

$10.00 will provide for shipment of one 20-pound parcel of food or a $10.00 check TO ONE FAMILY.

$20.00 will provide for shipment of one 20-pound parcel of food and a $10.00 check TO ONE FAMILY.

$50.00 will provide two food parcels, two checks of $10.00 each and one Christmas or Easter check TO ONE FAMILY.

CAN YOU AFFORD TO HELP ONE FAMILY?
CAN YOU AFFORD NOT TO HELP?

NOT TO DO GOOD—BUT BEST —WITH YOUR MONEY

Perhaps in days to come you may wish to sustain such humane endeavors as expressed in the work done by DIRECT RELIEF FOUNDATION with a legacy — your spirit still living to inspire and bless. Merely insert in your will:

> "I give, devise and bequeath to Direct Relief Foundation, Santa Barbara, California, the sum of $_____."

Direct Relief Foundation is a non-profit corporation, with established exemption under applicable Federal and California State laws governing income, gift, estate, and inheritance taxes. Your contributions are therefore deductible for Federal income and estate tax purposes.

Memorial funds or Endowment funds providing for special contributions in which the trustor or testator may be interested will be accepted through legacies or lifetime gifts, outright or in trust, bearing the name of the giver or any other name that is to be perpetuated.

Gifts do not have to be in cash or check. Securities (stocks or bonds), real estate or other property, or life insurance, may be given. There are possibilities of tax savings in giving to Direct Relief Foundation.

YOU GIVE DIRECT RELIEF

BECAUSE your contribution will benefit needy individuals or families directly and at once.

FOR EMERGENCY NEEDS OF INDIVIDUAL REFUGEES AND THE DESTITUTE

Direct Relief Foundation accepts contributions in any amount in U. S. or foreign currency.

We are grateful to you for giving us this opportunity of bringing before you a problem which is not unique in the history of mankind--but most certainly ever present, in spite of social progress.

Charity is a word of many meanings, and very relative in its application. It is always directed to the under-privileged and the interpretation of the word under-privileged is what gives the word charity its relative nature.

For instance - a mother may apply to charity because her child needs an extra pair of shoes - another because the child has no shoes - and yet another, because her child has no feet!

In the eyes of the Direct Relief Foundation, the first may be considered under-privileged by American standards - the second, poor by most standards - but, the third, is the POOREST OF THE POOR by a universal standard - and it is mainly these POOREST OF THE POOR which are our concern.

Refugees and children living in poverty and despair are the principal beneficiaries. Tuberculosis, anemia, hunger, all forms of illness and lack of warm clothing are prevalent among refugees - both adults and children. Many who escape from behind the Iron Curtain are physically unable to comply with the requirements of countries admitting such displaced persons as immigrants.

After surviving incredible hardships many are unwanted by the countries to which they are forced to flee, with no opportunity of earning the barest living. Without home, country or possessions, they become the POOREST OF THE POOR - for them all hope is lost.

Fleeing from the terrors of forced labor and internment camps, they come from all stations of life - often walking hundreds of miles, hungry, ragged, cold and weary beyond belief.

These people know their enemies. They have not yet found their friends. Direct Relief Foundation exists to befriend these tragic ones wherever they are and without discrimination of nationality, race, creed or color - in their hour of most pressing need.

President Dwight D. Eisenhower asked Americans in his proclamation on Thanksgiving Day "To help the ill, the destitute, and the oppressed in Foreign Lands."

Our help consists of shipments of food, used clothing, medical supplies and money - all everyday items to us but miracles to those in need.

Their desperate need is not only for food and clothing but also for the proof that someone cares - that they are not alone and not forgotten.

HOW IT WORKS:

A letter for help reaches Direct Relief Foundation from a refugee family. The letter may be an appeal for food for refugee children uprooted from their homeland. It may be an appeal for medicine for a tubercular husband and father. It may be an appeal for money for an eye operation, for cancer treatment, for an artificial foot so that a sixteen-year-old can walk again.

The case is then investigated through the representative of Direct Relief Foundation in the country of the applicant or through the Red Cross or other agency. Based on the application and the report received from our representative, the Board of Trustees resolves if the applicant is to be included in the list of beneficiaries and to what extent. In the affirmative case, aid is then sent directly to that individual.

Direct Relief goes to the individual who needs it most.

Direct Relief is acknowledged by the individual who receives a used clothing parcel, food, medicine, money for food, an operation, medical treatment, hospital care.

Direct Relief Foundation has had nearly 10 years of experience in screening and handling refugee problems.

I do not know whether you realize how few organizations in the United States today are doing this type of personal charity for the individual abroad, with the result that this Foundation is today carrying a load beyond its financial capacity - as the demands for help continue to increase.

THESE ARE THE PEOPLE:

The Christopher Family in Greece - father, mother and two boys, aged 9 and 6½, live in a small shed with a dirt floor. The Greek father had his own home and shop in Rumania but returned to Greece to serve in the war of 1940-41. He was not permitted to return to Rumania where his property was destroyed. Suffering from hernia, rheumatism, inflammation of the kidneys and cancer, he cannot work. The mother cannot work either because the youngest child is paralytic and needs her care. Poor neighbors share their little food with them. They were ragged, barefooted and in need of food, clothing, shoes, blankets, and medical care when they applied to Direct Relief Foundation for help.

Helmut, an 18-year-old boy in Germany, stricken with polio at the age of one, still sits in the same crib where he was placed as a baby. His sister is crippled also. Nothing is done for him. The father died recently and the mother has been in the hospital for major surgery and cannot carry him downstairs and out into the sunshine. She has tried in vain to get a wheelchair so he can get around on his own.

Margarethe in Germany is a 67-year-old widow and is alone. A refugee from Estonia, her son was killed in the Katyn Massacre and her husband was missing after Soviet occupation. She suffers from angina pectoria, diseased liver, and gall bladder trouble. She needs milk, butter, eggs - and cannot even recall when she last had such basic items.

For instance, in Greece a third of the people have to exist on less than $8.00 a month income and prices in Greece are comparable to ours. It must be added that unemployment is a big problem. The poverty of the people is aggravated in many sections by wretched housing conditions. Many of them who have employment, lead a hand-to-mouth existence with only the plainest and scantiest food passing from hand to the mouth. Many of the children go to school barefoot even in the winter.

THIS IS WHAT THEY SAY:

> "Always I believe in the love that the American citizen has for the Greek citizen and I pray always to God with my family for the continuous friendship of our countries, because I am a father of 7 children and I wish to plant in their soul this friendship. You cannot imagine my happiness and emotion at this moment. I wish to you and all America ....."

Our American people, with less than one-fifteenth of the world's population and residing on about six per cent of the world's land area, consume fifty per cent of the goods of the world.

However, overseas, the fate of countless refugees and destitute families is tragic beyond belief. Their need is of immediate urgency and there is no substitute for direct aid to them.

In 1956, this Foundation furnished assistance to about 1,000 refugees and destitute people in Austria, Germany, Greece, Italy and other countries. Such direct aid in the hour of their greatest need creates a warm friendship for America that is proven by countless letters.

Direct Relief Foundation appeals to you to become a partner in this work of salvaging human beings and restoring their faith in their fellowmen.

The destitute on our waiting list are increasing daily. To assist more families who are fleeing from oppression Direct Relief Foundation needs your help at once.

Can you afford to help one family? Can you afford not to help?

Your contributions are deductible for Federal income and estate tax purposes.

Gifts do not have to be in cash or check. Securities (stocks or bonds), real estate or other property, or life insurance, may be given. There are possibilities of tax savings in giving to Direct Relief Foundation.

Count your blessings and give generously. Share your Christmas, person to person, with a poor family in Free Europe. $100.00 will help assist one average family for one year starting with a Christmas check for $25.00.

How many families can you help?

Dear Sirs:

I received your $30 of the DIRECT RELIEF FOUNDATION and I would like to thank this wonderful Organization which is so concerned of comforting and helping the poor people in need as I am.

The amount of $30 was used for my little daughter suffering from tuberculosis of the glands.

I am enclosing herewith a photograph of her in bed, thanking you once more again for your kindness.

I remain, Dear Sirs,

Very truly yours,

I received your note for the used clothing parcel.

I'll be very much obliged if you would send me $5.00 to buy a bed as in our bed now we sleep three.

I want to express my gratitude to you for your generous help to me.

The fact that an unknown friend from across the sea helped me has also strengthened my courage and my faith in human nature.

I thank you again most deeply for your act.

LITTLE ORPHAN MARIA IN ATHENS, GREECE:

We first heard about Maria from a neighbor who found the little 5-year-old abandoned in a small dirty room next door--hungry and cold. An impoverished teacher with wife and child, he struggled to keep little Maria alive.

He learned the mother and father had separated and remarried and neither wanted Maria. The Police, he discovered, could not interfere in private family affairs and could not help.

In desperation, he wrote this Foundation: "Poor Maria will die for want of food, dirty and without heavy clothes for the severe winter. I managed to get some powder milk...unfortunately, the last spoonful of the powder milk is going to finish tomorrow and I do not know what to do.

"I appeal to your kind feelings to help me in my effort to keep little Maria's body and soul together. Do send me what you can, food, money, clothes. Whatever you send will be precious for the little one....she is a clever and handsome girl....."

CASE OF THEODORA:

Theodora came to Greece as a 5-year-old refugee orphan from Asia Minor where her father had been a well-to-do cattle merchant in Smyrna. When she left the orphanage she worked as a servant until her marriage in 1937.

During the events of December 1944, Communists inflicted serious head injuries on her little daughter, and her husband was killed by a mine.

When Theodora became pregnant again in her second marriage, the husband's attack on her daughter left the child mentally deranged. Theodora left her second husband and went to work again as a servant to support her children, but contracted T.B.

She tried to keep working and could not take time to go to a sanatarium for proper treatment.

She wrote this Foundation in July 1956: "My daughter is very ill....The truth is that we are suffering very much... I cannot work to earn money to take care of my children."

GEORGES AND EKATERINI with their four children aged 2-10 live in a small, unhealthy barracks room in Athens. Georges is in a T.B. Sanaterium. Ekaterini does washing when she can find work. Their poor neighbors share their meager food with this family.

But the children, three little girls and a boy, are often hungry and without warm clothes to wear.

Ekaterini wrote DIRECT RELIEF FOUNDATION for medicine to cure Georges' tubercular condition, also for food and clothing for the children.

CASE OF MR. AND MRS. ALEXANDRA (Greece)

"To Direct Relief Foundation, dated April 6, 1956.

Dear Sir:

"With so much joy and pride we received your very welcome check which came as a big surprise to us and it was like as if God sent it to us. When your letter came believe me the children were in bed sick with measles, and the youngest was more serious because it affected his eyes. The doctor came every day and of course ordered medicine and believe me when I say that I had no money, that's why I say that God sent it. I was in debt and worried too because I didn't even have a little money to buy milk for the children.

"So you can understand with the money I paid for the doctor, bought medicine and food and then I bought a pair of shoes for George. If you could only understand how much joy we received from your money you will never know. However dear friends, may God Bless and keep you safe and there's not words I can tell you to say thank you so very much.

With regards,

Mr. and Mrs. Alexandra_____"

CASE OF CHRISTOPHER (GREECE):

This family consists of father 34 years old, mother 31 years old, boy 9 years old, and boy 6½ years old. They live in a small shed with a dirt floor which was given to them temporarily. They lived before in Bucharest, Rumania, where the father had his own home. As Greece was mobilized in 1939, the father came there to serve in the Army, he took part in the Albanian War of 1940-41. When the war ended they had the intention to return to Rumania but it was not permitted to them. Their property has been destroyed in Rumania; the father worked as a shoeshiner in order to feed the family but got rheumatism, hernia and inflammation of the kidneys. Thereby he became unfit for work. The youngest child is paralytic and in need of treatment. Owing to this family condition the mother cannot go to work. Their condition is tragic, the neighbors, also indigent people, feed them from the little they have themselves, the family suffers very much. They are ragged and bare-footed, they are in great need of foodstuffs, clothing, underwear, footwear, blankets and whatever other possible aid.

Honorable Sirs and Madam:

I beg your pardon because I didn't answer at once, but I had caught cold with a great fever for six days. I received your letter and your check and I felt a great pleasure.

I thank you very, very much for the $15 which sincerely saved me from death and hunger, because I bought my medicine, I paid my doctor, and I bought some food.

The doctor told me that he can't do an operation in my stomach because of my old age, and that's why I have to drink medicine 20 days ever month in all my life.

Now with the medicine I feel a little better and I thank you a lot of times, because you relieved me, an old, poor, unhappy woman.
Every moment I beg from God to give you and your children every happiness.

The $15 was a great relief for my ill body.

I wish God offer you all the goods of the world, health and happiness.
Thank you very much.

Respectfully,

(Signed) Staviouia Botsi

Gentlemen:

I deeply wish to thank you for the parcel of used clothing I have received from you.

Expressing my gratitude to you, I feel that I represent also the feelings of thousand others who have the same way received presents from your organization, and I am sure that your organization have helped very much in creating the understanding necessary for the cooperation of the different people.

Thanking you again, I remain,

Yours respectfully,

Dear Sirs:

August 13 of current year I received your parcel post with victuals sent by your organization and destined for my poor family.

I beg you to accept my infinite thanks and the gratefulness of my six children, of my wife, and me personally.

I also thank Almighty God, who inspired you to do this beneficence to a so poor and numerous family as mine.

We hope that you shall continue in the next future, if that's possible and no burden, this pleasing to God help and manifestation of your charity to give the joy and relief, where reigns the penury and misfortune and help a crippled man, who gave a limb of himself in the affair of the freedom durhg the World War II and who bodily is unable when the pension of the State is so stingy.

You came helping in my appeal perceiving my want, I thank you heartily; by your generosity to my family you increased our affection and estimation to the American people who is our great friend and ally of our Fatherland.

Finishing I please you to transmit to all members of your Organization my cordial thanks and wishes for happiness of them and their families.

Faithfully yours,

(Signed) Nicolous Jalouris

"I want to let you know that I got the money...I am pleased to see that there are people whose purpose is to help miserable persons.

"The time I receive your letter I think that people is not any more bad but in the contrary they are good and there is love among them.

"So, mothers must be sure that there are no bad persons to kill their children as they do for my own two children.....

"I wish God could help us to think of doing always good deeds and never doing the bad ones...."

I thank you for your enthusiastic and warm letter of 10-1-56 so I canenter in English school. I have registered.

I cannot forget what you have done for me and all my life I will remember and appreciate it and pray for my respectful unknown friends. You are so good and kind, God Bless you. You are the selection of the people of a great civilization, and philanthropic race. Americans are glorious people, helpers of the suffering and hungry. God Bless America and her people, and you entering me in college for English. I will never forget in all my life and death.

Something happened to me some time ago. I lost my dear father after suffering for years, and I am with my mother.

God give you and all your associates, long life, happiness, health and love.

With great respect andlove for you and your associates.

To William Zimdin Foundation

I received your little card and your letter with ten dollars.

Thank you very much. Your goodness and help made me understand that the poor people, as we are, have a few persons in the world who interest for them.

I hope God permit you to interest for poor people for a long time.

I haven't many words to say to you, except to thank you very, very much.

I know that your Foundation help many people as they help me. And I hope God give you health and power in order to continue for a long time your excellent job.

Dear President:

Many thanks for the check which you have sent me and I do not know how to thank you. I am one of the many victims of the war and I am in this institution and unable to describe the misery. I am sick, weak lungs, and in Italy without money. I am really poor and waiting for death, suffering atrocious pains. Food is bad. I do not wish to be too lengthy in my writing but you and all American citizens know what is going on. Would write you more but my arm pains me so much - and you will understand me anyway. Infinite thanks for your kindness as well as that of all Americans.

Our dear Benefactors:

Please, do forgive me the delay in my thanking you for your gift of coffee, but my daughter had a bad flue and this hampered my activities.

I, herewith, enclose the receipt contained in the parcel. For the present gift, as for all those in the past, I do not find suitable words how to express my deep gratitude.

We are wishing you and all those of the staff, a Happy Easter. May Almight preserve you all as a nation from which we are seeking help and comfort.

CASE OF LITTLE OLGA (AUSTRIA):

Olga's father and brother were murdered in Poland when she was a little girl. Her mother, desperately fleeing from the terror, attempted to board a moving train, carrying the child in her arms. The mother slipped beneath the train wheels and was killed. Olga was injured and lost a foot.

Today, at sixteen, Olga is with a poor Austrian family who adopted her. She can not prove either German or Austrian citizenship and is therefore denied sufficient help from either country. The cost of the greatest boon in the life of an attractive 16-year-old girl was one hundred dollars for the necessary orthopedic brace to enable Olga to walk again like a human being.

My husband and I thank you for the $10.00 check. I, myself, am thanking you especially since I could at last purchase medicine for my legs which are since many years ill, which I cannot obtain here from Social Security and which is impossible for me to pay for. It consists of combined vitamins F99, treatment and a salve for the wounds. One could not help me in the hospital where all examinations were negative and I have set all my hope on F99. Today I have thanks to your generous help started with the cure and hope to God that it will help. I hope that you yourself are well and thank you again.

To Direct Relief Foundation:

I was in Seventh Heaven today when the postman brought your large package. You really know how to give surprises and pleasure. The man who can give is happy indeed. But also the one who receives is very, very happy and thankful that there still are such dear and good people.

My child is still in school and she performed an Indian dance when everything came Christmas that she'd wished for. I would never have been able to buy anything in such quality. Only the two jackets were left to me since my daughter, who is now 13½ years old confiscated practically everything else and is wearing the beautiful gray coat. In all the years it is her first coat and her pleasure. This is the one you sent before and it is already very short.

I'm thinking about the many Hungarians who had to flee their country and have been received with so much love everywhere. How different it was when we had to flee our country; I arrived on December 19, 1945, and had to stay with my child in a hole in the wall under a large cellar, whereby my child had a high temperature. I had only water on December 24, 1945, to give her. Not one apple or a candle. We were really poorer than the Christ Child when we finally got dry bread and black coffee and had to cover my feverish child with my tears.

It is a comforting feeling for us that far away there were people who were led by God and who have restored to us the belief in humanity and we will never forget what you have done for us.

May the Ruler of the world compensate you a thousand times.

Please accept my blessings and my best wishes for your good health and I remain

Thankfully your,

KARIN IN GERMANY WRITES ON JANUARY 6, 1957:

"I thank you with a happy heart for the Christmas check and the package...The pants fit Winfried very well. He wants to put them on for Sunday church only. I altered the dress for Karin and she's very proud of it. Due to your kindness, I could arrange something for Christmas. On both days we even had meat. The Christ Child came also in our modest apartment.

"Many times I've been in despair over my illness and poverty...The fleeing was cruel since I had nothing except what I had on my back but I came through and wish I would have remained well in health.

"I would do any work with pleasure but the worst is to see the children suffer in poverty without being able to help. I carry alone all worries for my children and old mother."

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Some weeks ago I addressed to you an invitation to become a charter sustaining member of the Democratic Party of the United States. We have had a very wonderful response to this membership program. However, our records do not show that you have been enrolled as a member thus far.

I am sure that your letter and pledge card became mislaid, because I know that you certainly desire to be included among the charter list of members. We reserved the first 1,000 membership cards for prominent members of our Party. Most of these have been assigned, but a few are still available.

A pledge card is enclosed in this letter for your use. The charter sustaining membership is based upon a contribution, payable in monthly, bi-monthly, quarterly, semi-annual or annual installments. If you have already become enrolled on our membership list, I wish you would pass on the pledge card to another good Democrat who may desire to be enrolled. Thus far, we have not made this membership available to the general public, but we intend to do so after the charter period expires on December 31.

I am hopeful that we will have your membership soon. Many thanks to you for all your help to our great Party.

With warm regards, I am

Sincerely,

Paul M. Butler

P.S. The recent elections and every poll and other political indicator point to sweeping Democratic victories in 1958 and 1960, but it will cost money to turn the present trend into election victories. Our task of wiping out the remainder of the 1956 campaign debt and building up a fund for the 1958 campaign is an urgent one. I know you will want to do all you can to help get this job done.

Honorable Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue

Dear Mr. Murrow:

The suggestions and requests of many Democrats across the country have resulted in our inaugurating a new program of sustaining memberships in the Democratic Party, approved by unanimous vote of the National Committee. Because you are one of the most loyal and helpful members of our Party, I invite you to become one of the first 1000 charter sustaining members of the Democratic Party.

We have prepared an attractive card evidencing charter sustaining membership and we are reserving the first 1000 of these numbered cards for those prominent members of our Party who are among the first to respond to this letter which is being addressed to only 1000 Democrats.

Former President Truman will receive the number one membership card and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will be given the number two card. House Speaker Sam Rayburn, Senate Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson, Adlai E. Stevenson and Estes Kefauver will be the holders of the next four cards. Others will be issued in the order of response to this letter.

The charter sustaining membership also carries with it a subscription for the Democratic Digest. If you are already a subscriber, you may extend your own subscription or make a gift subscription to a non-subscriber.

If your State Committee has already inaugurated its own sustaining membership plan, please do not consider our program to be inconsistent or competitive. We will cooperate fully with our state organization in coordinating these plans.

Our Party is deeply indebted to you for all that you have done and are doing for it. Your becoming a charter sustaining member will be a further help at this time.

With warm regards, I am

Sincerely,

Paul

Dear Ed

This is to thank you both very much for a most enjoyable weekend. When we started in the rain from here, the weather forecast was so bad that it hardly looked as if we should even be able to make Stewart airfield. But we did, and I am only sorry that you had such a time trying to find us.

Sunday, as my first day's shooting in America could not have been more enjoyable for me. It was good of you to think of it, and if the chance turns up in January or February I shall certainly remember what you said and find out whether you could let us do it again.

Meanwhile, two things. First, let me return the book on Alexandre Dumas II by Maurois which conveys so vividly the gusto of his life. Secondly, I shall look forward to seeing you in Paris in a week's time or so.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Many thanks for your letter of October 9 and the very kind invitation to relax in Dutchess County. I am very glad that we have been able to arrange it for the week end of November 30 - December 1. We are looking forward enormously to this.

May I let you know near the date about our time of arrival? Is there any sizeable airstrip near Pawling? As we shall probably be travelling in the Embassy Heron it might save some time to by-pass the New York airport.

October 9, 1957

Dear Sir Harold:

Pursuant to our all too brief conversation at luncheon the other day, if you should need the feel of a little relaxation after the Royal visit, perhaps you would care to shoot a few pheasant or duck in Dutchess County about 75 miles north of New York City either the first or second week in December.

The shooting is artificial, but not too bad. We can at least promise you quiet and no weighty conversation.

As ever yours,

His Excellency
Sir Harold Caccia
The Ambassador of England
Washington, D.C.

Dear Ed,

Your secretary motherhens you so well that I find myself writing you a note instead of interrupting whatever you are doing by a telephone call.

All I want is to see you for a few minutes and get a briefing on the possibilites and the pitfalls in radio and TV.

For three years now I have been living the tarpaper (early American tarpaper, that is) existence out in Sag Harbor. It has been good and it has been worth it to be able to read what I wanted to read and write what I wanted to write--but the winters flatten out in a deadening way and I need the stimulation of events and somebody to talk to besides these damn clam diggers. I swore it wouldn't happen that way, but it did.

So I have decided to go back to work either writing or editing and preferably on a salaried rather than a free lance basis. Television writing and newscasting both interest me but what I need is advice on what makes sense and what doesn't. This, I figure, you know about and the word on it I hope you won't mind passing along.

Phone calls reach me here at Tr 9-3173 in the mornings and evenings, or a note will reach me at 504 East 84th. But if you are too jammed up with all the multitudinous things you seem to be doing, why don't you just give me a clue or the name of someone who might fill me in on the general sort of information I need?

Time's cover story on you was an excellent one--at least from the technical point of view. As an old cover story writer I saw all the ingredients: A few shots through the keyhole, a touch of learned condescension, credit where credit is due, thorough research, good organization, lively writing--it's a formula and it makes good copy. Yours was one of the best in a long while.

I do hope I am not being a bother about this. (That mother hen of yours must have me intimidated)

Betty is lively as ever and joins in the best to all of you,

Bill Calhoun

PRESS RELEASE

INTERNATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION

CALIFORNIA ACADEMY OF SCIENCES • GOLDEN GATE PARK • SAN FRANCISCO 18 • BAYVIEW 1-5100

MONTEREY, Calif., Oct. 25, 1956--A "brainpower forum" sponsored by five participating members of the International Science Foundation to find a solution to the shortage of scientific brainpower in the United States today laid the blame to poor utilization of existing manpower and in part to lack of numbers.

This was the conclusion reached at the close of a two-day session here this afternoon which saw 75 leaders in industry, government, and science argue various factors responsible for the shortage of scientifically-trained individuals in this country.

An 11-point program, designed to focus the attention of the nation on this problem and developed by a special committee of Forum members, was adopted at the close of today's sessions. The committee included Admiral Raymond Spruance, U. S. Navy Retired; Brig. Gen. John A. Barclay, Deputy Commander, Army Ballistic Missile Agency; Robert L. Champion, President, Cooperative Research Foundation; Richard Balch, Director of Athletics, Massachusetts Institute of Technology; C. Mansel Keene, Deputy Director, Twelfth U. S. Civil Service Region; Robert C. Miller, Director, California Academy of Sciences; and Robert T. Kimberlin, Vice President, Crown Zellerbach Corporation.

The 11-point program follows:

1. Make use of the reservoir of retired scientists and engineers and other qualified personnel capable of assisting in research and development.

2. Government, industry, and educational institutions should join forces in preparing and maintaining a census of retired scientists, engineers, teachers, etc.

3. Teachers should be permitted to take periodic leaves of absence to work for or in industry and government; qualified personnel from industry and government should help to relieve the shortage of teachers by accepting teaching assignments.

4. Utilize more efficiently the services of existing scientific personnel in providing them with qualified administrative support.

5. Technicians should be employed in increasing numbers to relieve the scientist of detail in research projects.

6. Wide use of television and radio and other media is needed to present to the American people, and particularly the younger generation, the importance of teaching, science, and engineering, and the rewarding satisfactions which come in the pursuit of these professions.

7. Government and industry should review their research programs, organization, and personnel with a view to making changes which will keep their personnel more effectively and continuously employed.

8. The educational system should be made flexible enough to provide opportunities for the exceptional student which will challenge him to the full extent of his abilities.

9. The teacher shortage should be relieved through the use of qualified, retired personnel trained in subject matter fields.

10. Attention must be given to the problem of attracting and retaining the more capable teaching, engineering, and scientific personnel by provision for greater incentives and more recognition in the community.

11. Programs for financial assistance to promising students must be substantially increased and must include the development of projects to underwrite the careers of outstanding science researchers.

OBJECTIVES OF THE INTERNATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION

CH. de GUIGNE, Chairman, Board of Governors

As we approach the anniversary of the establishment of our first International Science Center, it is apparent to all who have participated in its activities that our progress toward a fuller realization of the objectives of the International Science Foundation is creating some remarkably simple and effective avenues for international cooperation in science.

The International Science Foundation has its roots in a program initiated by the Cooperative Research Foundation (CORE) in 1950. Developed under the direction of CORE'S president, R. L. Champion, this program strengthened working relationships between North and South American scientists and engineers and developed some interesting possibilities for cooperative research projects between North and South American institutions.

Early in 1954, after the San Francisco Bay Area International Science Center had been established and operated on an experimental basis by CORE and the California Academy of Sciences, the International Science Foundation was incorporated as a non-profit membership organization to assume sponsorship of the San Francisco center and similar centers in other cities. The Foundation represents a cooperative effort on the part of academies of science, research councils, scientific and engineering societies, colleges and universities, museums, foundations, research institutes, industrial laboratories, banks, corporations, associations, and individuals to create new opportunities for closer working relationships between U. S. scientists and engineers and their colleagues in other countries. The Foundation's program depends upon three types of activity for its effectiveness:

1. Establishment and operation of science centers in metropolitan areas capable of supporting their programs. It is expected that, as additional centers are established, they will begin operating in temporary quarters and, like the San Francisco Center, they will at first function as clearinghouses to aid visiting scientists and engineers in exchanging ideas and developing professional cooperation with their colleagues in local sections of scientific societies and in local industrial laboratories, universities, research institutes, and other organizations. Each center will develop a program to meet local needs. ISF's ultimate objective is to have each center housed in its own buildings, providing facilities which may be used by ISF members and especially by engineering and scientific societies for offices, meetings, and other activities. These centers will also furnish housing and other accommodations for scientists.

2. Strengthening the mechanism of exchange between all scientists and engineers. Scientific manpower is a critical commodity. Shortages may be alleviated not only by augmenting the supply but also by increasing productivity of manpower now available. Visiting engineers and scientists bring new ideas into laboratories and stimulate our research staffs. ISF promotes world trade in ideas through its center programs, through travel grants, exchange of publications and information, and by special projects such as the publication of handbooks of the scientific resources of the areas served by ISF centers.

3. Development of cooperative projects between the U. S. membership of the International Science Foundation and its membership overseas. The team research projects that are now being developed are projects in which each ISF member provides personnel and a portion of the required funds or material for the work. The International Science Foundation also plans to work with its participating members on the organization of international symposia.

The program of the International Science Foundation takes on new importance in view of the recent cold war developments which are ushering in an era of worldwide, open competition between democratic and communist systems. The Foundation depends upon corporate support for its effectiveness and, in turn, gives American business and industrial interests an opportunity to make direct contact with ISF member institutions in other countries and participate in cooperative projects which are mutually beneficial. ISF's corporate members are in a strategic position to demonstrate some of the advantages of our free enterprise system to scientists representing these overseas scientific groups when they are visiting the U. S.

On the Move

Because of the tangle of questionnaires, detailed loyalty checks, and visa red tape, foreign scientists have become less and less eager to visit the U.S. for sessions of professional give-and-take with their colleagues in this country. This week a group of San Francisco scientists celebrated the first anniversary of a private reception center of their own, designed to accommodate scientific visitors who manage to run the red-tape gantlet.

Operating on a shoe-string in two rooms of the Morrison Planetarium in Golden Gate Park, the center has oriented 200 scientists and engineers visiting San Francisco from the Philippines, Japan, England, France, Sweden, Turkey, Canada, and several South American countries. It puts them in touch with the appropriate local technical societies, arranges calls to industrial laboratories, and sets up two-way brain-picking sessions with university groups.

The senior housekeeper for the center, which is staffed on a volunteer basis, is Dr. Robert C. Miller, a zoologist and director of the California Academy of Sciences, who, before opening for business, secured the blessings of the National Academy of Sciences.

Expanding: Now the center is branching out. It has recently formed a larger body, with Dr. Miller as president, called the International Science Foundation. This group has already cadged some small grants to keep scientists circulating internationally. It sponsored an American isotope expert's attendance at the International Cancer Congress in Brazil last month. It brought a French astronomer, scheduled only for visits to the East Coast, out to Berkeley for some valuable shop talk.

Guided by the precept that science thrives in direct proportion to the amount of informal interchange between its practitioners, the infant ISF is trying to get American scientists to set up other reception centers around the country. Work has begun on one in New York City. Dr. Miller expects centers in operation within a year in Boston and Los Angeles and hopes to set up several other centers for St. Louis, Chicago, Denver, New Orleans, Miami, Seattle, and Columbus, Ohio.

"If the visitor," he says, "should find a way to make a better fertilizer, grow better crops, or build better bridges, then the whole free world benefits. We expect that friendships a visitor makes with his colleagues here will continue by correspondence after he returns to his own country. I've traveled a little myself and some of my best friends are people I've only met once."

"BRIGHT SIDE OF BAY AREA BUSINESS"

Trans-Bay Federal Savings & Loan Association presents "The Bright Side of Bay Area Business"--a five-minute program designed to spotlight the sunny side of our Bay Area Business picture....

The clearing house as an institution for exchanging checks is a familiar one to business people. But in San Francisco's Golden Gate Park is located another kind of clearing house. Instead of exchanging checks this clearing house was established for the purpose of exchanging ideas... between scientists and engineers throughout the world. Situated in the California Academy of Sciences, the International Science Foundation is doing a job for all of us in the free world. International Science Foundation has its roots in a program initiated by the Cooperative Research Foundation. Nicknamed CORE, this parent organization was formed in 1950 to conduct research work. A research team of some 26 American scientists and engineers, while on an assignment which took them to Brazil, decided there was a definite need for American industry to assume a responsibility in the Government's successful Point Four program. As a result of this thinking, the San Francisco International Science Center was set up on an experimental basis. Two rooms in the Morrison Planetarium in Golden Gate Park served as headquarters. During the first year of its existence, the Center helped to orient 200 scientists and engineers visiting San Francisco from such far away places as the Philippines, Japan, Europe, and South America. When the permanent need for a service of this kind was evident early in 1954, the International Science Foundation was incorporated as a non-profit membership organization. The Foundation through a cooperative effort creates new opportunities for closer working relationships between U.S. scientists and engineers and their colleagues in other countries. The Foundation's program is a threefold one: First, the establishment and operation of international science centers in metropolitan areas capable of supporting their programs. San Francisco's Center in Golden Gate Park was the first in the United States. Since then, centers in New York, Los Angeles, Columbus, and Houston are in the planning stage. The Foundation's second activity is strengthening the mechanism of exchange between all scientists and engineers. A third part of the program is the development of cooperative research projects between members of the Foundation and its membership overseas. In February of this year, ISF issued an important publication--"Scientific Resources of the San Francisco Bay Area." In addition to containing a directory of scientific and engineering personnel, this handbook includes information on Bay Area educational institutions, local sections of engineering and scientific organizations of interest. The handbook may be purchased at the California Academy of Sciences...or from the San Francisco Bay Area Council at 130 Montgomery Street. Chambers of commerce in Oakland, Berkeley, and Redwood City are other places where the handbook may be obtained. Since expansion of the Foundation's membership will enable it to bring more leading scientists to the Bay Area, ISF welcomes the support of new members. Yes, Trans-Bay Federal Savings & Loan Association is proud to salute the International Science Foundation, a San Francisco-born organization which already is being heard around the world...as a leader in clearing the way for scientific teamwork on the side of freedom....

INTERNATIONAL CENTER FACILITATES SCIENTIFIC EXCHANGES

San Francisco--A private experiment in international good will has proved a success and the scientific community of the free world stands to benefit considerably.

Some two years ago a group of U.S. scientists agreed that some private, non-profit organization should be formed to increase cooperation between scientists in this country and abroad. They interested the National Academy of Sciences and the National Research Council in their idea and in February, 1953, the first international science center became a reality.

San Francisco was selected as the site for the experiment after the California Academy of Sciences here agreed to provide office space in its buildings in Golden Gate Park. A cooperative research foundation offerred to assume the operation costs and officials in both organizations volunteered to direct the Center's activities without pay.

The immediate goal was a modest one: to help visiting scientists contact their professional colleagues in this country.

(MORE)

Letters went out to the scientific societies throughout the Free World and the replies were encouraging.

Directors of societies in England, France, The Netherlands, Canada, Japan, the Philippines and other countries offered their congratulations and agreed to inform their members of the Center's facilities.

When a visiting scientist arrives here now he contacts the Center. The Center, in turn, calls in the local scientific or engineering society most closely related to the visitor's work. The society then arranges for the visitor to meet the men in the universities, laboratories or industries whose research projects are similar to the visitor's. The man from abroad and his American colleagues then discuss their mutual problems, inspect each other's work and each benefits from the other's ideas.

In the past year, the Center has helped some 200 foreign scientists and now the formation of the International Science Foundation has been announced.

Plans disclosed by the Foundation prove that the backers of the original idea believe their experiment a success.

Another new center has already been formed in New York City and others are in the planning stage in nine other U.S. cities.

In New York a campaign is under way to raise $2.5 million to construct a building for the center on a parcel of land near Columbia University and it is hoped that each center will eventually have its own quarters.

(MORE)

According to Foundation officials, the centers will also house the local sections of the scientific and engineering societies and this will make it even easier for visiting scientists to meet their colleagues.

Universities, industries and scientific associations are backing the program financially.

In announcing formation of the Foundation, its officials had this to say:

"It has long been recognized that science is an effective medium through which men may meet and exchange views in an atmosphere of intellectual freedom and understanding. It has recently become apparent that more importance should be given to broadening international cooperation at the working level, thus developing better teamwork between individual scientists and engineers throughout the free world.

"The visits of foreign scientists to this country afford an excellent opportunity for cementing professional frienships, developing informal relationships, and furthering scientific cooperation.

"Industry participation in this program represents a contribution to progress in science and technology that should make possible better living conditions in the free world.

"Scientists of all countries, more than any other group, realize the extent to which their achievements depend on work that is going on in other parts of the world. They know that every step forward is a step that has been possible through combined human effort.

"It is becoming more and more apparent that it is not in the crowded conference room that new theories are developed, but rather through informal, cooperative relationships cultivated between scientists of various countries who are engaged in the same kind of research. It is through privately sponsored programs of scientific information and persons that this kind of atmosphere can best be nurtured."

Dr. Robert C. Miller, director of the California Academy of Sciences and secretary of the Pacific Division of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, has been elected president of the Foundation.

The Foundation has been described as "a private Point Four program" and Dr. Miller agreed:

"One of the main purposes in this interchange of ideas is that the visiting scientist will be able to apply what he has learned when he returns home. If he should find a way to make better fertilizer, grow better crops or build better bridges, then the whole free world benefits.

"We expect that the friendships he makes with his colleagues here will continue by correspondence after he returns to his own country. I've travelled a little myself and some of my best friends are people I've met only once. And not only does the friendship last but also the interchange of ideas continues. That's the important thing."

Other new officers elected by the Foundation include George Tenney, president of McGraw-Hill, a publishing company, who will be vice-president; Belford Brown, vice-president of the San Francisco Bank, secretary; and

(MORE)

Dr. Morris Stewart, associate dean of the University of California Graduate School, treasurer.

John Alison, vice-president of the Northrop Aircraft Corporation, was elected chairman of the Board of Governors. Other members of the Board include some of the United States' leading educators, industrialists and research scientists.

HANDBOOK TO COVER AREA'S SCIENCE FIELD

To Be Published Annually by S. F. International Group

By JOHN F. ALLEN

The San Francis Bay area, long recognized as one of the world's great centers of scientific research, is soon to have its own unique handbook of scientific resources.

The handbook, to be published and brought up to date annually, will be the first such compilation ever assembled in the United States and promises to be an invaluable aid to scientists and to corporations contemplating the establishment of plants in the area.

Yesterday's announcement of the handbook's publication marked the first anniversary of an equally unique San Francisco enterprise known as the International Science Foundation, headed by Dr. Robert Miller, director of the California Academy of Sciences.

The foundation grew out of the establishment here in 1953 of an experimental science center—the first in the country—designed to provide a headquarters for local scientists and scientific information, as well as point of contact for visiting scientists from abroad.

NEW CENTERS ORGANIZED.

This pilot center proved so successful that the foundation was set up here to operate it and a second center in New York, and to sponsor nine other centers now being organized in other cities.

The foundation, which is supported entirely by private corporations interested in the progress of technological research, has three major purposes:

1—The operation of a growing number of centers like the one in San Francisco.

2—Financial and other types of assistance to foreign scientists visiting the United States, and to United States scientists who wish to travel abroad for conferences and meetings.

3—The erection of science center buildings in key metropolitan areas, which will provide living quarters and other facilities for visiting research men, plus meeting rooms, offices, libraries and other facilities for area scientists and scientific societies.

The foundation is supported by dozens of corporate memberships; some typical local organizations which are members include:

Last December the center sponsored and helped finance a visit to the United States by Dr. Fritz Zernike, Dutch Nobel Prize winner, who delivered a major paper at the Berkeley meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

The center and foundation are currently sponsoring and financing a series of Bay area conferences for Dr. Peter Alexander, one of Britain's most noted cancer experts.

The handbook, which will be available sometime next November, will contain a directory of all area scientists, listed by field of specialty; research facilities and specific experimental goals of educational institutions; local scientific and engineering societies; industrial research laboratories; commercial research laboratories, and a whole host of similar information.

Bay Area's Vast and Varied Research Facilities

By Donovan Bess

Do not underestimate the power of the Bay Area.

Maybe you have lived here for many years, maybe you think you know all there is to know about the region.

But chances are you are not aware of the amazing scope and variety of research now going on in laboratories through the nine counties.

For instance, do you know that—

• There is a fireproof room in Berkeley in which research men are studying the behavior of small-scale forest fires.

• A team of food experts at Davis is investigating the discoloration of canned all-green asparagus.

• Federal scientists at Albany are busy trying to find a way to keep wool from shrinking when it is laundered.

• Experts at the Veterans Administration Hospital at Palo Alto have a project which aims to evaluate tranquilizing drugs.

• Engineers at the University of California are enthusiastically studying the effects of light on reproduction in birds.

These are a few examples of many hundreds of pioneer research projects disclosed in a 90-page handbook just published by the International Science Foundation. It is called "Scientific Resources of the San Francisco Bay Area."

The handbook, the second in a series, gives a complete inventory of research facilities, public and private. It will go out to scientific organizations and firms throughout the world to inform them in detail of the Bay Area's extraordinary facilities.

Typical of reactions from abroad is a letter from S. G. Brooker of the council of the Royal Society of New Zealand. After examining the first handbook, he said, he decided to come to San Francisco to meet with scientists here working on the chemistry of fatty oils.

The research ranges from basic work on isotopes to specific problems such as a University of California study "of final approach paths of turbo-prop and piston-engine aircraft at London airport."

At Stanford University food scientists are studying the interrelations between African agriculture and urbanization and industrial development.

At UC, one project is concerned with radioactivity in the atmosphere and in soil atmosphere.

The handbook also summarizes the vast research activity carried on by private firms.

Science Data on Bay Area Out

The 1957-58 edition of the handbook "Scientific Resources of the San Francisco Bay Area" has been released by the International Science Foundation, it was announced yesterday.

The unusual publication catalogues and describes the area's rapidly developing scientific, manpower and research facilities, and also furnishes information to acquaint visiting scientists and executives with research projects now under way.

The book will be on sale at $5 per copy at the San Francisco Bay Area Council, California Academy of Sciences and major chambers of commerce and industrial development organizations in the nine Bay area counties. It was compiled and edited for the foundation by the Co-operative Research Foundation.

BOOKS FOR BUSINESSMEN

The 1957-58 edition of a unique publication which catalogues and describes the scientific and technological resources of the San Francisco Bay Area has just been released by the International Science Foundation. Scientific Resources of the San Francisco Bay Area not only provides a much-needed blueprint of the area's rapidly developing scientific manpower and research facilities but also furnishes information which will acquaint visiting scientists and executives with research projects now under way in its research establishments. The handbook will be on sale at $5.00 per copy at the San Francisco Bay Area Council, California Academy of Sciences, and the major chambers of commerce and industrial development organizations in the nine Bay Area counties.

The handbook, which was compiled and edited for the International Science Foundation by the Cooperative Research Foundation, is divided into a number of chapters: (1) universities and colleges, with information on current research in their various departments; (2) scientific institutions such as museums and foundations, giving a summary of their research activities; (3) engineering and scientific societies having headquarters or branches in the Bay Area, giving addresses, officers, activities, etc.; (4) consulting engineers; (5) industrial research facilities, describing the research being carried on by the area's industrial organizations; (6) Bay Area trade associations engaged in research; (7) federal, state, county, and municipal agencies concerned with scientific research; (8) scientific and technical periodicals originating in the Bay Area. The most unusual feature of the publication is its opening chapter, which has classified and cross-indexed the Bay Area's research activities according to scientific and engineering disciplines.

The International Science Foundation publishes Scientific Resources of the San Francisco Bay Area as a part of the program of its San Francisco Bay Area International Science Center located in Golden Gate Park. The publication of the 1957-58 edition was made possible by the following foundations and members of the International Science Foundation: Stauffer Chemical Co., Crown Zellerbach Foundation, Chevrolet Division of General Motors Corp., California Academy of Sciences, Cooperative Research Foundation, San Francisco Bay Area Council, Santa Clara County, San Jose Chamber of Commerce, Wells Fargo Bank, American Trust Co., Crocker-Anglo National Bank, Hewlett-Packard Co., the Bank of California, Tanforan Charities Foundation, Beachtel Corp., Standard Oil Co. of California, Lenkurt Electric Company, International Business Machines Corp., the Gudeman Co. of California, Columbia-Geneva Steel Division of United States Steel Corp., Federal Pacific Electric Co., Rheem Manufacturing Co., and Levi Strauss and Co.

International Science Foundation

The second edition of "Scientific Resources of the San Francisco Bay Area" has been prepared for release by the International Science Foundation. This unique publication, the first edition of which was released last year, is a handbook which lists Bay Area research facilities, societies, associations, colleges, universities, scientific institutions, foundations, industrial laboratories, and, added to the new edition, sections on scientific publications, special libraries, and consulting engineering firms. Copies may be purchased for $5 by writing to the Foundation at the California Academy of Sciences, San Francisco 18.

ISF is a non-profit membership organization devoted to promoting world trade in ideas through its programs, through travel grants, exchange of publications, and by special projects such as the publication of handbooks of scientific resources of the areas served by ISF centers.

New Science Tours

A Birds-Eye View of Bay Area Research

San Francisco Chronicle
Aug. 21, 1957

The International Science Foundation, following up on publication of its latest index to Bay Area research activities, hosted business leaders and members of the press yesterday on a fog-shrouded aerial tour extending from Sausalito to San Jose.

Guests of the Foundation boarded amphibians at Sausalito and were flown southeasterly over Alcatraz, along the eastern side of San Francisco, and into the sun-riddled South Bay area.

Morning fog permitted the amphibs to return via Hayward on the eastern side of the bay, but a low ceiling over Oakland and Berkeley prohibited completion of the 100-mile aerial tour.

Robert Champion, executive director of ISC, said the tour is an outgrowth of interest by scientists who visit the Bay Area each year in quest of information about research activities ranging from acoustics to zoology. He said the tour will be available to the general public—at $15 per person—as well as visiting business men interested in locating industrial plants in the rapidly-developing Bay Area.

The aerial tours are scheduled daily at 10 a. m. and 3 p. m. and coordinated with the facilities of the Gray Line bus service for tourists. Each of the amphibians carries eight persons, including the pilot.

Businessmen hosted on the initial flights yesterday by ISF Board Chairman Christian de Guigne of the Stauffer Chemical Company included executives of:

Pick Laboratories, Bank of California, Columbia Geneva Steel Division, United States Steel Corporation, Lenkurt Electric Company, San Francisco Bay Area Council, Crown Zellerbach Corporation, Federal Pacific Electric Company, International Business Machines Corporation, Campbell-Ewald Company.

New Science Handbook

Copies of the "Scientific Resources of the San Francisco Bay Area," a handbook published by the International Science Foundation, are now available here.

They may be obtained by writing to the Foundation at the California Academy of Sciences, San Francisco 18, or from participating foundation members, including Berkeley, Oakland and Redwood City chambers of commerce; the Marin Development Foundation, and the San Francisco Bay Area Council.

James K. Lochead, president of the American Trust Company, said the information provided by the handbook "should not only be the means of promoting a wider utilization of our scientific resources at the local level but should be a definite incentive to attracting new industries to the Bay area."

Comments on SCIENTIFIC RESOURCES OF THE SAN FRANCISCO BAY AREA

George Greenwood, Vice-President, The Bank of California, N. A.

"As a corporate member of the International Science Foundation, the Bank of California has been pleased with the results of the Foundation's programs to strengthen the scientific resources of the San Francisco Bay Area. We feel that the most outstanding contribution yet made by the Foundation to the scientific development of the area is the publication of its new handbook. This handbook should be extremely helpful to new business and industries which are looking to this area for future expansion."

S. D. Bechtel, President, Bechtel Corporation

"The publication of Scientific Resources of the San Francisco Bay Area effectively provides for the first time a well prepared reference handbook covering the Bay Area's scientific facilities, personnel, and activities."

J. F. Sullivan, Jr., Chairman, Executive Committee, Crocker-Anglo National Bank

"This remarkable compilation will make a great contribution to our industrial development, as it cannot help but attract scientific researchers to the Bay Area."

Richard S. Rheem, President, Rheem Manufacturing Company

"There has long been a requirement in the Bay Area and in other metropolitan areas in this country and abroad for an Indexing of the facilities and people engaged in scientific effort. The International Science Foundation has been of great service to the community in recognizing this need for the listing of scientific resources. This unique publication will be of great assistance to the scientists and engineers of our Company. I look forward to seeing the next edition of this excellent piece of work."

James K. Lochead, President, American Trust Company

"The compilation of Scientific Resources of the San Francisco Bay Area, recently published by the International Science Foundation, is most impressive. This information should not only be the means of promoting a wider utilization of our scientific resources at the local level but should be a definite incentive to attracting new industries to the Bay Area."

Senior Scientific Manpower Conference Planned

One of the recommendations of the group attending ISF's Brainpower Forum at the U. S. Naval Postgraduate School was that the Foundation sponsor a conference on senior manpower in late 1957. Plans are now being made to hold the meeting in Monterey. Discussing conference objectives during last October's Forum were, left to right, Dr. Wernher von Braun, Director of Development Operations, Army Ballistic Missile Agency; Captain A. B. Metsger, Deputy Chief of Naval Research; Christian de Guigné, Chairman of the Board, Stauffer Chemical Company; Richard S. Rheem, Chairman of the Board, Rheem Manufacturing Company; and Brigadier General John Barclay, Deputy Commander of the Army Ballistic Missile Agency.

Peninsula Science Center Space Available Soon

Foundation members are now leasing space in the first unit of ISF's new Peninsula Science Center scheduled for completion at the end of the year. When completed, the Center in Stanford Industrial Park will offer a wide range of services to members who locate their offices, laboratories, or light manufacturing facilities in this unique new community of scientific interests. These services will include telephone answering, secretarial, translating, accounting, travel, banking, drafting, and printing. The library and conference room in the Center's first unit will be available for use by all tenants, and eventually a club and housing accommodations for visiting scientists will be built across Matadero Creek from the Center's main building. All members who are interested in leasing space in the Center may obtain information on its availability from ISF's Director.

Air Research and Development Command Membership

On May 20 the Board of Governors awarded a participating membership to the Air Research and Development Command. ARDC has already become an active member of the International Science Foundation family by announcing that it will establish its Bay Area Liaison Office in the new Peninsula Science Center next January.

Members Back Work of ISF With Products and Services

Projects undertaken by the San Francisco Bay Area International Science Center are being backed up by a wide variety of services and products made available by ISF's members.

Participation of this kind is already paying off in public relations advantages to these members, as illustrated by a letter recently received by General Motors' Harlow Curtice. The letter, complimenting General Motors on the Corvette courtesy car idea, was written by Stanley G. Brooker, a member of the Council of the Royal Society of New Zealand who had come to San Francisco to exchange ideas with chemists engaged in food research projects which he had read about in Scientific Resources of the San Francisco Bay Area.

Members participating in the Center's program by furnishing products or services include Stauffer Chemical Company (special services on seven Center projects), Chevrolet Division of General Motors Corporation (courtesy car), Tidewater Oil Company (fueling courtesy car), Campbell Ewald Company (public relations services), International Business Machines Corporation (Executive model typewriter), Friden Calculating Machine Company (square root calculator), Northern Aircraft Company (courtesy aircraft), Commodore Aviation and Gray Line (services for Bay Area science and industry tours), Champion International Corporation (Center furniture), Army Ballistic Missile Agency and U. S. Naval Radiological Defense Laboratory (conference services), Cooperative Research Foundation (personnel for handbook project), California Academy of Sciences (Center facilities), San Francisco Bay Area Council (handbook maps), and the University of California (planning staff for international symposia).

Stauffer Chemical Company Becomes ISF's First Sustaining Member

A new, "red-carpet" class of membership, sustaining membership in the class of corporate sponsor, has been established to give recognition to ISF's corporate members who desire to up-grade their financial participation in the Foundation's activities. The Stauffer Chemical Company recently made application for this class of membership and a charter sustaining membership was awarded to Stauffer by ISF's Board of Governors.

BRAINPOWER FORUM
OCTOBER 24-25, 1956
MONTEREY, CALIFORNIA

IDEAS DEFINE OUR FUTURE . . .

The continuance of the upward trend of our economy and our standard of living is dependent upon increased development of our most important scientific resource – brainpower.

IDEAS ON BRAINPOWER SOURCES . . .

Our shortage of brainpower becomes more acute as social, scientific, and technological problems become more complex. Yet an immediate increase in the rate of production of engineers and scientists cannot ease the shortage for some time. In the interim, would not a re-examination of ideas which might lead us to hidden sources of brainpower be in order?

IDEAS ARE OUR BUSINESS . . .

The International Science Foundation has the object of stimulating the development of scientific resources by increasing the flow of ideas between professional personnel throughout the world. For this reason, a number of the Foundation's participating members have suggested that ISF organize a forum which would provide an opportunity for the exploration of ideas pertinent to the present brainpower shortage.

HAVE WE EXPLORED ALL SOURCES OF SCIENTIFIC MANPOWER?

A forum sponsored by the International Science Foundation on behalf of five of its participating members—

Panel Discussions: A new look at our professional manpower resources—have we explored all manpower sources that might contribute to our long-range research programs?

"What and Why?" What is our scientific manpower problem?
in military programs?
in government?
in industry?
in research institutes, universities, and foundations?

Why do we have this problem?

"Where and How?" Where can this needed manpower be found?
outside the United States?
in retirement?
in our college or secondary schools?
in our present research organizations (would better organization and better job design free a hidden supply of manpower)?

How can the productivity of our present supply of scientific manpower be increased?

How can now unused manpower resources be marshalled (how can they be organized for effective use and how can they be motivated)?

PREFACE

ONE of the problems inherent in any project to develop a handbook is that, like the evolution of an aircraft prototype, a considerable amount of time must be spent in working out defects which are bound to appear during the early period of use.

We are already cognizant of a number of defects in our first Handbook of the Scientific Resources of the San Francisco Bay Area, and we know that others will undoubtedly appear. We will welcome criticism and suggestions from the users of the 1956 edition, as this will ensure a greatly improved publication in 1957.

Our plans for the 1957 edition already include a number of new sections which could not be developed this year because of our limited budget. This new material will provide a chapter on consulting engineering firms, information on special libraries, a listing of science writers and scientific publications originating in the Bay Area, and a section on organizations indirectly contributing to research activities through financing or in other ways.

The International Science Foundation wishes to thank its many associates who have helped make this publication possible. We hope to have your continued cooperation in expanding our coverage of Bay Area scientific facilities, personnel, and activities.

INTRODUCTION

IT IS APPROPRIATE that the introduction to this handbook should be written by a group of scientists and engineers rather than by any single representative of the area's scientific community. For both the handbook and its publisher, the San Francisco International Science Center, are reflections of a community need — a need, we are proud to state, that is being met. Since its establishment three years ago, the Center has been able to combine effectively the interests of Bay Area engineering and scientific societies, educational institutions, research foundations, and corporations in community activities designed to strengthen the technological resources of the San Francisco Bay Area. The Handbook of the Scientific Resources of the San Francisco Bay Area will serve as a major tool not only in strengthening but in bringing about a full utilization of the scientific resources which it lists.

We think the handbook is also a valuable demonstration, or case history, of the way in which the various scientific activities of a community, given the proper atmosphere, can be brought together to serve the common good. For this reason, perhaps it would be well to sketch briefly the history of science in the Bay Area and to describe the birth, in 1950, of the parent organization to our present Science Center.

Historians intrigued by the stirring events in the San Francisco of 1849 and the early 1850's are prone to forget the scientific and intellectual activities that accompanied those events and that left a great and permanent imprint on a rapidly developing city and state. On April 4, 1853, less than two years after California's admission to statehood, seven men met in an office on Montgomery Street and founded the California Academy of Sciences. The group included Col. Thomas J. Nevins, San Francisco's first superintendent of schools, generally regarded as the founder of the public school system in this state; Dr. J. B. Trask, soon to become California's first state geologist; Dr. Albert Kellogg, who achieved fame as a botanist; and Dr. Henry Gibbons, a physician and early leader in the California State Medical Society. Within two weeks, the original group had been joined by Col. Leander Ransome, a distinguished engineer, and shortly there were added the names of John Donald of San Mateo and Henry Durant of Oakland, destined to be first president of the University of California. Subsequently, Charles Crocker, Leland Stanford, and James Lick became members and patrons of the young Academy, first organization of its type west of the Atlantic seaboard. Thus, early in the history of California as a state, the Bay Area began to be united in the pursuit of pure and applied science, of research and education. The founding of colleges and great universities, the building of the Lick Observatory, and the establishment of other research institutions were the natural outgrowth of this intellectual activity.

With such a background of civic interest and pride in scientific and technological cooperation, it is but natural that the San Francisco Bay community should inspire the formation of the group that developed the plan for the publication of this handbook.

In 1950, a group of San Francisco engineers and scientists formed a cooperative, known as the Cooperative Research Foundation (CORE), that had as its objective the strengthening of working relationships between engineers and scientists. In 1953, with the cooperation of the California Academy of Sciences, the group established an experimental international science center which began to serve as a San Francisco focal point for foreign engineers and scientists visiting the Bay Area. It was soon evident that the Center needed a handbook which contained information on the area's industrial research facilities, its scientific societies, its educational institutions, and its scientific organizations in order to provide the type of service desired by the visiting scientists making use of its facilities. A handbook of this kind had never been published before, and CORE began to enlist the aid of the many interests that would be necessary to make the project truly representative of the Bay Area's scientific and industrial community.

In 1954, when the experimental operation of the San Francisco International Science Center had awakened interest in other parts of the United States in this type of program and the International Science Foundation was established to sponsor the operation of the San Francisco Center and similar centers in other cities, the responsibility for the publication of the San Francisco handbook passed from the Cooperative Research Foundation to the International Science Foundation.

As members of the Cooperative Research Foundation, we have been pleased to see our project expand into a community project which, we believe, will aid in building the scientific resources of this area. We also believe that this handbook will set a pattern for the publication of similar handbooks in other parts of the United States.

We doubt if this publication could have been completed had it not been for the untiring efforts of Christian de Guigne, Chairman of the Board of Governors of the International Science Foundation. The scientific community of the Bay Area is indebted to Mr. de Guigne for the leadership which has made this first handbook a reality.

OUTLINE OF BAY AREA RESEARCH FACILITIES

OUTLINE OF BAY AREA RESEARCH FACILITIES

Acoustics
Division of Electrical Engineering, University of California, 152
Division of Engineering Design, University of California, 153
Western Asbestos Co., 526

Aerodynamics
American Society of Mechanical Engineers,18
Ames Aeronautical Laboratory, 612
Department of Aeronautical Engineering, Stanford University, 111
Department of Mechanical Engineering, Stanford University, 115
Division of Mechanical Engineering, University of California, 154
Institute of Aeronautical Sciences, 36

Aeronautical Engineering
Aeronautics Department, San Jose State College, 105
Ames Aeronautical Laboratory, 612
Department of Aeronautical Engineering, Stanford University, 111
Division of Mechanical Engineering, University of California, 154
Institute of Aeronautical Sciences, 36
Society of Automotive Engineers, 53
United Airlines, Inc., 520

Agricultural Economics
Department of Agricultural Economics, University of California, 136
Food Research Institute, 116
Giannini Foundation of Agricultural Economics, 143

Agricultural Engineering
American Society of Agricultural Engineers, 14
Department of Agricultural Engineering, University of California, 208

Agronomy
Department of Agronomy, University of California, 209
Stauffer Chemical Company, 511
Western Society of Soil Science, 58

Airport Engineering
American Society of Civil Engineers, 16
Champion International Corporation, 429
Cooperative Research Foundation, 303
Division of Civil Engineering, University of California, 150
Institute of Transportation and Traffic Engineering, 157

Anatomy
Department of Anatomy, University of California, 179

Animal Husbandry
American Society of Animal Production, 15
Department of Animal Husbandry, University of California, 210
Diablo Animal Laboratories, 441
U. S. Agriculture Research Service, 600

Anthropology
Department of Anthropology, University of California, 159
Department of Sociology and Anthropology, Stanford University, 125
Museum of Anthropology, 160

Archaeology
Archaeological and Historical Research Committee, University of Santa Clara, 228
Department of Anthropology, University of California, 159
Department of Sociology and Anthropology, Stanford University, 125
Museum of Anthropology, 160

Astronautics
American Rocket Society, Inc., 13

Astronomy
Astronomical Society of the Pacific, 25
California Academy of Sciences, 301
Department of Astronomy, University of California, 161
Lick Observatory, 207
Ricard Memorial Observatory, 227

Astrophysics
Department of Astronomy, University of California, 161

Atmospheric Pollution
Division of Civil Engineering, University of California, 150
Sanitary Engineering Laboratory, 151
School of Public Health, University of California, 184
Stanford Research Institute, 510

Audiology
A. E. Bennett Neuropsychiatric Research Foundation, 300
Audiology and Speech Clinic, 203

Bacteriology
Biological Science Department, San Jose State College, 108
Cutter Laboratories, 437
Department of Bacteriology, University of California, 162
Division of Natural Science, San Francisco State College, 103
Hopkins Marine Station, 118
National Canners Association, 488
Society of American Bacteriologists, 50
Virus Laboratory, 164

Biochemistry
Bio-Research Laboratories, 417
Cutter Laboratories, 437
Department of Biochemistry, University of California, 163
Department of Physiological Chemistry, University of California, 181
Department of Plant Biochemistry, University of California, 140
Palo Alto Medical Research Foundation, 306
Virus Laboratory, 164

Biology
Arthur D. Little, Inc., 481
Biological Science Department, San Jose State College, 108
Biometric Society, 26
California Academy of Sciences, 301
California Spray-Chemical Corporation, 424
Cooperative Research Foundation, 303
Department of Biological Sciences, Mills College, 100
Department of Biological Sciences, Stanford University, 117
Department of Biology, University of Santa Clara, 224

SOCIETIES AND ASSOCIATIONS

American Academy of Pediatrics, Northern California Chapter.
President: Hartzell H. Ray, 23 Baldwin Ave., San Mateo.
Objectives: To foster and stimulate interest in pediatrics and in all aspects of work for the welfare of children.

American Association for the Advancement of Science, Pacific Division, California Academy of Sciences, San Francisco.
President: Robert R. Brode, University of California, Berkeley. Secretary: Robert C. Miller.
Objectives: To further the work of scientists; to facilitate cooperation among them; to improve the effectiveness of science in the promotion of human welfare; and to increase public understanding and appreciation of the importance and promise of the methods of science in human progress.
Activities: Annual meeting.
Members: 5,500.

3
American Cancer Society, California Division, 467 O'Farrell St., San Francisco.
Chairman: Mrs. Roger Goodan. Secretary: Leonard Dobson, 350 Post St., San Francisco.
Objectives: Cancer research; public and professional education in cancer; services to cancer patients.
Activities: Coordinates program for State of California, finances special research projects at University of California, Stanford, and other Bay Area institutions. Annual cancer conference for physicians and scientists.
Publication: American Cancer Society Volunteer.

American Chemical Society, California Section, Room 322, 2082 Center St., Berkeley 4.
Chairman: Harry S. Mosher, Department of Chemistry, Stanford University. Secretary: Richard M. Lemmon, 1645 Franklin, Berkeley 2.
Objectives: To promote the science of chemistry in all its branches.
Activities: Technical meetings, held monthly.
Members: 1,700. Annual dues: $2.00.
Publication: The Vortex, 10 times a year.

American Congress on Surveying and Mapping, Northern California Section, % H. A. Waterfall, 149 - 21st Ave., San Francisco.
Chairman: C. A. Wooldridge, Jr., P. O. Box 1012, Carmel. Secretary: H. A. Waterfall.
Objectives: To advance the sciences of surveying and mapping in their several branches, in furtherance of the public welfare and in the interests of both those who use maps and surveys and those who make them, and to establish a central source of reference and union for its members; to contribute to public education in the use of surveys and maps and to encourage the prosecution of basic surveying and mapping programs.
Activities: Technical meetings. Section sponsors University of California extension course.
Members: 200. Annual dues: $1.00.

American Institute of Architects, Northern California Chapter, 26 O'Farrell St., San Francisco.
President: Wendell R. Spackman, 347 Clay St., San Francisco. Secretary: May B. Hipshman.
Objectives: To combine the efforts of the architects of the United States so as to promote the aesthetic, scientific, and practical efficiency of the profession; to advance the standards of architectural education, training, and practice; to coordinate the profession of architecture and the building industry to insure the advancement of living standards; to make the profession of ever-increasing service to society.
Activities: Technical meetings, held monthly. Revision of building codes; participation in civic affairs concerned with city planning; dissemination of information regarding building products and methods.
Members: 250. Annual dues: $40.00.
Publication: Northern California AIA Bulletin, monthly.

American Institute of Chemical Engineers, Northern California Section, % John E. Walkey, California Research Corporation, P. O. Box 1627, Richmond.
Chairman: Thomas E. Drisko, Jr., The Dow Chemical Co., P. O. Box 351, Pittsburg. Secretary: John E. Walkey.
Objectives: The advancement of the profession of chemical engineering and maintenance of professional standards and contacts among members.
Activities: Technical meetings, held monthly. Occasional tours of facilities, such as university laboratories and oil refineries. Annual award given to an outstanding chemical engineering senior in local student chapters. Close cooperation maintained with student chapters at the University of California and Stanford University.
Members: 438. Annual dues: $2.50.
Publication: Meetings and activities covered in San Francisco Engineer.

American Institute of Electrical Engineers, San Francisco Section, 206 Sansome St., San Francisco.
Chairman: Whitman Ridgway, Russ Building, San Francisco. Secretary: Charles F. Dalziel, University of California, Berkeley 4.
Objectives: The advancement of the theory and practice of electrical engineering and of the allied arts and sciences; the maintenance of a high professional standing among its members and the development of the individual engineer.
Activities: Technical and general meetings, held monthly.
Members: 1,500. Annual dues: Maximum of $2.00.
Publication: Meetings and activities covered in San Francisco Engineer.

American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, San Francisco Section, % E. M. Barker, 315 Montgomery St., San Francisco.
Chairman: Malcolm B. Gould, 1200 Mills Tower, San Francisco. Secretary: E. M. Barker.
Objectives: To promote the arts and sciences connected with economic production of the useful minerals and metals and the welfare of those employed in these industries.
Activities: Technical meetings, held monthly.
Members: 850. Annual dues: $5.00 for Bay Area members; $2.00, out-of-town members.

10
American Meteorological Society, Northern California Branch, P. O. Box 247, San Francisco International Airport.
Chairman: Francis J. Parsons, Jr., Pacific Gas and Electric Co., 245 Market St., San Francisco. Secretary: Fowler S. Duckworth, Department of Chemistry, Stanford University.
Objectives: All phases of the science of meteorology.
Activities: Monthly meetings. Annual field trip.
Members: 70. Annual dues: $1.00.
Publication: Monthly bulletin.

11
American Pharmaceutical Association, Northern California Branch, 430 Post St., San Francisco.
President: Felix A. Conte, 1328 Parrott Drive, San Mateo. Secretary: Marie Bukovsky Kuck, 940 San Jose Ave., San Francisco.
Objectives: Professional and scientific aspects of modern medical sciences as they relate to pharmacy practice.
Activities: Minimum of nine meetings held annually. The Branch sponsors an annual banquet honoring the graduating class of the University of California School of Pharmacy.
Members: 313. Annual dues: $2.00.
Publication: Bulletin of the Northern California Branch of the American Pharmaceutical Association, monthly.

12
American Phytopathological Society, Pacific Division, % Roy A. Young, Department of Botany, Oregon State College, Corvallis.
President: George A. Zentmyer, University of California, Riverside. Secretary: Roy A. Young.
Objectives: The study and control of plant diseases.
Activities: Annual meeting, usually held in conjunction with Pacific Division, AAAS.
Members: 260. Annual dues: $ .50.

13
American Rocket Society, Inc., Northern California Section, % Kenneth G. Heller, Detroit Controls Corporation, 1650 Broadway, Redwood City.
Chairman: M. A. Pino, California Research Corporation, Richmond. Secretary: Kenneth G. Heller.
Objectives: Rocketry, jet propulsion and astronautics.
Activities: Bimonthly technical meetings, open to public.
Members: 60.

14
American Society of Agricultural Engineers, Pacific Coast Section, 330 Hilgard Hall, University of California, Berkeley.
Chairman: K. R. Frost, University of Arizona, Tucson. Secretary: Walter W. Weir.
Objectives: To promote the science and art of engineering in agriculture.
Activities: Annual technical meeting.
Members: 260.

15
American Society of Animal Production, Western Section.
Chairman: F. F. McKenzie, Oregon State College, Corvallis. Secretary: J. F. Kidwell, University of Nevada, Reno. Bay Area Representative: Hubert Heitman, Jr., Department of Animal Husbandry, University of California, Davis.
Objectives: Teaching and research in the field of animal and dairy production.
Activities: Annual meeting.
Members: 150.

16
American Society of Civil Engineers, San Francisco Section, % Robert M. Kennedy, 604 Mission St., San Francisco 5.
Chairman: Howard C. Wood, Oakland Bay Bridge Toll Plaza. Secretary: Robert M. Kennedy.
Objectives: Advancement of engineering knowledge and practice, cultivation of friendly relations with all engineers, maintenance of high professional standards, and cooperation with other engineering societies with a view to promoting the general welfare of the American Society of Civil Engineers and the engineering profession.
Activities: Technical meetings. Jr. Forum meetings. Field trips.
Members: 1,200. Annual dues: $5.00.
Publication: The Civil Engineer.

17
American Society of Heating and Air Conditioning Engineers, Golden Gate Chapter, San Francisco Engineers Club, San Francisco.
Chairman: Don McLeod, % Edward Hill, Jr., 166 Geary St., San Francisco. Secretary: Herb Duncan, Natural Gas Equipment, Inc., 938 N. Linden Ave., South San Francisco.
Objectives: To advance the arts of heating, ventilating, cooling, and air conditioning, and the allied arts and sciences, for the benefit of the general public.
Activities: Technical meetings, held monthly.
Members: 185. Annual dues: $6.00.
Publication: Fog Dispenser, monthly.

18
American Society of Mechanical Engineers, San Francisco Section, % J. B. Link, California Steel Products Division of Adsco Industries, Inc., Barrett and A Sts., Richmond.
Chairman: F. W. Beichley, % Westinghouse Electric Corp., 410 Bush St., San Francisco 8. Secretary: J. B. Link.
Objectives: Mechanical engineering and the allied arts and sciences.
Activities: Monthly meetings. Technical programs at intervals throughout the year.
Members: 1,150. Annual dues: $1.00.
Publication: Meetings and activities covered in San Francisco Engineer.

19
American Society of Refrigerating Engineers, San Francisco Chapter, % Allen Ballard, R. B. Holland Co., 461 Market St., San Francisco.
Chairman: Thomas Davenport, % Pacific Scientific Co., 25 Stillman St., San Francisco 7. Secretary: Allen Ballard.
Objectives: To further art and science of industrial and commercial refrigeration and air conditioning.
Activities: Technical meetings, held monthly. Field trips to study actual refrigeration equipment installations.
Members: 180.

20
American Society of Safety Engineers, San Francisco Chapter, % John H. Brooke, 245 Turk St., San Francisco.
Chairman: Gilbert H. Rhodes, 2151 Berkeley Way, Berkeley. Secretary: John H. Brooke.
Objectives: To promote the arts and sciences connected with engineering and its relation to safety to life and limb and the protection of property.
Activities: Technical meetings, held monthly.
Members: 168. Annual dues: $13.50.
Publication: Safety Circle.

21
American Society for Testing Materials, Northern California District, % H. P. Hoopes, Pabco Products, Inc., Emeryville.
Chairman: H. P. Hoopes. Secretary: R. W. Harrington, Clay Brick and Tile Association, 55 New Montgomery St., San Francisco.
Objectives: Promotion of knowledge of materials of engineering; standardization of specifications and methods of testing.
Activities: Two annual meetings of general technical information in conjunction with interested technical societies.
Members: 230.

22
American Society of Tool Engineers, Golden Gate Chapter, % T. N. Lindquist, 6619 Outlook Ave., Oakland.
Chairman: T. N. Lindquist. Secretary: Philip R. Freeman, 1494 67th St., Emeryville.
Objectives: Advancement of science of tool engineering.
Activities: Technical meetings, held monthly.
Members: 387. Annual dues: $10.00.
Publication: Monthly bulletin.

23
American Statistical Association, San Francisco Chapter, % Phillis Beattie, U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, Room 802, 630 Sansome St., San Francisco.
President: Winton Pettibone, Economics Department, Standard Oil Company of California, San Francisco. Secretary: Phillis Beattie.
Objectives: Statistics and statistical methods, both theoretical and applied.
Activities: Technical meetings, held monthly.
Members: 125. Annual dues: $1.50.

24
Arthritis and Rheumatism Foundation, Northern California Chapter, 417 Market St., San Francisco 5.
President: Harold W. Knowles. Secretary: Frances Baker, 1 Tilton Ave., San Mateo.
Objectives: Research and education in rheumatic diseases; development and enlargement of centers for treatment and rehabilitation; care for home-bound arthritics.
Activities: Monthly meetings.
Publication: Monthly medical bulletin.

25
Astronomical Society of the Pacific, 675 Eighteenth Ave., San Francisco.
President: Olin C. Wilson, Mt. Wilson and Palomar Observatories, Pasadena. Secretary: S. Einarsson, Department of Astronomy, University of California, Berkeley 4.
Objectives: To promote the science of astronomy and to spread astronomical information through its publications, popular lectures, excursions, and meetings.
Activities: Lectures, excursions, and meetings.
Members: 100. Annual dues: $6.50.
Publications: Publications, bimonthly. Leaflet, monthly.

26
Biometric Society, The, Western North American Region, % Elizabeth Vaughan, 2325 Seventh St., Bremerton, Wash.
Chairman: W. J. Dixon, School of Medicine, University of California, Los Angeles 24. Secretary: Elizabeth Vaughan.
Bay Region Member of Executive Committee: Elizabeth Scott, Statistical Laboratory, University of California, Berkeley 4.
Objectives: Mathematical and statistical aspects of biology.
Activities: Annual meeting.
Members: 94. Annual dues: $1.00.

27
California Academy of Medicine, % Hilliard J. Katz, 450 Sutter St., San Francisco.
Chairman: Howard L. Mawdsley, 23 Second St., San Mateo. Secretary: Hilliard J. Katz.
Objectives: Educational and social medical organization.
Activities: Three meetings per year.
Members: 531. Annual dues: $10.00.
Publication: History of the California Academy of Medicine; Proceedings of the California Academy of Medicine.

28
California Botanical Society, Department of Botany, University of California, Berkeley 4.
President: Lincoln Constance. Secretary: G. Thomas Robbins.
Objectives: Publication of botanical research, observation and history; dissemination of such knowledge through meetings and lectures.
Activities: Monthly lectures on botanical subjects, open to the public.
Members: 65. Annual dues: $4.00.
Publication: Madroño, quarterly.

29
California Medical Association (American Medical Association), 450 Sutter St., San Francisco.
Chairman: A. A. Morrison, Ventura. Secretary: Albert C. Daniels, 490 Post St., San Francisco.
Activities: Scientific meetings.
Members: 13,000. Annual dues: $40.
Publication: California Medicine.

30
California State Dental Association, 450 Sutter St., San Francisco.
President: William S. Smith. Secretary: Walter J. Healy.
Activities: Makes annual research grants to the dental college, University of California, and the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

31
California State Psychological Association, % Ben C. Finney, 190 Heather Lane, Palo Alto.
Chairman: Howard C. Gilhousen, Department of Psychology, University of California, Los Angeles. Secretary: Ben C. Finney.
Objectives: Scientific and professional organization of psychologists in California.
Activities: Annual meeting.
Members: 550. Annual dues: $5.00.

32
California State Veterinary Medical Association (affiliated association of American Veterinary Medical Association), % Charles S. Travers, 3004 - 16th St., San Francisco.
Chairman: A. M. McCapes, San Luis Obispo. Executive Secretary: Charles S. Travers.
Objectives: To advance the science and art of veterinary medicine, including their relationship to public health.
Members: 1,000.
Publication: The California Veterinarian.

33
East Bay Council on Surveying and Mapping, % Bruce Grant, 2127 Adeline St., Oakland 18.
Chairman: Harry Shatto, 664 Castro St., Hayward. Secretary: Bruce Grant.
Objectives: Control surveys and base mapping in Alameda and Contra Costa counties; encouragement of use of California Coordinate System.
Activities: General meetings, three times a year.
Members: 200.

34
Electrochemical Society, The, San Francisco Section, % H. F. Myers, Columbia-Geneva Steel Co., Russ Building, San Francisco.
Chairman: Charles Tobias, Department of Chemistry, University of California, Berkeley. Secretary: H. F. Myers.
Objectives: Advancement of the theory and practice of electrochemistry, electrometallurgy, electrothermics, and allied subjects.
Activities: Technical meetings, five per year.
Members: 48.

35
Entomological Society of America, Pacific Branch, Department of Entomology, University of California, Davis.
Chairman: John Steinweden, Los Angeles. Secretary: Leslie M. Smith, Department of Entomology, University of California, Davis.
Objectives: To promote the science of entomology in all its branches.
Activities: Annual meeting.
Members: 1,000.

36
Institute of the Aeronautical Sciences, San Francisco Section, Rt. 1, Box 61, Livermore.
Chairman: Cdr. E. A. Quarterman. Secretary: George Cooper, NACA, Moffett Field.
Objectives: The encouragement of aeronautical sciences.
Activities: Scientific meetings, held monthly.
Members: 270.

37
Institute of Radio Engineers, San Francisco Section, % Wilson Pritchett, Department of Electrical Engineering, University of California, Berkeley.
Chairman: B. M. Oliver, Hewlett Packard Co., Palo Alto. Secretary: Wilson Pritchett.
Objectives: To advance the theory and practice of radio and allied branches of engineering and its related arts and sciences.
Activities: Technical meetings, held monthly.
Members: 2,000.
Publication: The Grid, monthly.

38
Mathematical Association of America, % C. D. Olds, Department of Mathematics, San Jose State College, San Jose.
Chairman: C. C. Torrance, U. S. Naval Postgraduate School, Monterey. Secretary: C. D. Olds.
Objectives: Promotion of collegiate mathematics.
Activities: Annual meeting.
Members: 163.

39
Mycological Society of San Francisco, Horticultural Building, City College of San Francisco, Ocean and Phelan Aves., San Francisco.
Chairman: Edward E. Crowley, 2 Seal Rock Drive, San Francisco. Secretary: Esther Whited, 4331 - 17th St., San Francisco.
Objectives: Collection, identification, and study of higher fungi of the Pacific slope.
Activities: Technical meetings, held monthly. Scheduled field forays.
Members: 45. Annual dues: $1.00.
Publication: Monthly bulletin.

40
National Association of Corrosion Engineers, San Francisco Bay Area Section, % W. P. Simmons, Alloy Steel Products Co., Inc., 24 California St., San Francisco.
Chairman: H. H. Scott, Shell Oil Co., Martinez Refinery, Martinez. Secretary: W. P. Simmons.
Objectives: Corrosion research and control.
Activities: Monthly meetings.
Members: 150.

41
National Audubon Society, Pacific Coast office, 2426 Bancroft Way, Berkeley.
Pacific Coast representative: William N. Goodall.
Objectives: Conservation of the nation's natural resources, including wild life, plants, soil, and water, and the education of the country's citizens in conservation needs and techniques.
Activities: Affiliate societies meet monthly; field trips. Society supports sanctuaries and community conservation activities. Maintains library of reference material and exhibits.
Members: 1,000. Annual dues: $5.00.
Publications: The Gull and The Quail, monthly.

42
Northern California Public Health Association, 15000 Foothill Blvd., San Leandro.
Chairman: Gene Howell, San Mateo County Health Department, 225 - 37th Ave., San Mateo. Secretary: Constance Cavender.
Activities: Technical and informational meetings.
Members: 800. Annual dues: $1.00.

43
Northern California Society of Hospital Pharmacists, University of California Hospital, 3rd Ave. and Parnassus, San Francisco.
President: Alphonse A. Seubert, 224 Northwood Drive, South San Francisco. Secretary: Marie Bukovsky Kuck, 940 San Jose Ave., San Francisco.
Objectives: Establishment of minimum standards of pharmaceutical service in hospitals in order to provide benefits and protection for the public health. Development of new and better pharmaceutical techniques and service.
Activities: Technical meetings, held monthly.
Members: 185. Annual dues: $3.00.
Publication: Hospital Pharmacy News.

44
Paleontological Society, The, Pacific Coast Section, % V. S. Mallory, University of Washington, Seattle.
Chairman: O. L. Bandy, University of Southern California, Los Angeles. Secretary: V. S. Mallory.
Objectives: Study of fossil organisms.
Activities: Annual meeting held in conjunction with Cordilleran Section of the Geological Society of America.
Members: 85.

45
San Francisco Engineering Council, 209 Federal Office Building, San Francisco 2.
Chairman: J. A. Samaniego, Shell Development Co., Emeryville. Secretary: E. H. Thouren.
Objectives: To consider and act upon matters of common interest to the engineers and scientists represented in the Council.
Member organizations: American Institute of Chemical Engineers, Northern California Section; American Institute of Electrical Engineers, San Francisco Section; American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, San Francisco Section; American Society of Civil Engineers, San Francisco Section; American Society of Mechanical Engineers, San Francisco Section; Institute of Radio Engineers, San Francisco Section; Society of American Military Engineers, San Francisco Post; Structural Engineers Association of Northern California; American Chemical Society, California Section.
Activities: In addition to its work in civic affairs and with other engineering groups, the Council has a very active program in "Career Counseling" for high school science students. The Council also participates actively in the annual "Engineers Week" held in the Bay Area.

San Francisco Heart Association, 604 Mission St., San Francisco.
President: Hilliard J. Katz. Secretary: Vernon C. Harp., Jr. Executive Director: Gladys T. Daniloff.
Objectives: Research, education, and community service.
Activities: Annual symposium and annual meeting. Active committees on cardiac problems.
Members: 500.
Publications: New Hope for Hearts, quarterly; occasional pamphlets; Prevention of Rheumatic Fever and Bacterial Endocarditis through Control of Streptococcal Infections.

47
San Francisco Medical Society, 250 Masonic Ave., San Francisco.
Chairman: H. C. Moffitt, Jr. Secretary: R. S. Combs.
Objectives: Promotion and development of the science and art of medicine; conservation and protection of the public health.

Members: 1,800. Annual dues: $50.
Publications: Monthly Bulletin; pamphlets.

48
San Francisco Tuberculosis Association, 259 Geary St., San Francisco.
Chairman: Ralph N. Larson, 604 Mission St., San Francisco. Secretary: William C. Voorsanger, 490 Post St., San Francisco.
Objectives: Prevention, control, and eradication of tuberculosis by means of education, research, carefinding, and rehabilitation.
Activities: Working committee meetings held monthly.
Publication: It's Vital.

49
Seismological Society of America, National Headquarters, Old Mint Building, Fifth and Mission Sts., San Francisco 3.
President: L. S. Jacobsen, Stanford University. Secretary: Perry Byerly, Bacon Hall, University of California, Berkeley 4.
Objectives: To promote the study of earthquakes.
Activities: Annual meeting.
Members: 699. Annual dues: $5.00.
Publication: Bulletin of the Seismological Society of America, quarterly.

50
Society of American Bacteriologists, Northern California Branch, % H. A. Barker, Department of Plant Biochemistry, University of California, Berkeley.
Chairman: H. A. Barker. Secretary: H. J. Phaff, Department of Food Technology, University of California, Davis.
Objectives: Medical and general microbiology.
Activities: Technical meetings, held quarterly.
Members: 120. Annual dues: $1.00.

51
Society of American Foresters, Bay Area Chapter, 243 Forestry Building, Berkeley 4.
Chairman: Rudolf F. Grah, School of Forestry, University of California, Berkeley 4. Secretary: Robert Callahan, California Forest and Range Experiment Station, Forestry Building, University of California, Berkeley 4.
Objectives: To represent, advance, and protect the interests and standards of the profession of forestry; to provide a medium for exchange of professional thought; and to promote the science, practice, and standards of forestry in America.
Activities: Monthly meetings.
Members: 150.

52
Society of American Military Engineers, San Francisco Post, % H. T. Anderson, District Public Works Office, San Bruno.
President: J. G. Wright, 233 Sansome St., San Francisco. Secretary: H. T. Anderson.
Objectives: Cooperation between civil and military in engineering profession.
Activities: Monthly meetings. At least one field inspection trip is made each year to an important military, industrial, or engineering construction site.
Members: 600. Annual dues: $1.50.

53
Society of Automotive Engineers, Northern California Section, % W. E. Winterbourne, Oliver Tire and Rubber Co., Oakland.
Chairman: Warren G. Brown, Caterpillar Tractor Co., San Leandro. Secretary: W. E. Winterbourne.
Objectives: To promote arts, sciences, standards, and engineering practices connected with automotive equipment.
Activities: Technical meetings, held monthly.
Members: 470.

54
Society of Naval Architects and Marine Engineers, Northern California Section, % Carl R. Meurk, Todd Shipyards Corp., Alameda.
Chairman: William P. Hincks, Moore Dry Dock Company, Oakland 4. Secretary: Carl R. Meurk.
Objectives: Naval architecture, marine engineering, and allied engineering subjects.
Activities: Six technical meetings a year.
Members: 280.

55
Society of Systematic Zoology, Pacific Section, % Hopkins Marine Station, Pacific Grove.
Chairman: R. C. Stebbins, University of California, Berkeley 4. Secretary: Donald P. Abbott, Hopkins Marine Station, Pacific Grove.
Objectives: Taxonomy, systematics, distribution, comparative zoology, paleontology, evolution of animals.
Activities: Annual meeting held in conjunction with Pacific Division of AAAS.
Members: 200.

56
Special Libraries Association, San Francisco Bay Region Chapter, % Isabella Nestor, Anglo California National Bank, 1 Sansome St., San Francisco 20.
Chairman: Ruth Wingfield, 4560 Horton St., Emeryville 8. Secretary: Isabella Nestor.
Objectives: Collection, organization, preservation, and dissemination of recorded knowledge.
Activities: Monthly meetings.
Members: 175.
Publication: San Francisco Bay Region Chapter Bulletin Special Libraries Association.

57
Structural Engineers Association of Northern California, Room 320, 417 Market St., San Francisco 5.
President: Walter L. Dickey, Bechtel Corporation, San Francisco. Secretary: Harry B. Corlett.
Objectives: To promote professional relations among structural engineers and the highest standards of structural engineering.
Activities: Monthly meetings; annual state convention. Working committees in earthquake research and other structural engineering problems.
Members: 320. Annual dues: $25.
Publication: Structural Engineers News, monthly.

58
Western Society of Soil Science.
President: B. A. Krantz, U. S. Department of Agriculture, Reclamation Building, Billings, Montana. Vice-President: D. G. Aldrich, Jr., Department of Soils and Plant Nutrition, University of California, Davis.
Objectives: Soil physics, soil chemistry, soil fertility, management problems as related to crop production.
Activities: Annual meeting.
Members: 500. Annual dues: $ .50.

59
Wildlife Society, California Section, % Richard Taber, School of Forestry, University of California, Berkeley.
Chairman: Walter Howard, University of California, Davis. Secretary: Richard Taber.
Objectives: The development of all types of wildlife management along sound biological lines; the establishment of professional solidarity among conservation biologists.
Activities: Annual meeting.
Members: 100. Annual dues: $1.00.
Publication: Newsletter, biennial.

The following societies maintain a listing of their San Francisco Bay Area membership at the headquarters of the International Science Foundation, San Francisco International Science Center, Golden Gate Park:

UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES

MILLS COLLEGE

Oakland

President: LYNN T. WHITE, jr.
Dean of the Faculty and Provost: MARY WOODS BENNETT.

100
Department of Biological Sciences: Howard E. McMinn, Chairman.

101
Department of Chemistry: Leona E. Young.

102
Department of Mathematics and Physics: Andrew R. Noble.

SAN FRANCISCO STATE COLLEGE

1600 Holloway Ave., San Francisco 27

President: J. PAUL LEONARD.
Executive Dean: JOHN H. BUTLER.

Division of Natural Science: Stanley W. Morse, Chairman.

Biological Science (Bacteriology, Botany, Zoology, General Biology).
Current research projects: Fishery biology at Lake Merced; life history, cytology, and taxonomy of Opalina; experimental morphology of vascular plants; analysis of high-altitude ecology; zoogeograph of Himalaya; physiological plant ecology; fog precipitation in coastal transition zone; comparison of the anatomy of species of Ceratinium; anatomical studies on marine iguanas; reproduction in Galapagos finches; effect of aureomycin on cardiac action; tetrahydropyrimidines as chemotherapeutic agents.
Laboratory facilities: Botany, general zoology, bacteriology, vertebrate zoology and anatomy, and physiology laboratories; general collection of plants and animals of Bay Region.

104
Physical Science (Chemistry, Geology, Physics).
Current research projects: Special problems in analytical chemistry; work on microflagellates as related to oil deposits.
Laboratory facilities: 4 laboratories for chemistry, 2 for physics, 1 for geology; rock, mineral, and fossil collections.

SAN JOSE STATE COLLEGE

San Jose 14

President: JOHN T. WAHLQUIST.
Executive Dean: C. GRANT BURTON.

Engineering and Mathematics Division: Ralph J. Smith, Chairman.

105
Aeronautics Department: Thomas E. Leonard, Head.
Curricula designed to prepare graduate for entry into wide range of positions in aeronautics industry; Civil Aeronautics Administration—approved mechanics school operated as integral part of curriculum.
Laboratory facilities: CAA-approved laboratory facilities.

106
Engineering Department: Ralph J. Smith, Head.
Specialization in electronics, construction, production, food processing.

107
Mathematics Department: William H. Myers, Head.
Current research: Classified project for U. S. government.

Natural Science Division: Carl G. Duncan, Chairman.
Curricula designed to prepare graduate in subject-matter fields of bacteriology, botany, chemistry, entomology, geology, physics, and zoology; in certain occupational areas as conservation, sanitation, medical and psychiatric technology, and occupational therapy.

108
Biological Science Department: G. A. McCallum, Head.

109
Chemistry Department: Benjamin E. Naylor, Head.

110
Physical Science Department: Benjamin E. Naylor, Head.

STANFORD UNIVERSITY
Stanford

President: J. E. WALLACE STERLING.
Provost: FREDERICK E. TERMAN.

SCHOOL OF ENGINEERING: Frederick E. Terman, Dean.

111
Division of Aeronautical Engineering: Lydik S. Jacobsen, Chairman.
Current research projects: Theoretical investigations on boundary layer problems.
Laboratory and library facilities: Aerodynamic laboratory, with a 7.5 ft. wind tunnel (equipped with six-component balance, propeller dynamometer, special equipment for recording and reducing pressure distribution data, etc.) and a portable 1 ft. tunnel used for purposes of demonstration and calibration. Library contains reports of principal aeronautical research organizations and files of scientific journals and technical periodicals.

112
Department of Civil Engineering: Eugene S. Grant, Executive Head.
Current research projects: Relation between precipitation and topography; characteristics of the hydrograph of runoff from small areas; evaporation from reservoirs; effect of specimen size in yield strength of steel; coupled bending and torsional vibrations of beams; investigation of structural characteristics of shear walls.
Laboratory facilities: Laboratories include fluid mechanics laboratory, sanitary chemistry laboratory, soil mechanics, concrete testing, materials testing, and photoelastic laboratory; outdoor facilities include weather station and several instrumented stream basins for hydrologic studies.

Department of Electrical Engineering: Hugh H. Skilling, Head.
Laboratory facilities: Facilities for research include electrical machinery laboratory, high-voltage laboratory, illumination laboratory, electronics research laboratory, microwave laboratory (see Department of Physics), radio propagation laboratory, servomechanisms laboratory, digital and analog electronic computers.

114
Division of Engineering Mechanics

115
Department of Mechanical Engineering: Lydik S. Jacobsen, Head.
Current research projects: Heat transfer, aerodynamics, engineering mechanics, non-linear mechanics, gasdynamics, nuclear power reactors.
Laboratory and library facilities: Representative hydraulic, steam, internal combustion, refrigeration, air conditioning, and pneumatic machinery. Exhibits of typical reciprocating turbojet and rocket types of aircraft power plants. Research facilities include CFR engine test units, dynamometer facilities, supersonic flow system for gas dynamic investigations, air duct flow systems for heat and mass transfer studies, and supplies of compressed air, electricity, steam, and water utilities. Facilities for experimental investigations in fields of melting, heat-treatment, forming, and machining of metals. Departmental library.

FOOD RESEARCH INSTITUTE: Merrill K. Bennett, Director.
The Institute is a group of cooperating scholars engaged in basic research on the production, distribution, and consumption of food.
Current research projects: Management of agriculture and food in Germany; manioc as a food resource; interrelations between African agriculture and urbanization and industrial development; staple foods which bulk large in native diets in western tropical Africa.
Library facilities: Specializes in commodity periodicals, government documents, and pamphlet materials essential to study of world food problems in their economic aspects.

HUMANITIES AND SCIENCES

117
Department of Biological Sciences: Victor C. Twitty, Chairman.

Division of Marine Biology and Oceanography, Hopkins Marine Station: Lawrence R. Blinks, Director.
The Hopkins Marine Station is situated at Pacific Grove, on the south side of Monterey Bay. The area has complete control of the coast line and a sheltered landing place and harbor for boats.
Areas of research: Marine biology; bacteriology, botany, embryology, ecology, ichthyology, marine invertebrates, physiology.
Laboratory and library facilities: Alexander Agassiz and Jacques Loeb laboratories. Extensive library collections in marine biology, oceanography, and microbiology.
Special collections: Working collections of local plants and animals.

Division of Natural History, Natural History Museum: Ira L. Wiggins, Director.

Systematic Botany: Richard W. Holm, Curator of Herbarium.
Current research projects: Flora of the Sonoran Desert; flora of Arctic Alaska; cytotaxonomy of the Aesclepidadaceae; taxonomy of the genus Ferocactus; flora of the San Francisco Peninsula; cytotaxonomy of the genus Microseris; cytotaxonomy of the genus Plectritis.
Library facilities.
Special collections: Collections particularly strong in western North American material (Dudley Herbarium); good collections from other parts of U. S., Alaska, South America, and northwestern Mexico. Harvey Herbarium of European plants; Gautier Herbarium of plants of Mediterranean region and Asia Minor.

Entomology: Gordon F. Gerris, Curator.
Current research projects: Atlas of scale insects of North America; comparative anatomy of polychaetes and arthropods.
Library facilities.
Special collections: Collection of scale insects; collections of lice and other ectoparasites.

Ichthyology: George S. Myers, Curator.
Current research projects: Taxonomy and geographical distribution of various groups of fishes; ichthyology of Brazilian fishes; fish fauna of the Polar Basin.
Library facilities.
Special collections: Marine and fresh-water fishes of both eastern and western North America, the West Indies, Central America, Japan, eastern China, the Philippines, the Malay Peninsula, Hawaii, and Polynesia. Large bathyal collections from North Pacific.

Herpetology: George S. Myers, Curator.
Current research projects: Taxonomic and geographic distribution of various groups of reptiles.
Special collections: Extensive representation of amphibians and reptiles of the West and considerable material from southeastern Asia and tropical America.

Fisheries Investigations: Donald E. Wohlschlag, in charge.
Current research projects: Population dynamics of fishes in Searsville and Felt Lake reservoirs; fisheries resources in Western U. S.; fisheries resources in Arctic Alaska.

120
Department of Chemistry and Chemical Engineering: George S. Parks, Head.
Current research projects: The cancer problem; carbohydrates; detergents; chemistry of natural products; physical-organic chemistry; new methods in analytical chemistry; fundamental chemistry of interest to petroleum industry.

121
Department of Geography: Joseph E. Williams, Head.
Current research projects: China handbooks; investigation of feasibility of zoning for agriculture in certain portions of Santa Clara Valley.
Library facilities: Large map collection.

122
Department of Mathematics: M. M. Schiffer, Head.
Current research projects: Theory of cavitational flow; free boundaries; partial differential equations; Riemann surfaces; application of topology to analysis.

123
Department of Physics: L. I. Schiff, Head.
Current research projects: High-energy physics; nuclear physics; nuclear induction; paramagnetic resonance; microwave spectroscopy; microwaves, X-rays, theoretical physics.
Laboratory facilities: Cyclotron (2.8 Mev deuterons); linear electron accelerators (35 Mev and 630 Mev).

124
W. W. Hansen Laboratories of Physics:
Hansen Laboratories have three high-energy linear electron accelerators; test gear for microwave and nuclear research.

Microwave Laboratory: E. L. Ginzton, Director.
Current research projects: Basic studies concerning high-power microwave tubes; development of linear electron accelerator; microwave measurement techniques.

High-Energy Physics Laboratory: W. K. H. Panofsky, Director.
Current research projects: Various high-energy nuclear physics studies utilizing a 675-Mev linear electron accelerator.

125
Department of Sociology and Anthropology: Felix M. Keesing, Head.
Current research projects: Cultural change; value systems; population dynamics; social anthropology and industry; archaeology of the Stanford-Palo Alto area; anthropology and education.
Laboratory facilities: Anthropology laboratories (physical anthropology, archaelogy, ethnology, linguistics).
Special collections: Anthropology exhibits; musicology collection.

SCHOOL OF MEDICINE: Windsor C. Cutting, Dean.
The School of Medicine is located at 2398 Sacramento St., San Francisco.
The Lane Medical Library, located at Sacramento and Webster Streets, adjoining the medical school, contains about 127,000 volumes and is particularly rich in periodicals. More than 1,700 journals are received. Important special collections are the Barkan Library of Ophthalmology and Otolaryngology and the Medical History Collection.

Department of Medical Microbiology: Sidney Raffel, Head.
Current research projects: Experimental tuberculosis; nature of bacterial allergy; physiological and nutritional activities of bacteria; host parasite relationships in virus diseases; nature of spinal fluid proteins; nature of serologic reactions in various infectious and hypersensitive diseases.
Laboratory and library facilities: Laboratories available for investigations in all phases of bacteriology and infectious diseases; equipment available for research in bacterial physiology and morphology, in immunity, and in virus diseases. Departmental library receives 23 periodicals in the field and maintains file of current books in the field.

127
Department of Medicine: David A. Rytand, Head.
Current research projects: Diseases of the heart, lungs, kidneys.

128
Department of Pathology: Alvin J. Cox, Jr., Head.
Current research projects: Histochemistry and cytology, pathology of stomach, vascular system.
Special collections: Museum of pathological specimens.

129
Department of Pharmacology: Avram S. Goldstein, Head.
Current research projects: Cancer chemotherapy, anti-fertility drugs, mechanisms of hormone action, anti-rheumatic drugs.

130
Department of Physiology: J. M. Crismon, Head.
Current research projects: Studies on the reguluation of capillary blood flow; effects of freezing on tissue metabolism; effects of bacterial pyrogens on temperature regulation; molecular physiology—plasma substitutes, muscle, immunophysiology; mechanisms of directional flight in birds—magnetic field as a stimulus; blood gas transport and per-cutaneous measurement of oxygen, carbon dioxide partial pressures; mechanisms of cardian hypertrophy in response to high altitude.
Laboratory facilities: Specialized facilities for tissue respiration, studies on isolated heart muscle, electrical activity of the nervous system, observation and photography of the circulation in small vessels of living animals and in man; laboratory for physical chemistry of proteins.

Department of Preventive Medicine: Rodney R. Beard, Head.
Current research projects: Microbioassay of carcinogenic agents; diatomaceous earth pneumoconiosis; metabolism of amoebae; demographic and medical care utilization studies of San Francisco Peninsula.
Laboratory facilities: Dust exposure chambers.

Department of Radiology: Henry S. Kaplan, Head.
Current research projects: Radiation carcinogenesis; experimental induction of leukemia in mice and other aspects of radiobiology; super-voltage radiation therapy with a 6 Mev linear accelerator; diagnosis of congenital heart disease, with special emphasis on angiocardiography and aortography; diatomaceous earth pneumoconiosis.
Laboratory facilities: Colony of 10,000 mice of three inbred strains; small tissue culture laboratory. 6 Mev and 70 Mev linear accelerators (at Stanford).
Special collections: Diagnostic roentgenographic teaching file.

133
Department of Surgery: Victor Richards, Head.
Current research projects: Cardiovascular research; research in liver and gastro-intestinal function, in neurosurgery, urology, and orthopedics.

134
Dermatology Research Laboratories: Eugene M. Farber, Director.
Current research projects: Studies of blood flow in the skin in scleroderma; lupus erythematosus and psoriasis.
Laboratory facilities: Laboratories for skin pathology, experimental mycology, cutaneous physiology; constant temperature room; photography unit.
Special collections: Kodachrome collection of 5,000 slides.

135
SCHOOL OF MINERAL SCIENCES: Charles F. Park, Jr., Dean.
Areas of specialization: Geology, geophysics, geochemistry, mining engineering, metallurgy, petroleum engineering.
Current research projects: Internal oxidation, hardening of metals; measurement of energy required to break brittle solids; benefeciation of iron ore.
Laboratory and library facilities: Available for research in various branches of geology (paleontology, micropaleontology, mineralogy, petrology, geomorphology, economic geology, ground water, geochemistry, and geophysics); facilities also available for research in physical and process metallurgy and in mining and petroleum engineering. Photomicrography, X-ray radiography and X-ray diffraction, spectrograph, physical testing equipment. Mineral Sciences Library includes material relating to geology, paleontology, mineralogy, geography, mining, and metallurgy; exceptionally complete files of journals, transactions of scientific societies, and state government reports in these fields.
Special collections: Conchological museum; special collections in micropaleontology, paleontology, metallic ores, mineralogy.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

President: ROBERT G. SPROUL.
Chancellor: CLARK KERR.

BERKELEY CAMPUS

COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE: Knowles A. Ryerson, Dean.

136
Department of Agricultural Economics: Raymond G. Bressler, Chairman.

137
Department of Entomology and Parasitology: E. Gorton Linsley, Chairman.
Current research projects: Agricultural entomology, forest entomology, insect ecology, insect morphology and physiology, insect toxicology, insect vectors of plant diseases, parasitology, systematic entomology and acarology.
Laboratory and library facilities: Twelve research laboratories; insectary and greenhouse facilities. Library has over 5,500 volumes and collection of approximately 15,000 pamphlets; receives approximately 115 current serials on general entomology, special groups of insects, and economic entomology.
Special collections: 1,500,000-specimen insect collections of California Insect Survey. Survey has as objectives to develop information on nature and extent of insect fauna of the state and to assemble data on ranges, distributions, and ecologies of insect species.

138
Department of Genetics: Roy E. Clausen, Chairman.
Current research projects: Cytogenetic studies in the following genera of plants: nicotiana, hycopersicon, hilium; genetic studies of drosophila and rats.
Laboratory and library facilities: Three greenhouses with associated headhouse facilities; quarters for small animals. Research laboratories equipped for cytogenetic work with some facilities for biochemical genetics. Collection of seed stocks of plants and special stocks of organisms listed above. Departmental library.

139
Department of Landscape Architecture: H. L. Vaughan, Chairman.
Current research projects: Measurement of growth rates, plant materials used in landscape design in central California; effects of human erosion on the landscape; effects of changes in character and habit of growth of plants under cultivation versus natural field conditions.
Laboratory and library facilities: Greenhouse; model shop. Departmental library.

140 Department of Plant Biochemistry: P. K. Stumpf, Chairman.
Current research projects: Metabolism of closbridia; erythitol degradation; anthosyanine biogenesis; fatty acid oxidation in plants; plant respiration; polysaccharide biosynthesis in plants.
Laboratory facilities: Facilities for enzyme chemistry and related problems; cold rooms; constant temperature rooms; chromatography rooms.

141
Department of Plant Pathology: James B. Kendrick, Chairman.
Current research projects: Diseases of field crops, vegetable crops, ornamental, and nursery crops; nature of viruses and mycological studies.
Laboratory and library facilities: Facilities for biological research, including electron microscope. Departmental library.

142
Department of Soils and Plant Nutrition: Daniel G. Aldrich, Jr., Chairman.
Current research projects: Photosynthesis; micronutrient essentiality; mechanism of nutrient absorption by plants; plant nutrient availability on soils; thermodynamics of soil chemicals and soil-water systems; physical studies of soil structure; mineralogical composition of soils and clays.
Library: Departmental library of books, journals, and reprints of scientific publications in soil chemistry, physics, microbiology, morphology, biochemistry, plant physiology, botany, horticulture, agronomy.
Special collections: Pedolarium, a collection of soil monoliths representing typical soil profiles found in California.

Giannini Foundation of Agricultural Economics: R. G. Bressler, Jr., Director.
Current research projects: Studies in farm management, production costs, and efficiency; land economics, resource development, and conservation; marketing cost and efficiency, market structure and control, and foreign trade; agricultural cooperation and credit; agricultural prices, demand, and consumption; agricultural labor and population; agricultural policy and programs.
Library: 8,000 volumes in agricultural economics; 1,846 periodicals.

Kearney Foundation of Soil Science: P. R. Stout, Director.
Current research: Fundamental research in soil science.

SCHOOL OF FORESTRY: Frederick S. Baker, Dean.

145
Department of Forestry: Henry J. Vaux, Chairman.
Current research projects: Problems in silviculture, forest economics, logging engineering, photogrammetry, effects of forest upon water and erosion.
Laboratory facilities: Workrooms for dendrology and wood technology; specialized laboratories with equipment for measuring strength and properties of wood; fireproof room for study of behavior of small-scale forest fires; plant physiology laboratories; greenhouses; nursery areas; 160-acre Strawberry Canyon with 40-year-old forest plantations. Besides laboratory facilities in Berkeley, School has two forest properties—one eight miles from Quincy and the other on the American River drainage near Georgetown.
Library: Approximately 12,000 volumes and over 880 current serials on dendrology, silviculture, wood identification, conservation of forest resources, forest products research, and range management; approximately 15,000 pamphlets and over 2,000 maps pertaining to same fields.
Special collection: Woods of the world.

146
Range Management: Frederick S. Baker, Chairman of the Committee in charge.
Facilities: Greenhouse; herbarium; two range experiment stations, one stocked with sheep in coast range near Hopland and one stocked with cattle in the Sierra foothills near Madera.

Forest Products Laboratory (located at Engineering Field Station in Richmond): Fred E. Dickinson, Director.
Current research projects: Projects dealing with wood strength, texture, and mechanical properties; problems of seasoning and finishing woods; projects dealing with waxes, resins, tannins, and allied products within the wood structure, as well as the cellulose and lignins of the wood itself.
Laboratory facilities: Small sawmill, wood-working machinery, dry kilns.

COLLEGE OF CHEMISTRY: Kenneth S. Pitzer, Dean.

Department of Chemistry and Chemical Engineering: Kenneth S. Pitzer, Chairman. J. Cason, acting 1955-56.
Laboratory and library facilities: Teaching laboratories, plus research laboratories. Chemistry Library has over 5,500 volumes and receives approximately 150 current serials in the fields of chemistry and chemical engineering. Collection contains U. S. chemical patents published since January, 1955 on microcards.

149
Division of Chemical Engineering: Charles R. Wilke, Chairman.
Current research projects: Chemical engineering unit operations; industrial and chemical processes.

COLLEGE OF ENGINEERING: Morrough P. O'Brien, Dean.

Division of Civil Engineering and Irrigation: Harmer E. Davis, Chairman.
Laboratory facilities: Engineering Materials Laboratory has facilities for research in materials of construction and contains testing machines and measuring apparatus for study of these materials; control rooms; experimental plant for manufacture of cements, limes, and lightweight aggregates; shops for manufacture of testing apparatus and precision instruments. Structures Laboratory contains apparatus for studying behavior under load of structures and structural models, large universal precision testing machine with capacity of four million pounds; facilities for studying the action of structures subjected to dynamic loads, including large shaking table for developing simulated earthquakes and dynamic recording equipment such as oscilloscopes, oscillographs, and strain gauge amplifiers. Soils and Sub-grades Laboratory includes unconfined and triaxial compression apparatus and equipment for determining direct shear, consolidation, and permeability. Asphaltic-Mix and Flexible Pavement Laboratory equipped with devices for testing properties of asphalts and aggregates and special stabilometers for investigation of pavement-mix stability. Laboratory for Basic Research in Granular Materials has facilities for analyzing clays and other fine-grain materials and equipment for investigating ion complexes associated with soil particles and studying base-exchange phenomena.

Sanitary Engineering Laboratory (located at Engineering Field Station, 1301 South 46th St., Richmond): Harold B. Gotaas, Director.
Current research projects: Air pollution studies; sewage percolation in soil studies; studies of fate of detergents in sewage treatment plants; algae symbiosis; radioactive waste disposal studies; ground water studies; sludge digestion studies; aspects of activated sludge studies; literature study of water quality.
Laboratory facilities: Equipment for study of physical, chemical, radiochemical, microbial, and bacteriological factors pertinent to above problems. Facilities available for special study of hydraulic and hydrological factors involved in design of sanitary engineering works.

152
Division of Electrical Engineering: Paul L. Morton, Chairman.
Current research projects: Basic studies of microwave tubes, microwave antennas, ferrites, transistors and transistor circuits, circuit synthesis, electronic digital computers and components; servo-mechanisms and feedback control systems; sampled-data control systems.
Laboratory facilities: Power machinery, control, industrial electronics (including special equipment to demonstrate trigger circuits, inverters, timing and computing circuits), illumination and photometry, communications, switching circuits, computers, and electronics research laboratories.

Division of Engineering Design: Clyne F. Garland, Chairman.
Laboratory facilities: Analog computers, dynamics, stress measurements, and acoustics laboratories. Latter exists in two sections, one on campus and the other at the Engineering Field Station, which provides space for outdoor noise studies and a concrete chamber for study of noise-insulating qualities of samples of room partitions, ceilings, and floors.

154
Division of Mechanical Engineering: Everett D. Howe, Chairman.
Laboratory facilities: Facilities available in engineering production (including special equipment for research in metal cutting and forming), measuring instruments, automatic control equipment, fuels and lubricating oils, heat-power engines and their auxiliaries, aerodynamics (including the world's largest supersonic, high-altitude tunnel and a low-density supersonic-hypersonic wind tunnel), automotive mechanisms, photometry and illumination, hydraulics, acoustics, and ship-model testing. At the Engineering Field Station in Richmond, facilities have been developed for hydraulic studies of open-channel flows with or without sediment transport in flumes or models, surface waves including beach and shore-line phenomena, river and harbor models, tidal flow, ship model tow-tank investigations with or without waves, current meter calibrations, pump testing and research.

155
Division of Mineral Technology: Earl R. Parker, Chairman.
Current research projects: Factors affecting the strength of metals; talc minerals; cyclic stress; metallic ceramic bond; plastic properties; magnesium deformation; bonding forces in alloys; silicone and germanium refractories; intergranular fracturing; electrode coatings research; gaseous species above high melting solids; metals deformation; slag metal reactions; mineral analysis research; thermodynamic data of alloys; welding research; heat capacity of alloys; multi-phase flow.
Laboratory facilities: Ceramics laboratory, including special vacuum furnaces for preparation of nonoxide compounds and measurement of their vapor pressures; physical metallurgy laboratories, including complete laboratory for quantitative spectrographic chemical analysis, complete X-ray diffraction laboratory. Mining laboratories comprise the Lawson Adit (a small mine to conduct mine surveying, mine ventilation, rock drilling, and mine opening support under full-scale conditions), compressed air and rock drill laboratory, mine ventilation and dust control laboratories, a new laboratory for research work on radioactive techniques, and the infrared analysis laboratory. Laboratory has been set up to study rock deformation in the crust of the earth by means of scale models, deformed in a manner analogous to actual deformotions in nature. In the field of petroleum engineering, three groups of laboratories are available: physical properties laboratories, containing complete facilities for testing and analysis of crude petroleum and natural gas and its products; development laboratories, with facilities for studying properties of formation core samples and their contained fluids; petroleum production and reservoir engineering laboratories, where facilities are available for measuring properties of crude oil-natural gas mixtures and for studying their behavior under reservoir conditions and also for studying problems involved in handling the produced oil and gas at the surface. The laboratories also contain a high voltage electric dehydrator of the latest design.

Special collections: The Division maintains exhibits in the Hearst Mining Building which are open to the public. These include mineral displays with emphasis on uranium, fluorescent minerals, a diorama of underground stopping methods, model of the Broken Hill Silver-Lead-Zinc Lode, metallurgy display showing early examples of the art dating back to 600-700 B.C., ceramic display, mechanized model depicting the formation and recovery of crude oil, and an oil tool display.

157

Institute of Transportation and Traffic Engineering: Harmer E. Davis, Director.

Current research projects: Highway economics and administration; materials and structures; traffic engineering; driver behavior and accidents; vehicle equipment and operating factors; air transport; instrumentation.

Laboratory facilities: In addition to having access to Engineering Materials Laboratory on Berkeley campus, the Institute maintains equipment at the Engineering Field Station in Richmond for research related to transportation and traffic. This includes a new Soil Mechanics and Bituminous Materials Laboratory; special vehicles and trailers for studies of road-surface roughness, road-surface skid resistance, and motor-vehicle performance; a mobile unit to record strain, displacement, acceleration, and vibration; an outdoor lighting test area; the laboratories of the testing agency for the California Highway Patrol.

Library: Library contains one of the largest collections of highway transportation engineering reference material in the U. S.; the collection includes more than 11,000 monographs and more than 700 serial titles.

Institute of Engineering Research: H. A. Schade, Director.

The Institute is the component of the Department of Engineering responsible for the supervision, coordination, and encouragement of externally sponsored research in the Department. Research projects in practically all fields of engineering are undertaken and include the fields of electronics, surface wave mechanics, metallurgy and ceramics, heat transfer, stress analysis, and fluid flow, particularly at low pressures.

The Institute operates certain special research facilities and services, including a Standards Laboratory, a small engineering drafting service, a central computing service, and a publications service.

COLLEGE OF LETTERS AND SCIENCE: Alva R. Davis, Dean.

Department of Anthropology: D. G. Mandelbaum, Chairman.

Current research projects: Technological analysis of California Indian artifacts; ethnogolical studies; archaeology of Yap, Caroline Islands; analysis of development projects in India; glotto-chronology in Indic languages; anthropometry of aboriginal California Indians; social structure of Northwest coast tribes; ethnography of Spain; archaeology of California and Nevada; Peruvian culture; social anthropology of Maunaloa, Molokai.

Laboratory and library facilities: Facilities for study of research collections. Departmental library.

160

Museum of Anthropology: G. M. Foster, Director.

The Museum collections total over 350,000 catalogued items. The most important collections center in California, Egypt, Peru, Oceania, and the Classical Mediterranean region.

161

Department of Astronomy: Otto Struve, Chairman.

Current research projects: Celestial mechanics, theoretical astrophysics, statistical astronomy, stellar spectroscopy.

Laboratory and library facilities: Leuschner Observatory. Departmental library contains over 5,000 volumes and receives more than 370 current serials in the fields of astronomy and astrophysics.

Department of Bacteriology: Sanford S. Elberg, Chairman.

Current research projects: Immunization against brucellosis; effects of trace metals on infection; nature and mechanism of bacteriophage action; biosynthesis of amino acids and gene-enzyme relationships in intermediate bacterial metabolism; photosynthetic reactions by bacterial cells and preparation of active cell-free units; intermediate carbohydrate metabolism of bacterial cells; separation of various activities of viruses by selective action of nitrogen mustards; mechanisms of cellular immunity in tuberculosis; quantitative aspects of air-borne infection in tuberculosis of animals.

Laboratory facilities: Facilities for research in bacteriology and immunology, including ultracentrifuge, phase microscopy, safety hoods, electron microscope, chromatographic equipment, spectrophotometric apparatus, continuous growth apparatus.

Library: Extensive library facilities available through Biology Library.

Special collections: Complete culture collection of pathogenic and non-pathogenic bacterial, fungal, and viral types.

163

Department of Biochemistry: Hermann O. L. Fischer, Chairman.

164

Virus Laboratory: Wendell M. Stanley, Director.

Current research projects: Isolation and purification of plant, animal, and bacterial viruses and fundamental chemical and physical studies on these and related materials such as nucleic acids.

Laboratory facilities: Usual apparatus of biochemical research, supplemented with electron microscopes, high-speed centrifuges, spectrophotometers; special isolation area for work with the more dangerous human and animal viruses.

Library: Emil Fischer Reference Library, containing leading biochemical books and journals.

165
Department of Botany: Lincoln Constance, Chairman.

166
Department of Geography: John B. Leighly, Chairman.
Current research projects: Climatology of California; physical and cultural geography of the Caribbean Islands and Central America; land forms of the arid Southwest; subsistence geography of aboriginal North America; regional studies of Mexico, Ethiopia, Peru; history of geographic thought.
Library: Small working library of books and atlases; collection of wall and sheet maps.
Special collections: Airphotos, principally of the United States; collection of microfilm and photostatic copies of manuscripts in Spanish and Mexican archives.

167
Department of Geology: Francis J. Turner, Chairman.
Current research projects: Studies in crystal structure; field mapping in various parts of western U. S.; volcanic geology of Alaska; chemistry of ore genesis; sedimentary petrology; geochemistry of metamorphism; seismology; geomagnetism; thermodynamics of petrology; structural petrology of deformed rocks.
Laboratory facilities: Laboratories equipped for all branches of hard-rock geology; sedimentary laboratory; mining geological laboratory. Seismological Station—The University introduced seismology to the United States. Its stations at Berkeley and Mt. Hamilton are the oldest in the country, having been established in 1887. In addition to the central station on the Berkeley campus, the University maintains ten subsidiary stations in the northern part of California, in Oregon, and in Nevada. Records from these stations, together with records from the southern California group of stations, make possible detailed seismometric studies of local earthquakes. Results of research appear in the Bulletin of the Seismological Society of America which has its headquarters on the Berkeley campus.
Library: Over 4,400 volumes and 165 current serials on crystallography, geochemistry, geophysics, petroleum geology, and seismology, including standard American and European journals; 2,000 geologic maps and 1,800 pamphlets.
Special collections: Extensive research collections of minerals and rocks, with emphasis on California.

168
Department of Mathematics: Derrick H. Lehmer, Chairman.
Laboratory and library facilities: Punched card laboratory and digital computer. Mathematics-Statistics Library has approximately 3,000 volumes and receives over 170 serials on pure mathematics and mathematical statistics.

169
Statistical Laboratory: Jerzy Neyman, Director.
Current research projects: Tests of statistical hypotheses and methods of estimation; care of flyer-accident proneness; basic research in mathematical statistics and probability-Stochastic Processes; statistical studies of problems of public health; distribution of galaxies; statistical theory of epidemics.
Laboratory facilities: Three computing rooms equipped with electrical calculating machines, etc.

Department of Paleontology: Ruben A. Stirton, Chairman.
Current research projects: Early Cenozoic foraminifera; biological processes in living foraminifera; late Mesozoic and Cenozoic megafossils; circum Pacific Cenozoic floras; Mesozoic reptiles from South Africa, South America, and Western North America; Cenozoic mammals from North America, South America, and Australia.
Laboratory facilities: Museum preparation laboratories and layout space for specimens.
Library: Matthew Memorial Library of Paleontology contains over 7,000 volumes and receives 155 current serials on vertebrate and invertebrate paleontology; in addition, Library has over 6,300 pamphlets and 4,600 maps.

171
Museum of Paleontology: Ruben A. Stirton, Director.
The Museum maintains the largest fossil invertebrate collections on the Pacific Coast and, in the vertebrate classes, has the following collections available: amphibians from the Permian and Triassic formations of New Mexico and Arizona; reptiles from the marine and fresh-water Permian and Triassic formations in California, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico, Africa, and South America; stratigraphic collection of fossil mammals. Although fossil birds are rare, the Museum contains one of the largest and most representative collections known. Collection of plant fossils represents most extensive collection of Cenozoic plants in America except for that of the U. S. National Museum.

172
Department of Physics: A. C. Helmholz, Chairman.
Current research projects: High-energy nuclear physics; low-energy nuclear physics; radioactivity; solid state physics, cosmic rays; nuclear resonance; optical spectroscopy; mass spectroscopy; discharges in gases; molecular and atomic beams; low-temperature physics; theoretical physics.
Laboratory facilities: Radiation Laboratory and, in medical physics, Crocker Laboratory and Donner Laboratory.
Library: Over 6,100 volumes and approximately 90 current serials on physics, crystallography, and upper-atmosphere research. Library receives nuclear data cards containing information later incorporated in Nuclear Science Abstracts.

Radiation Laboratory: Ernest O. Lawrence, Director.
Current research projects: Development of high-energy particle accelerators; controlled thermonuclear research.
Laboratory facilities: 184-inch synchro-cyclotron; 60-inch cyclotron; 4 Mev Van de Graaff electrostatic generator; 40-ft. linear accelerator; betatron; synchrotron; bevatron; geiger and proportional counters; ionization and cloud chambers.
Library: Specialized technical library concentrating on fields of physics, chemistry, and engineering.

174
Crocker Laboratory: Joseph G. Hamilton, Director.

Donner Laboratory: John H. Lawrence, Director.
Current research projects: Applications of isotopes to biology and medicine; biologic effects of irradiation; radiation protection; photosynthesis; cancer, diseases of the blood, atherosclerosis, anemia.
Laboratory facilities: Multiple-part-in vivo counter; 10-channel scanner; electron microscope; electrophoresis equipment; infra-red spectrophotometer; several analytical ultracentrifuges; body volume chamber operating on gas-displacement principle.
Library: Specialized collection in biology, medicine, medical physics, and organic chemistry.

Department of Zoology: Richard M. Eakin, Chairman.
Current research projects: Physiology of intestinal protozoa; mouse mammary gland tumors; development of amphibian pituitary; chromosome structure, analysis of cell division; effects of light on reproduction in birds; population studies on Sierran fishes; analysis of inheritance in Drosophila; population studies of Kangaroo rats; biochemistry and physiology of mosaic eggs; instrument design; cell metabolism; population studies on arctic birds and small mammals; osmoregu-lation in brackish water invertebrates; function of parietal eye in lizards; cytochemistry of cell proteins; keratim formation; systematics of coelenterates; caste formation in termites.

Library: Extensive Biology Library. In addition to 115,000 volumes, 29,000 pamphlets, and 1,820 current serials, Library holds large portion of Charles A. Kofoid collection of books and pamphlets on biology and history of science and medicine; collection includes 5,600 volumes published between 1500 and 1800 and many editions of Pliny, Linne, and Buffon.

Cancer Research Genetics Laboratory: Kenneth B. DeOme, Director.

Current research projects: Preneoplastic state in mouse mammary cancer; tumor cell populations; tumor transplantation and culture; genetic and viral factors in mammary tumor incidence; spectrum of tumors in wild mice; endocrine factors in mouse mammary tumor-genesis.

Laboratory and library facilities: Facilities for sterile culture work, animal surgery, autopsy, biochemical studies, histopathology. Small cancer biology library.

Special collections: Five inbred mouse strains (A/He, C3H/He, BALB/c, C57BL, AKR); certain hybrids; wild mouse colony; comparative histopathology collection; mouse tumor bank.

178

Museum of Vertebrate Zoology: Alden H. Miller, Director.

The Museum is entirely devoted to research. It contains the largest collections of terrestrial vertebrates in western North America, approximately 300,000 specimens.

Current research projects: Projects in new systematics, evolution, ecology, anatomy and physiology—all related to natural populations of wild animals; work on mammals, birds, reptiles, and amphibians.

SCHOOL OF MEDICINE: John B. Lagen, Acting Dean.

Department of Anatomy: J. B. de C. M. Saunders, Chairman.

Current research projects: Nutritional and endocrine relationships in normal and disease processes; perfusion of isolated organs; anatomy of some nervous diseases; cancer research; consequences and treatment of paralysis or injury to limbs; causes of birth deformities; normal and diseased bone development.

Laboratory facilities: Facilities in histologic technique, photomicrography, diagnostic radiology, chemistry; access to animal quarters and biochemical facilities.

Special collections: Osteology collections; histology demonstration slides; gross anatomic and neurologic demonstration dissections; wax and plaster models of developmental and adult anatomy.

180

Institute of Experimental Biology: Miriam E. Simpson, Acting Director.

Current research projects: Relation of anterior hypophysis to neoplasms; gonadotrophins in primates; studies on vitamin-hormone interrelations; pituitary control of erythropoiesis; purification of growth hormone; hormonal control of bone physiology; multiple congenital abnormalities produced by maternal dietary deficiences.

Laboratory facilities: Facilities for rearing and housing of rats, hypophysectomy, chemical work, and microscopic technique.

Department of Physiological Chemistry: David M. Greenberg, Chairman.

Current research projects: Biochemistry of cancer; cardiovascular research.

182

Department of Physiology: Leslie L. Bennett, Chairman.

Current research projects: Projects in endocrinology, metabolism, environmental physiology, heart disease, diabetes, neurophysiology.

183

SCHOOL OF OPTOMETRY: Kenneth B. Stoddard, Dean.

Current research projects: Electrophysiological studies of motor and sensory aspects of vision; investigation of genetic basis of anomalous color vision; morphology of the retina and lateral geniculate body of the squirrel family; the hotopter in anomalous retinal correspondence; physiological nystagmus in relation to visual acuity and other visual function.

Laboratory and library facilities: Facilities for research in problems in physiological optics. Branch library.

SCHOOL OF PUBLIC HEALTH: Charles E. Smith, Dean.

Current research projects: Encephalitis; coccidiodomycosis; air pollution; water pollution and contamination; fetal wastage; evaluation of X-ray surveys; general public health and clinical laboratory methods; community health programs.

Laboratory facilities: Facilities for research in toxicology and chemistry for sanitary science and industrial hygiene, epidemiology, and biostatistics.

Library: Extensive public health library, including 13,000 volumes, 7,600 pamphlets, and 400 current serials.

San Francisco Campus

185

COLLEGE OF DENTISTRY: Willard C. Fleming, Dean.

Section on Anatomy and Histology: H. Henry Weisengreen, Chairman.

Current research projects: Degenerative changes in the articular disc in later maturity; the patterns and pathways of facial pain.

Special collection: Collection of anatomical specimens.

Section on Crown and Bridge Prosthesis: J. Raymond Gill, Chairman.

Section on Dental Materials: Joseph V. Mitchell, Chairman.

Section on Dental Morphology: Nguyen T. Nguyen, Chairman.

Division of Denture Prosthesis: George A. Hughes, Chairman.

Current research projects: Facial types and tooth arrangement; taste perception in edentulous patients.

Division of Operative Dentistry: R. W. Rule, Jr., Chairman.

Section on Dental Medicine: Hermann Becks, Chairman.

Section on Oral Pathology: R. Gordon Agnew, Chairman.

Section on Oral Roentgenology: Gordon Fitzgerald, Chairman.

Division of Oral Surgery: C. Dudley Gwinn, Chairman.

Section on Oro-Facial Prosthesis and Speech Therapy: Charles Lipp, Chairman.

Division of Orthodontics: Wendell Wylie, Chairman.
Current research projects: Human craniofacial morphology—variations therein, clinical investigation in results of orthodontic treatment, variation due to environmental influences, serial study on like-sexed twins.
Laboratory facilities: Broadbent cephalometer and auxiliary equipment.
Special collections: Frontal and lateral oriented headfilms of several thousand individuals over last ten years susceptible of accurate measurement and categorized by means of edged punch cards.

Division of Periodontology: Harold Ray, Chairman.

SCHOOL OF MEDICINE: John B. Lagen, Acting Dean.
Library: The Library of the Medical Center is an extensive collection of monographic and periodical literature in the health sciences comprising, in addition to the main collection, the various small departmental working collections and that of the George William Hooper Foundation in the special fields of bacteriology, public health, and veterinary medicine. The collection in the health sciences contains over 100,000 volumes and some 35,000 medical foreign university dissertations. Approximately 1,550 of the leading medical periodicals of the world are received currently and complete sets of most of the important journals are on file. A small collection of neurological and psychiatric reference material is also available in the Langley Porter Clinic. There are collections on the history of anesthesia, medical California, and medical portraits and prints.
Special collections: The School of Medicine Museum contains a large number of mounted specimens illustrating pathological anatomy and many unmounted specimens. There is also a collection of specimens showing most of the common and many unusual conditions. Morris Herzstein Embryological Collection.

Department of Internal Medicine: T. L. Althausen, Chairman.
Current research projects: Projects in cardiology, endocrinology, gastroenterology.

187
Department of Neurological Surgery: Edwin Boldrey, Chairman.
Current research projects: Vascular lesions of C.N.S.; hypotension and hyperthermia in neurological surgery; central metabolism; neoplasms of the central nervous system.

188
Department of Neurology: Robert B. Aird, Chairman.
Current research projects: Projects in neurophysiology, electroencephalography; lipoprotein and infra-red studies of serum in neurologic diseases; tension studies; studies in multiple sclerosis, muscular dystrophy, and epilepsy.
Special collections: Collection of teaching slides and motion pictures in neurology.

189
Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology: Herbert F. Traut, Chairman.
Current research projects: Toxemias of pregnancy; cytological diagnosis of cancer; biochemical studies of human pregnancy.
Laboratory facilities: Animal colony, biochemical and endocrine laboratories.

190
Department of Orthopedic Surgery: LeRoy C. Abbott, Chairman.
Current research projects: Mechanics of human movement; locomotion; problems relating to amputees (skin, pain, muscle, energy, and prosthetic devices).
Laboratory facilities: Electroneurophysiological laboratory.

191
Department of Pathology: James F. Rinehart, Chairman.
Current research projects: Nutritional research; research in cardiovascular disease, endocrine disorders, rheumatic diseases, cancer.
Laboratory facilities: Histologic laboratories, biochemical research laboratory, electron microscope laboratory.
Special collections: Museum of Pathology.

192
Department of Pediatrics: William C. Deamer, Chairman.
Current research projects: Bone metabolism, thyroid metabolism, iron metabolism, carbohydrate metabolism.

193
Department of Pharmacology: H. H. Anderson, Chairman.
Current research projects: Chemotherapy of parasitic diseases; metabolism of glucose by amoebae; studies on metabolism of morphine, alcohol, and related agents.

194
Department of Psychiatry

195
Department of Radiology: Robert S. Stone, Chairman.
Current research projects: Projects concerned with diagnostic and therapeutic radiology and cancer research using radioactive materials; problems revolving around a 70 MEV Synchrotron for medical use.
Laboratory facilities: See Radiological Laboratory.

196
Department of Surgery: H. Glenn Bell, Chairman.
Current research projects: Recurrent chronic pancreatitis; nutritional status of animals following total gastrectomy; development of a fat emulsion for intravenous therapy in malnourished individuals; preservation of arteries; investigation of artificial plastic prosthesis for replacement of blocked arteries.

197
George Williams Hooper Foundation: Karl F. Meyer, Director
The Foundation specializes in immunology and virology, with special reference to zoonoses.
Current research projects: Immunization of man against plague; ecology of ornithosis and psittacosis.
Library: Foundation library (see introduction to School of Medicine).

Cancer Research Institute: David A. Wood, Director.
The Institute carries on a broad spectrum of investigative work in the fundamental sciences having to do with cancer, coordinates and integrates cancer research and teaching in other departments in the School of Medicine, and conducts a program of clinical investigation.

Current research projects: Clinical research in action; research in cancer therapy and patho-physiology; cytology of cancer of the lung and of other organs; evaluation of cancer learning; cytology training program; culture of normal and neoplastic pulmonary tissues; physiologic studies of normal and neoplastic cells and tissues from human and mouse lung.

Laboratory facilities: Facilities include tissue culture area, cell research laboratories, isotope unit, research pathology laboratory, pulmonary physiology laboratory, hematology research facilities, a fluroscopy X-ray unit for clinical investigative studies having to do with the development of X-ray movies; controlled catheterization studies.

Francis I. Proctor Foundation for Research in Opthalmology: Michael J. Hogan, Director.

Current research projects: Investigations on ocular toxoplasmosis; action of lytic enzymes on eye structures; studies on the vitreous humor; research on primary and secondary glaucoma; study of keratitis sicca and Sjogren's syndrome.

Laboratory facilities: Facilities for microbiologic investigation of virus diseases, biochemical investigation of the cause for glaucoma, and pathology.

Special collections: Collection of external disease and fungus drawings; colored photographs of external diseases (about 10,000 slides).

Radiological Laboratory: Robert S. Stone, Director.

Current research projects: Cancer therapy along following lines —application of radiations from 70 Mev Synchrotron; radiation physics, especially dosimetry of these radiations; radiobiology, especially comparative response of biological systems to Synchrotron radiations with respect to conventional X-rays.

Laboratory facilities: Special instruments for measuring X-radiation, vacuum calorimeter.

201

Metabolic Unit for Research in Arthritis and Allied Diseases: Peter H. Forsham, Director.

The Unit is concerned with research in arthritis and allied diseases from the metabolic and endocrine point of view.

Current research projects: Exact nature of the activity of the adrenal cortex in man in the normal state and in a number of diseases.

202

Radioactivity Research Center: Kenneth G. Scott, Director.

The Center is concerned with application of radioactivity to biology and medicine.

Current research projects: Investigation of uptake of inorganic iodide from human serum by anionic exchange resins; studies of human gastric motility secretion; measurement of localized cortical blood flow in the brain.

Laboratory facilities: Equipment for handling of radioisotopes.

203

Audiology and Speech Clinic: Francis A. Sooy, Director.

Laboratory facilities: Two-room sound-proof facility with audiometric equipment, including Allison 12B speech audiometer, Maico E2 clinical audiometer, beltone portable audiometer, ADC clinical audiometer.

Clinical Laboratories: W. L. Bostick, Director.

Current research projects: Hodgkin's disease; electrolyte studies.

205

Langley Porter Clinic.

The Clinic is a research and teaching institute for psychiatry erected by the Department of Mental Hygiene of the State of California with the provision that the research and teaching functions be carried on under the direction of the School of Medicine. In addition to the psychiatric wards for adults, the Clinic has a ward for neurosurgery, a psychiatric ward for children, and an out-patient department. Facilities include general clinical laboratories and special laboratories for electro-encephalography and neuro-pathology, an X-ray department, operating department, and an occupational therapy department.

206

COLLEGE OF PHARMACY: Troy C. Daniels, Dean.

Current research projects: In pharmacy and pharmaceutical chemistry; projects relating to the relation between the structure of organic molecules and their biological activity; studies in the general field of mechanism of action of drugs.

Laboratory and library facilities: Facilities for research in pharmacy and various aspects of the physical and biological sciences as they apply to pharmacy. Library of approximately 9,000 volumes.

Special collections: Documents and volumes of historical importance.

Mount Hamilton

207

Lick Observatory: C. D. Shane, Director.

Current research projects: Studies of nature, distribution, and motions of extragalactic nebulae; studies of special types of stellar spectra; photoelectric photometry of stars and other celestial objects; astrometry of double stars, comets, minor planets, and proper motions of stars.

Facilities: 36-inch refracting telescope; 36-inch reflecting telescope; 20-inch astrographic telescope; 12-inch refracting telescope; 120-inch reflecting telescope (second largest in the world) under construction and near completion; instrument shop.

Library: 25,000 volumes.

Special collections: Collections of stellar photographs and spectograms of astronomical objects.

Davis Campus

The Davis campus has some of the state's finest farmland and facilities including a full-scale creamery; a food-processing plant for canning, freezing, and dehydrating; climatic chambers for studies of poultry and other animals; an insectary; greenhouses; seedhouses; indoor and outdoor irrigation laboratories; and engineering shops.

DIVISION OF AGRICULTURAL SCIENCES: Harry R. Wellman, Vice-President.

The Division of Agricultural Sciences is a state-wide framework within which the various fields of agricultural science operate. On the Berkeley campus, it includes the College of Agriculture, School of Forestry, Agricultural Experiment Station (Paul R. Sharp, Director), Giannini Foundation of Agricultural Economics, and Kearney Foundation of Soil Science. On the Davis campus, it includes the College of Agriculture and the School of Veterinary Science.

COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE: Fred N. Briggs, Dean.

Department of Agricultural Engineering: Roy Bainer, Chairman.
Current research projects: Rural home design; farm fencing; poultry housing; relation of electricity to agriculture; efficiency of orchard heating; engineering applications to the production and handling of vegetable crops; heat transfer in dairy machinery; mechanical equipment for pest control; packing house practices; use of aircraft in agriculture; mechanical harvesting of deciduous tree fruits.

Department of Agronomy: Maurice L. Peterson, Chairman.
Current research projects: Cereal and rice investigations; genetics of resistance to disease; effect of different field crops and crop residues upon the soil and crops which follow; studies on oil-producing crops; improvement of range grasses; physiological and ecological responses of range plants to environmental factors and management practices; field crop fertilization; biochemical and physiological aspects of disease inherited by plants; application of quantitative genetics to plant breeding; effect of environment on genetic shift.
Laboratory and library facilities: Soils laboratory, physiology laboratories, cytogenetics laboratory, seed research laboratories. 420 acres for field research. Herbarium. Small departmental library.

Department of Animal Husbandry: H. H. Cole, Chairman.
Current research projects: Effect of hormones on growth: studies on dwarfism in beef cattle; nutritive requirements of farm animals; nutritive value of forages and concentrates; molybdenum toxicity in farm animals; use of isotopes in studying intermediate metabolism in farm animals.
Facilities: Specialized laboratories for studies in nutrition, physiology, and wool technology; a chamber and psychrometric room for large animals; small-animal colony; barns, corrals, and pastures for dairy and beef cattle, horses, sheep, and swine; herds and flocks of several breeds in each species raised commercially in California maintained for instruction in breeding, feeding, management, and judging.

211
Department of Dairy Industry: E. L. Jack, Chairman.
Current research projects: Chemistry of milk and milk products; microbiology of milk and milk products; application of engineering to dairy processing.
Facilities: Department maintains modern dairy plant and chemical, bacteriological, and testing laboratories, specialized commercial-scale milk processing plant, pilot plant laboratory for concentrated milks.

Department of Food Technology: Emil M. Mrak, Chairman.
Current research projects: Metabolism and industrial application of fermentation microorganisms; yeasts and molds; dehydration of fruits; influence of processing on microscopic structure of foods; disposal and utilization of agricultural wastes; catalysis and inhibition of fat oxidation at low temperatures; organoleptic properties of pesticide-treated vegetables, fruits, and nuts; organoleptic factors involved in wine acceptance; microbiology of dehydrated vegetables; biosynthesis of carotenoids in fungi.
Facilities: Chemical, biological, and microbiological laboratories; complete facilities for taste testing; food processing pilot plant (chilling, packaging, canning, and freezing). Departmental library.
Special collections: Large yeast collection; collection of food spoilage bacteria.

Department of Irrigation: Robert M. Hagan, Chairman.
Current research projects: Watershed and range management; water quality and its effects on soil and crops; use of sewage effluent for irrigation; land preparation for irrigation; water application methods; canal and reservoir lining materials; irrigation equipment; soil moisture characteristics and soil moisture measurement; relations of soil moisture to growth and production of crops; application of fertilizers through irrigation water; drainage of irrigated lands as related to crop production.
Facilities: Indoor and outdoor hydraulic installation; physics laboratory for soil moisture and drainage studies; chemical laboratory for water, soil, and plant analysis; plant growth chamber; general soil moisture sample processing laboratory; greenhouses; 80-acre irrigated tract for irrigation experiments; irrigation equipment. Departmental library containing collection of bulletins and reprints of scientific papers on irrigation problems.

214
Department of Landscape Management: John H. Madison, Jr., Acting Chairman.
Current research projects: Turf research (management phases); use of ornamental to improve livability in hot dry climates.
Facilities: 10-acre arboretum; hothouse; greenhouse; laboratory.
Special collections: Arboretum of plants adapted to Central Valley without supplemental water.

215
Department of Pomology: Warren P. Tufts, Chairman.
Current research projects: Irrigation; mineral nutrition; effects of sprays and hormones on fruit plants; pollination; fertilization; thinning; pruning; breeding; post-harvest physiology; transportation and packaging.

216
Department of Poultry Husbandry: George F. Stewart, Chairman.
Facilities: Brooding and laying houses equipped with bulk storage and automatic feeding devices; facilities for incubation and hatching.

217
Department of Vegetable Crops: James E. Knott, Chairman.
Current research projects: Various types of physiological, genetical, and biochemical aspects of vegetable production.
Facilities: Greenhouse; series of constant temperature storage rooms; chemical laboratories; microtechnique laboratory.

218
Department of Viticulture and Enology: Albert J. Winkler, Chairman.
Facilities: Chemical and microbiological laboratories; fermentation and conditioning rooms; distilling equipment; storage and aging cellars.

The School offers work in anatomy, pathology, physiology, biochemistry, pharmacology, public health, microbiology, poultry pathology, medicine, surgery, reproduction, radiology, parasitology.
Current research projects: Nitrate and plant poisonings of livestock; genetic studies on inheritance of blood groups in cattle and sheep; pathogenesis of listeriosis in natural hosts; transmission of virological studies of bat rabies virus; therapeutic methods in treatment of parasitic infections; development of immunity to internal parasites; hematological characteristics of diseases of animals; metabolic and nutritional diseases of livestock; neoplastic diseases of animals; and others.

UNIVERSITY OF SAN FRANCISCO

2130 Fulton St., San Francisco 17

President: JOHN F. X. CONNOLLY, S. J.
Dean of Colleges of Arts and Sciences: ALEXIS I. MEI, S. J.

220
Department of Chemistry: William Maroney, Head.
Current research projects: Thermal rearrangement of the alkyl enol ethers of acetophenone; preparation of organic compounds for possible use in chemotherapy; amperometric titrimetry; measurement of Dipole Moments.
Laboratory and library facilities: In addition to laboratories for educational purposes, there is one laboratory wholly devoted to research. Departmental library.

221
Department of Mathematics: John E. Fischer, S. J., Head.

222
Department of Physics: Karl J. Waider, Head.
Current research projects: Physical and optical properties of thin films; electronics.
Laboratory and library facilities: Vacuum deposition apparatus and electronics laboratory as well as usual laboratories in physics; RCA electron microscope; seismological station equipped for recording of earthquakes and study of geophysical phenomena. Departmental library.

Department of Zoology: Edward L. Kessel, Head.
Current research projects: Marine biology (San Francisco Bay estuary studies, physiology of estuary animals); protozoology; genetics and chromosome cytology (geographical distribution of butterflies, population genetics of Colias butterflies, comparative genetics); neurophysiology (pain mechanism, both peripheral and central nervous system); systematics and biology of Diptera (biology of Empididae, taxonomy and biology of Platypezidae).
Laboratory and library facilities: Cytological laboratory, including electron microscope and refrigerated centrifuge; laboratory for protozoology. Private library on Lepidoptera and general genetics and on Diptera.
Special collections: Marine invertebrate collections from Lower California, Santa Barbara channel islands, and San Francisco Bay; collection of Colias butterflies.

UNIVERSITY OF SANTA CLARA

Santa Clara

President: HERMAN J. HAUCK, S. J.

COLLEGE OF ARTS AND SCIENCES: JAMES A. KING, S. J., Dean.

224
Department of Biology: Lloyd L. Bolton, Chairman.

225
Department of Chemistry: Joseph F. Deck, Chairman.
Current research projects: Azeotropic mixtures; organic syntheses.

226
Department of Physics: John B. Drahmann, Chairman.

227
Ricard Memorial Observatory: John A. Weber, S. J., Director.
Astronomical, meteorological, and seismological observations.
Observatory has done much work in long-range weather forecasting through a study of sun spots; important collection of records and observations in this regard. Monthly forecasts sent out regularly from Observatory.
Seismic station contains an 80Kg Wiechert horizontal and vertical seismograph and three Galitzin seismographs especially designed for local earthquakes.

228
Archaeological and Historical Research Committee: Francis R. Flaim and Austen den Warburton, Co-chairmen.
Committee directs field teams in archaeological, mineral, and paleontological research, including identification and classification of artifacts; supervises Galtes Geological Collection.

COLLEGE OF ENGINEERING: ROBERT J. PARDEN, Dean.

Department of Mechanical Engineering: Richard K. Pefley, Chairman.
Laboratory facilities: High-frequency response equipment; hydraulic and electric dynamometers; equipment for evaluating thermal insulations; electrical analog equipment; metallurgical equipment.

230 Department of Civil Engineering: Edmund C. Flynn, Chairman.
Laboratory facilities: Laboratories for surveying, highway sanitary, soil mechanics. and structural work.

231
Department of Electrical Engineering: Henry P. Nettesheim, Chairman.
Laboratory facilities: Electromagnetic oscillograph; standard electronic measuring equipment.

232
Department of General Engineering (Materials testing and Fluid Mechanics).
Laboratory facilities: Tension and compression testing machines to 200,000 lbs. capacity; torsion testing machine; mechanical, electrical, and optical strain gauges; Baldwin strain analyzer.

SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTIONS AND FOUNDATIONS

300

A. E. Bennett Neuropsychiatric Research Foundation, Herrick Memorial Hospital, 2001 Dwight Way, Berkeley 4.

President: A. E. Bennett.

Field of research: Psychiatry.

Current research projects: Drug studies (Thorazine and Serpasil); hearing research.

Laboratory and library facilities: Electroencephalographic Laboratory located at 2505 Milvia St., Berkeley. Library in fields of psychiatry and neurology.

301

California Academy of Sciences, Golden Gate Park, San Francisco.

President: Ira L. Wiggins, Stanford University. Secretary: H. P. Stewart, Bethlehem Pacific Coast Steel Company. Chairman, Board of Trustees: Charles Page. Director: Robert C. Miller.

Activities: The activities of the Academy are divided into two areas: research in the natural sciences and public education in the natural sciences.

The Academy maintains the following research departments: Department of Aquatic Biology, Department of Astronomy, Department of Botany, Department of Entomology, Department of Exhibits, Department of Geology, Department of Herpetology, Department of Ichthyology, Department of Ornithology and Mammalogy.

All of the departments engage in a continuing program of basic research. Research of special significance at the present time in the Department of Aquatic Biology is concerned with aquarium management, with emphasis on the prevention and control of diseases. The Department is also engaged in a long-term study of the fish population of San Francisco Bay in cooperation with the Department of Ichthyology. The Department of Ichthyology participated recently in an effort to standardize biological names on an international level. The Academy frequently draws on the combined talents of its regular departments to undertake special research projects, either in cooperation with or for governmental agencies or industrial organizations. Programs under way at present include a study of the California ocean prawn, a study of sardines and related fishes, an investigation of the effects of pollution on fish and other aquatic life in San Francisco Bay, and a study of marine boring organisms of the Pacific area.

The Academy's educational activities include the operation of the Alexander F. Morrison Planetarium, the Science Museum, and Steinhart Aquarium; the publication of a popular magazine of science, Pacific Discovery; the production of "Science in Action," a weekly television program broadcast on a multi-station basis across the country; the maintenance of a rental library of educational motion picture films; the operation of a Student Section where young people of superior abilities may pursue their interests in science; and the presentation of monthly science lectures.

Special collections: Research collections within the departments represent a major scientific asset on the Pacific Coast. The herpetological collection of 75,000 specimens is noted for the completeness of its material from the Galapagos Islands. The entomological collection (3,000,000 specimens) ranks with the more important collections in the U. S. Other study collections within the departments consist of 10,871 mammals, 68,814 birds, 532,000 fishes, 380,000 plants, and 1,650,000 geological and paleontological items. There is also the Vonsen Collection of Minerals, containing 2,900 specimens.

Facilities: Serving the regular departments of the Academy is its optical and instrument shop, which also engages in experimental instrument work, designing and manufacturing special equipment for research use in aquatic biology, oceanography, and a wide variety of other fields. The shop designed and built the projector in the Morrison Planetarium, which is the first major planetarium projector ever constructed in the U. S.

Library: The Academy library contains more than 100,000 volumes and a like number of pamphlets dealing with natural history subjects.

302

California State Division of Mines, Ferry Building, San Francisco 11.

Director: Olaf P. Jenkins.

In connection with the offices of the State Division of Mines, the State of California here maintains the largest rock and mineral exhibit west of the Mississippi. The exhibit, which is open to the public, emphasizes California minerals, rocks, and ores and includes over 21,000 catalogued specimens of the following: (1) minerals arranged according to the Dana System; (2) ore minerals; (3) industrial minerals; (4) semi-precious stones; (5) building stones.

303

Cooperative Research Foundation, California Academy of Sciences, Golden Gate Park, San Francisco.

Chairman of the Board: George C. Tenney. President: Robert L. Champion. Secretary: John A. Markuson.

The Cooperative Research Foundation (CORE) is a research organization which draws its membership from universities, research institutes, industry, and government, both in the United States and abroad.

Fields of research: Members of CORE participate in team research projects undertaken by the Foundation for governmental or private organizations in all disciplines.

Current research projects: Present activities of the Foundation center in projects involving groups of members or individual members interested in the following areas: operations research, logistics, transportation, aviation facilities, meteorology, biology, public health, peace-time utilization of atomic energy, higher education, low-cost housing, water resources, land conservation, and international relations.

304
Harold Brunn Institute for Cardiovascular Research, Mount Zion Hospital, 1600 Divisadero St., San Francisco 15.
Director: Meyer Friedman.
Current research projects: Cardiovascular diseases.

305
John Beard Memorial Foundation, 642 Capp St., San Francisco.
Director: Ernst T. Krebs.
Fields of research: Pharmacological, nutrition, basic biology.
Research projects: Development of antibiotic Leptonin; vitamin B-15; dietary essentiality of beta cyanogenetic glucosides; unitarian or trophoblastic thesis of cancer.
Laboratory and library facilities: Special equipment for high-vacuum work in biology—molecular distillation and Cryosection; general and special instruments used in physiology, pharmacology, and synthetic chemistry. Library—1,200 volumes.

306
Palo Alto Medical Research Foundation, 333 Channing Ave., Palo Alto.
President: Russel V. Lee. Director of Research: Marcus A. Krupp.
Fields of research: Medical research, including biochemistry, immunology, and cancer research.
Current research projects: Studies on esterases and lipases, carcinogenesis; functions of white cells in antibody formation and function; metabolism of Neurospora under the influence of azo dyes; development of an agent suitable for hepatolienography; clinical studies in renal disease, psychiatric disease, tuberculosis.
Laboratory and library facilities: Facilities for radioactive materials, for use of small animals in laboratory investigation, for detailed studies in enzyme activity and in immunology. Extensive medical, chemical, and biological library.

INDUSTRIAL LABORATORIES AND APPLIED RESEARCH FACILITIES

400
Aircraft Engineering and Maintenance Company, Hanger No. 5, Oakland Municipal Airport, Oakland.
President: Douglass F. Johnson. Secretary: Richard R. Pettit.
Field of activity: Aircraft overhaul, servicing and conversion; design and manufacture of aircraft components.
Research activity: Airborne electronic equipment and geophysical devices.
Research director: Andrew Madsen.
Laboratory facilities: Electronic measurements; light measurement devices; sonic generation.
Library: 1,000 volumes.
Number of employees: 1,000.
Consulting services.

401
Alto Scientific Company, Inc., 855 Commercial St., Palo Alto.
President: Lester L. Libby. Vice-President and General Manager: Thomas F. Turner.
Field of activity: Electronic design and development.
Research activity: Circuit development.
Research director: David D. Cherry.
Laboratory facilities: Complete electronics laboratory, machine shop, sheet metal shop, painting and plating facilities.
Library: 100 volumes.
Number of employees: 15.
Consulting services.

402
American Brass & Iron Foundry, 7825 San Leandro St., Oakland 21.
President: Eugene Boscacci. Executive Vice-President: A. S. W. Love.
Field of activity: Cast iron soil pipe and fittings; plastic tubing and forms.
Research activity: Cast iron and plastics.
Research directors: A. K. Tang, Iron Division; Roy Theiss, Plastics.
Laboratory facilities: Sand laboratory, metallurgical laboratory, plastics testing laboratory (pressures and stresses).
Number of employees: 200.
Consulting services.

403
American Smelting and Refining Company, 405 Montgomery St., San Francisco 4.
Manager: W. S. Reid.
Field of activity: Metal mining, smelting, and refining.
Research activity: Mining geology, property analysis, exploration for ore deposits.
Research director: L. K. Wilson, Exploration Geologist.

404
American Spectrographic Laboratories, Inc., 557 Minna St., San Francisco.
Director: Charles E. Harvey.
Field of activity: Spectrographic analysis.
Research activity: Development of methods and applications of emission spectrography.
Research director: Charles E. Harvey.
Laboratory facilities: Standard equipment for emission spectra analysis including many accessories not available commercially.
Number of employees: 5.
Consulting services.

405
Ampex Corporation, 934 Charter St., Redwood City.
President: George I. Long.
Field of activity: Magnetic recording and reproducing equipment.
Research activity: Magnetic recording.
Research director: Walter T. Selsted.
Laboratory facilities: Completely equipped laboratory for research in the field of magnetic recording.
Number of employees: 700.

406
Anresco, 554 Fulton St., San Francisco.
Director: Sylvan Eisenberg.
Field of activity: Foods, industrial cleaning materials, corrosion.
Research activity: Fermentation, enzymes, galvanic corrosion and dehydration.
Research director: Sylvan Eisenberg.
Laboratory facilities: Complete baking laboratory, including recording dough mixer, and equipment for investigating rates of fermentation. Laboratory vacuum and atmospheric dehydration equipment. Flame photometer and electro-analytical apparatus.
Library: 500 volumes.
Number of employees: 3.
Consulting services.

407
Applied Electronics Company, Inc., 1246 Folsom St., San Francisco.
President: Sidney S. Konigsberg. Secretary-Treasurer: G. Blumenfeld.
Field of activity: Marine electronic equipment.
Laboratory facilities: Standard signal generators, vacuum tube volt meters, miscellaneous laboratory test equipment, model shop machine tools.
Number of employees: 45.

408
Applied Radiation Corporation, 1210 Springbrook Road, Walnut Creek.
President: M. R. Jeppson. Vice-President and General Manager: D. W. Garbellano.
Field of activity: Electron linear accelerators; klystron tubes.
Research activity: Electron linear accelerator use and design for foods, drugs, pharmaceuticals, chemicals, plastics, medical therapy, etc.; klystrons for special and military applications; reactor design and development.
Research director: Richard F. Post.
Laboratory facilities: Microwave equipment, tube laboratory equipment, machine shop, irradiation facilities.
Library: 500 volumes.
Number of employees: 26.
Consulting services.

409
Armour and Company, East Grand Ave., South San Francisco.
President: F. W. Speck. General Manager: H. J. Secrest.
Field of activity: Livestock slaughtering and meat processing.
Research activity: Organic chemistry in relation to meat and meat by-products.
Research director: Leo Barsotti.

Laboratory facilities: Necessary equipment for determining protein, fats, moistures, free fatty acids, rancidity, nitrates, and nitrites.
Number of employees: 425.

410
Auto-Lite Battery Corp., 9716 Sunnyside St., Oakland.
President: P. F. Brown. Plant Manager: P. F. Brown.
Field of activity: Lead-acid storage batteries.
Research activity: Separators, grid metals, and processing.
Laboratory facilities: Equipment available for chemical analysis and physical testing of storage batteries.
Number of employees: 125.
Consulting services.

411
Avoset Company, 661 Geary St., San Francisco.
President: M. K. Jordan. Vice-President: P. J. Boorchier.
Field of activity: Specialty food products and milk by-products.
Research activity: New food products; high-temperature, short-time sterilization and aseptic filling; process improvement.
Research director: A. E. Poarch.
Library: 500 volumes.
Number of employees: 150.

412
Basalt Rock Co., 8th and River Sts., Napa.
President: A. G. Streblow. Vice-President: E. F. Brovelli.
Field of activity: Concrete and related products.
Research activity: Ready mixed lightweight and heavyweight concrete; precast concrete; pre-stressed and post-tensioned concrete; concrete masonry units; lightweight aggregate; stone and natural gravel aggregate; pozzolan.
Research director: Carl M. Rollins.
Laboratory facilities: Laboratory fully equipped to conduct all major tests on the above-mentioned fields.
Number of employees: 500.
Consulting services.

413
Bechtel Corporation, 220 Bush St., San Francisco.
President: S. D. Bechtel. Executive Vice-President: W. E. Waste.
Field of activity: Engineering and construction for the chemical, petroleum, and petro-chemical power industries.
Research activity: Chemical engineering, mechanical engineering, electrical engineering, civil and structural engineering, nuclear engineering, power plant design, petroleum and chemical processing, materials handling, instrumentation and automatic control.
Library: 4,000 volumes.
Number of employees: 3,000.
Consulting services.

414
Beckman Instruments, Berkeley Division, 2200 Wright Ave., Richmond.
President: A. O. Beckman. Division Manager: T. Allinson.
Field of activity: Electronic instruments.
Research activity: Frequency measurement; nuclear instrumentation; industrial instrumentation and control analog computing equipment; data handling devices; digital instrumentation devices.
Research director: W. W. Harger.
Laboratory facilities: Facilities for instrument development work in the fields of analog computers, frequency measuring equipment, and industrial instruments. An analog computer with 50 operational amplifiers is maintained as a facility available to outside organizations.
Library: 300 volumes.
Number of employees: 300.
Consulting services.

415
Berkeley Pump Company, 829 Bancroft Way, Berkeley.
President: Fred Stadelhofer. Vice-President: C. W. Laufenberg.
Field of activity: Centrifugal pumps.
Research activity: Hydraulic pumps.
Research director: Ralph Rhoda.
Laboratory facilities: Test pits for testing pumps.
Library: 50 volumes.
Number of employees: 275.

416
Bethlehem Pacific Coast Steel Corp., 20th and Illinois Sts., San Francisco.
President: H. H. Fuller.
Field of activity: Steel production and fabrication; shipbuilding.
Laboratory facilities: Metallurgical laboratories in South San Francisco for testing purposes.
Library: 1,500 volumes.
Number of employees: 6,000.

417
Bio-Research Laboratories, 2437-2445 Sixth St., Berkeley 10.
Partners: B. K. Shahrok, R. M. Chesbro.
Field of activity: Microbiology and biochemistry.
Research director: B. K. Shahrok.
Laboratory facilities: Completely equipped for microbiological or biochemical work. Limited facilities for radioactive tracers.
Library: 2,000 volumes.
Number of employees: 12.
Consulting services.

418
Blaw-Knox Company, Buflovak Equipment Division, 1706 Broadway, Oakland 12.
President: W. Cordes Snyder. Vice-President; James P. Beyser.
Field of activity: Chemical process equipment including dryers, evaporators, process kettles, drum dryers, spray dryers, flaker, and related equipment.
Research activity: Drying in the food and chemical industries.
Research director: James W. Casten, Chemical Engineer.
Number of employees: 500.
Consulting services.

419
Broadview Research and Development, 1127 Chula Vista, Burlingame.
Partners: Richard I. Condit, Richard De Lancie, Warren R. Ketler.
Field of activity: Scientific research in physics, engineering, operations research, and photographic interpretation.
Research director: Richard I. Condit.
Laboratory facilities: Isolated test site maintained in coastal hills a few miles southwest of Burlingame for projects which cannot be performed in town because of the noise or hazards involved.
Library: 300 volumes.
Number of employees: 15.
Consulting services.

420
California and Hawaiian Sugar Refining Corp., Ltd., 215 Market St., San Francisco.
President: Donald Maclean.
Field of activity: Refining and marketing of raw cane sugar.
Research activity: Process improvement and development; quality improvement; reduction in cost of operations; development of analytical methods and instrumentation; technical sales investigations.

Research director: P. F. Meads, Chief Chemist.
Laboratory facilities: Located at Crockett.
Library: 2,500 volumes.
Number of employees: 2,000.

421
California Ink Company, Inc., The, 545 Sansome St., San Francisco.
President: William H. Brandes. Vice-President: R. N. Wellington.
Field of activity: Ink, all types; paint raw materials.
Research activity: Ink developments, especially in fields of coatings for packaging materials such as foils, films, etc. Paint colorants, paint raw materials, chemicals for lithographers, photoengravers, etc.
Research director: William C. Parle.
Laboratory facilities: Plant located at 711 Camelia St., Berkeley. Complete chemical laboratory with color-matching and testing equipment.
Number of employees: 600.
Consulting services.

422
California Packing Corporation, 215 Fremont St., San Francisco 19.
President: R. G. Lucks.
Field of activity: Canning of seasonal fruits and vegetables and production of these canning crops; fish canning; processing and packaging of dried fruits.
Research activity: Research in growing and canning of perishable foods; packaging research; product development; technological development.
Research directors: J. E. McConkie, Scientific Research. P. D. Caldis, Agricultural Research.
Laboratory facilities: General laboratory, at headquarters; agricultural research, 850 Thornton St., San Leandro; special projects laboratory, 4204 Hollis St., Emeryville.
Library: 1,577 volumes.
Number of employees: 5,400 (during peak of canning season, may reach 33,000).

423
California Pottery Company, Niles.
President: Burton B. Brace. Secretary-Treasurer: George A. Mays.
Field of activity: Clay products.
Research activity: Clay bodies and techniques.
Research director: George A. Mays.
Laboratory facilities: Normal ceramic equipment.
Library: 50 volumes.
Number of employees: 90.

424
California Spray-Chemical Corporation, Lucas and Ortho Way, Richmond.
President: A. W. Mohr.
Field of activity: Agricultural chemicals and fertilizers.
Research activity: Pesticides and fertilizers.
Research director: Leo R. Gardner.
Laboratory facilities: Chemical and biological laboratories.
Library: 500 volumes.
Number of employees: 1,000.

425
California Steel Products Division, Barrett Ave. and A St., Richmond.
President: T. M. Evans. Vice-President and General Manager: H. W. Dornsife.
Field of activity: Alloy fabrication, light and heavy structural steel, pressure vessels, tanks, gun mounts, ship sections, hot water boilers, and buoys.
Research director: L. G. Janzow.
Laboratory facilities.
Number of employees: 155.

426
California Wine Association, 900 Minnesota St., San Francisco.
President: Sydney C. Wortley. Vice-President and Manager: M. Perelli-Minetti.
Field of activity: Cooperative wine marketing.
Research activity: Quality control and analysis of wines, vermouth, champagne, and brandy.
Research directors: Stanley Strud, Production Manager. Dawson Wright, Director of Quality Control.
Laboratory facilities: Quality control laboratory which checks adherence to product standards, clarity, acidity, analysis, degrees Balling, etc. Analytical laboratory which analyzes wines received from member plants and uses this information in the preparation of blends of wine and/or vermouth or champagne.
Number of employees: 150.

427
Cascade Research Corporation, 53 Victory Lane, Los Gatos.
President: Dwight Caswell. Vice-President: Jerome S. Jaffe.
Field of activity: Electronics (microwave).
Research activity: Electronics and microwave; microwave ferrite devices; microwave oscillators; microwave impedance plotter.
Research director: Dwight Caswell.
Laboratory facilities: Complete microwave test equipment for frequencies between 1,000 and 40,000 megacycles per second; complete machine shop; equipment for manufacturing vacuum tubes; silver and rhodium plating facilities.
Library: 100 volumes.
Number of employees: 32.
Consulting services.

428
Central Scientific Company of California, 1040 Martin Ave., Santa Clara.
President: J. T. Gossett. Vice-President: Wm. Pflueger.
Field of activity: Scientific apparatus and laboratory equipment; reagent grade chemicals for industrial and educational fields.
Research activity: Development of new tools for scientists.
Number of employees: 25.

429
Champion International Corporation, Menlo Park.
Chairman of the Board: R. L. Champion. President: P. A. Peller.
Field of activity: Landing aids research and development; airways and airports design; low-cost housing.
Research activity: Airport design and landing aids; low-cost housing.
Research director: P. A. Peller.
Library: 1,000 volumes.
Number of employees: 20.
Consulting services.

430
Chemical Process Company, 901 Spring St., Redwood City.
President: A. E. Post. Vice-President: Paul A. Gross.
Field of activity: Ion exchange resins, polyester resins, and phenolic resins.
Research activity: Ion exchange resins, polyester, polyelectrolytes, adhesives, surface coatings.
Research director: I. M. Abrams.
Laboratory facilities: Laboratory equipment to do polymer research in accordance with fields described above.
Library: 1,000 volumes.
Number of employees: 60.
Consulting services.

431
Christian, J. D., Engineers, 480 Potrero Ave., San Francisco.
President: J. D. Christian. General Manager: R. F. Christian.
Field of activity: Custom-built apparatus in the fields of power transmission, conveying, and heat transfer.
Research activity: Mechanical transmission, gear-type spiral conveyors for vertical operation; heat transfer between liquids and solids, gases and solids.
Research director: J. D. Christian.
Laboratory facilities: Full-size test units; gear checking equipment; special measuring devices for convexability checks; conventional heat transfer instrumentation.
Number of employees: 100.

432
Chromatic Television Laboratories, Inc., West Coast Development Laboratory, 1476 - 66th St., Emeryville 8.
General Manager: H. R. Patterson.
Field of activity: Research and development of color cathode ray tubes.
Research activity: Color cathode ray tubes and related problems.
Research director: C. S. Nunan. Development director: D. R. Cone.
Laboratory facilities: Diversified cathode ray tube developmental facility.
Library: 100 volumes.
Number of employees: 47.

433
Colgate-Palmolive Company, 2700 - 7th St., Berkeley.
President: W. L. Sims II. Plant Superintendent: D. E. Stanberry.
Field of activity: Soap, glycerine, synthetic detergents, and toilet articles.
Research activity: Analytical procedure and production problems.
Research director: Harold S. Mumford, Plant Chemist.
Laboratory facilities: Facilities for making routine chemical tests on quality of products.
Number of employees: 400.

434
Color Television Incorporated, 973 East San Carlos Ave., San Carlos.
President: T. I. Moseley. Vice-President and General Manager: J. M. Carter.
Field of activity: Electrical and electronic equipment.
Research activity: Radar; infrared radiation and detection.
Research director: J. D. Adkins.
Laboratory: Standard electronic test equipment.
Library: 100 volumes.
Number of employees: 80.
Consulting services.

435
Container Laboratories, Inc., 151 New Montgomery St., San Francisco.
President: C. J. Zusi. Division Manager: H. R. Kattelmann.
Field of activity: Research, engineering, consultation, and testing on containers and packaging materials, paper, and wood products.
Laboratory facilities: Complete facilities for testing, development, and research in this field.
Library: 1,000 volumes.
Number of employees: 6.
Consulting services.

436
Crown Zellerbach Corporation, 343 Sansome St., San Francisco.
President: J. D. Zellerbach. Executive Vice-President: H. L. Zellerbach.
Field of activity: Pulp and paper and by-products.
Research activity: Pulping, paper manufacture, by-products from wood and pulping wastes.
Research director: W. W. Moyer.
Laboratory facilities: Research laboratories located at Camas, Washington.
Library: 4,000 volumes.

437
Cutter Laboratories, Fourth and Parker, Berkeley.
President: Robert K. Cutter. Vice-President: E. A. Cutter, Jr.
Field of activity: Human and veterinary biologicals, hospital solutions and appliances, blood fractions, pharmaceuticals.
Research activity: Bacteriology and virology, organic chemistry, biochemistry, pharmacy, pharmacology, biophysics.
Research director: Howard M. Winegarden, Vice-President and Scientific Director.
Laboratory facilities: Chemical and biological laboratories, pilot plant facilities, pharmacology laboratories.
Library: 3,500 volumes.
Number of employees: 550.

438
Dalmo Victor Company, 1414 El Camino Real, San Carlos.
President: T. I. Moseley. Vice-President and General Manager: J. A. Chartz.
Field of activity: Electronic equipment.
Research activity: Applications of hydraulics, electronics, and microwave antennas.
Research directors: G. A. Walter, Electrical Engineering. R. F. Leinicke, Mechanical Engineering.
Laboratory facilities: Antenna test facilities, environmental laboratory.
Library: 2,000 volumes.
Number of employees: 900.
Consulting services.

439
Day-Brite Lighting Inc. of California, 530 Martin Ave., Santa Clara.
President: D. J. Biller. Executive Vice-President: O. W. Klingsick.
Field of activity: Commercial and industrial lighting.
Research activity: Development of lighting products.
Laboratory facilities: Demonstration of lighting systems in quantity, quality, and appearance.
Number of employees: 50.
Consulting services.

440
Detroit Controls Corporation, 1650 Broadway, Redwood City.
President: Charles H. Hodges. Executive Vice-President: George B. Duffield.
Field of activity: Automatic temperature and pressure-responsive controls; controls for heating, refrigeration, and air-conditioning equipment and for domestic home appliances.
Research activity: Research and development of electronic, electrical, and automatic mechanical controls, specialized ordnance jet-propulsion and combustion apparatus, metering and regulating equipment, and components for the atomic power program.
Research director: William J. Barr.
Laboratory facilities: Large model shop; electronics and engineering laboratories.
Library: 275 volumes.
Number of employees: 85.

441
Diablo Animal Laboratories, 290 Liverna Heights Road, Walnut Creek.
President: Theodore Aarons. Manager: Saul A. Aarons.
Field of activity: Commercial breeders of laboratory rat and mouse strains; special services, including hypophysectomizing rats, tumor transplantation.

Research activity: Animal husbandry studies; nutrition evaluation; ectoparasite studies.
Research director: Theodore Aarons.
Laboratory facilities: Complete laboratory animal colonies; isolation quarters, test rooms, animal surgery. Second laboratory located at 1808 Harmon St., Berkeley 3.
Number of employees: 10.
Consulting services.

442
Dole, James, Engineering Co., 58 Sutter St., San Francisco.
President: H. R. Goff. Secretary-Treasurer: V. J. Moran.
Field of activity: Food processing equipment.
Research activity: Short-time, high-temperature sterilization of food products and aseptic canning of same.
Research director: G. A. Guchel.
Laboratory facilities: Plant and laboratory located at 600 Whipple Ave., Redwood City. Laboratory equipment consists of short-time, high-temperature sterilizing units and aseptic canning unit and kitchen.
Number of employees: 25.

443
Dow Chemical Company, The, Western Division, 350 Sansome St., San Francisco 4.
President: L. I. Doan. General Manager: R. L. Curtis.
Field of activity: Organic and inorganic chemicals including solvents, caustic soda, ammonia, chlorine, and others.
Research activity: Basic research in organic and inorganic chemical compounds; further research in mining field and in field of synthetic fibres.
Research director: R. G. Heitz.
Laboratory facilities: Standard laboratory facilities for basic research in the field of organic and inorganic chemicals; also facilities for high polymer research and facilities for exploring chemical applications to the mining industry, in particular, synthetic flocculation. Laboratory is located at Pittsburg.
Library: 5,000 volumes.
Number of employees: 790.

444
du Pont de Nemours, E. I., & Company, Inc., 160 Linden Ave., South San Francisco.
President: Crawford H. Greenwalt. South San Francisco Plant Manager: M. L. Byron.
Field of activity: Finishes.
Research activity: Product control and development.
Research director: S. N. Kelly, Technical Supervisor.
Laboratory facilities: Testing equipment for finishes.
Number of employees: 230.

445
Electro Engineering Works, 6021 College Ave., Oakland 18.
President: W. W. Wahlgren. Vice-President: J. J. Halloran.
Field of activity: Transformers and allied products.
Research activity: Miniaturization of power transformers and inductors; resins.
Research director: W. W. Wahlgren.
Laboratory facilities: Equipment includes humidity chamber, cold chamber, ovens, shake table. Laboratory located at 2010 - 7th St., Berkeley.
Number of employees: 75.
Consulting services.

446
Federal Pacific Electric Company, Pacific Electric Switchgear Division, 5815 Third St., San Francisco.
President: Jos. S. Thompson. Vice-President: A. A. Browne.
Field of activity: High-voltage electrical circuit breakers and disconnecting switches.
Research activity: High-voltage switchgear details.
Research director: A. A. Browne.
Laboratory facilities: Potential transformer 500,000 V. maximum; current test transformers 60,000 amperes maximum; other auxiliary equipment.
Number of employees: 500.

447
Ferry-Morse Seed Co., Mountain View.
President: Stephen Beale. Executive Vice-President: Frank G. Cuthbertson.
Field of activity: Seed growers and dealers.
Research activity: Plant Breeding.
Research director: John J. McCabe.
Laboratory facilities: Seed breeding and research station at Salinas.
Number of employees: 1,200.

448
Fibreboard Products, Inc., 1789 Montgomery St., San Francisco.
President: T. N. Bland. Executive Vice-President: R. E. Bundy.
Field of activity: Paperboard and paperboard products.
Research activity: Properties and performance of paperboard packaging; application of coatings, adhesives, and laminants; printing processes.
Research director: Howard S. Gardner.
Laboratory facilities: Research and development laboratory located at Antioch. Four controlled atmosphere rooms permitting exposure and testing of packaging under wide range of temperature and humidity. Extensive testing equipment for paperboard and packaging. Experimental coating and printing units.
Library: 550 volumes.
Number of employees: 5,900.

449
Fisher Research Laboratory, Inc., 1931 University Ave., Palo Alto.
President: G. R. Fisher.
Field of activity: Geophysical instruments for prospecting; utility instruments for location of buried pipes and cables; fluid leak detectors.
Research activity: Geophysical exploration for minerals.
Research director: G. R. Fisher.
Laboratory facilities: Standard electronic laboratory.
Library: 300 volumes.
Number of employees: 35.

450
Ford Motor Company, P. O. Box 1101, San Jose.
President: Henry Ford, II. Plant Manager: W. A. Abbott, Jr.
Field of activity: Assembly plant.
Research activity: Quality control organization to insure quality of constructions and parts in automobiles produced.
Research director: T. L. Meyer, Quality Control Department Manager.
Laboratory facilities: General laboratory for testing of materials.
Number of employees: 2,500.

451
Foremost Dairies, Incorporated, 425 Battery St., San Francisco.
President: Grover D. Turnbow.
Field of activity: Dairy and food products control.
Research activity: New milk products, by-products, specialty products from milk involving new processing methods.
Research director: Clayton A. Kempf.
Laboratory facilities: Special laboratory equipment for studying new processing methods; special analytical and testing equipment.
Library: 800 volumes.
Number of employees: 750.

452
Friden Calculating Machine Co., Inc., 2350 Washington St., San Leandro.
President: Walter S. Johnson. Secretary-Treasurer: C. T. Gruenhagen.
Field of activity: Office equipment.
Research activity: Office appliances, data integrating systems and equipment, electromechanical devices, electronic devices, systems producing and reading teletype tape and punched cards.
Research director: Dunstan S. Gross.
Number of employees: 2,400.
Consulting services.

453
Fuller, W. P., and Company, 301 Mission St., San Francisco.
President: A. H. Brawner.
Field of activity: Paint, varnish, lacquer.
Research director: A. P. Pahl.
Library: 400 volumes.
Number of employees: 700.

454
General Metals Corporation, Enterprise Division, 18th and Florida Streets, San Francisco.
President: W. E. Butts. Executive Vice-President: William Clausen.
Field of activity: Industrial diesel, dual fuel, spark ignition and marine diesel engines; oil burners; process machinery.
Research activity: Industrial internal combustion engines and process machinery.
Research director: B. A. Robbins, Manager of Engineering.
Laboratory facilities: Equipment for test of medium size industrial engines. Auxiliary test facility in main plant includes hydraulic dynamoter capable of 7,500 horsepower. Main laboratory facilities located in South San Francisco.
Number of employees: 425.

455
General Paint Corporation, 2627 Army St., San Francisco.
President: W. L. Watkins. Secretary-Treasurer: D. M. Beale.
Field of activity: Paint, varnish, lacquer, and related products.
Research activity: Formulation.
Research director: Howard E. Smith.
Laboratory facilities: Normal equipment for paint laboratory. Color eye. Research and development laboratory located at 2280 Palou Ave., San Francisco.
Number of employees: 750.
Consulting services.

456
Gerber Products Company, 9401 San Leandro St., Oakland.
President: Dan F. Gerber. First Vice-President: W. V. Hudson.
Field of activity: Baby foods.
Research activity: Applied research; development of new products and processes and special equipment; nutritional research.
Research director: B. Grossi.
Laboratory facilities: Complete pilot plant canning equipment, including complete Martin Asceptic Line with steam injection sterilization process.
Library: 800 volumes.
Number of employees: 1,000.

457
Gilliland Instrument Company, 3124 East 14th St., Oakland 1.
Partners: William Douglas Gilliland, Kenneth Gordon Gilliland.
Field of activity: Custom scientific instrument design; precision mechanical and electronic devices.
Research activity: Automatic machine tool research and design; radar measuring apparatus; anthropometric instrument design.
Research director: Ralph W. Schwarze, Chief Engineer.
Laboratory facilities: Complete model shop and some electronic measuring equipment.
Library: 750 volumes.
Number of employees: 9.
Consulting services.

458
Grant Laboratories, 6020 Adeline St., Oakland.
President: Philip F. Grant.
Field of activity: Manufacturing chemists; insecticides, pharmaceuticals, agricultural specialties.
Research activity: Chemical specialties.
Research director: Philip F. Grant.
Laboratory facilities: Complete research and pilot plant.
Library: 1,000 volumes.
Number of employees: 9.

459
Heating Equipment Manufacturing Company, 600 Indiana St., San Francisco.
President: Frederick L. Anderson. General Manager: G. W. Cheney.
Field of activity: Gas fired heating.
Research activity: Higher efficiency in gas fired furnaces and heating equipment for domestic uses.
Research director: E. J. Harris.
Number of employees: 60.
Consulting services.

460
Hercules Powder Company, Hercules.
President: A. E. Forster. Plant Manager: E. St. P. Bellinger.
Field of activity: Explosives and synthetic ammonia.
Research activity: Control and process service.
Research director: John E. Riley, Technical Supervisor.
Laboratory facilities: Control laboratory and process development connected with manufacturing facilities.
Number of employees: 315.

461
Hewlett-Packard Company, 275 Page Mill Road, Palo Alto.
President: David Packard. Vice-President: Wm. R. Hewlett.
Field of activity: Electronic test equipment.
Research activity: Development of electronic test and measuring equipment and development of new measurement techniques.
Research director: Bernard M. Oliver.
Laboratory facilities: Complete electronic measuring equipment; standards laboratory and complete environmental test facilities.
Library: 1,000 volumes.
Number of employees: 770.

462
Hexcel Products Co., 951 - 61st St., Oakland.
President: Roger C. Steele. Executive Vice-President: Kenneth M. Holland.
Field of activity: Low density honeycomb core materials for structural sandwich application.
Research activity: Development and testing of low density sandwich core materials; testing of finished sandwich structures; development and testing of structural adhesives.
Research director: Kenneth M. Holland.
Laboratory facilities: Tinius Olsen testing machine—60,000 lbs. capacity; Dillon testing machine—10,000 lbs. capacity; facilities for testing at elevated temperatures up to 1000°F.; hydraulic press, 20 ton capacity; 1500°F. muffle furnace.
Library: 200 volumes.
Number of employees: 175.
Consulting services.

463
Hird Chemical Refining Corporation, 2081 Bay Road, Palo Alto.
President: Ralph C. Hird. Secretary: V. Cary.
Field of activity: Solvent recovery, recovery of waste chemicals, recovery of industrial waste.
Research activity: Recovery of waste metals, chemicals, and solvents.
Research director: R. C. Hird.
Laboratory facilities: Analytical laboratory; pilot plant.
Library: 300 volumes.
Number of employees: 10.
Consulting services.

464
Huggins Laboratories, Inc., 711 Hamilton St., Menlo Park.
President: R. A. Huggins. Secretary: M. T. Huggins.
Field of activity: Microwave vacuum tubes.
Research activity: Traveling wave tubes; backward wave oscillators.
Research director: L. A. Roberts.
Laboratory facilities: Metal and glass working equipment, plus necessary auxiliary equipment associated with a vacuum tube laboratory.
Library: 250 volumes.
Number of employees: 25.
Consulting services.

465
Industrial Minerals & Chemical Company, 836 Gilman St., Berkeley 10.
President: Louis R. Moretti. Vice-President: W. S. Cowgill.
Field of activity: Non-metallic minerals.
Research activity: Utility of newly discovered non-metallic minerals.
Research director: L. R. Moretti.
Library: 100 volumes.
Number of employees: 30.
Consulting services.

466
International Business Machines Corporation, 99 Notre Dame Ave., San Jose.
President: T. J. Watson, Jr. Manager, San Jose Laboratory: R. B. Johnson.
Field of activity: Data processing equipment.
Research activity: EDPM business machines; electronic and electro-mechanical components.
Research director: R. B. Johnson.
Laboratory facilities: General electronic instruments.
Library: 1,200 volumes.
Number of employees: 162.

467
Jacuzzi Bros., Inc., 5327 Jacuzzi Ave., Richmond.
Vice-President and General Manager: C. Jacuzzi. Production Manager: G. Jacuzzi.
Field of activity: Agricultural, industrial, and domestic pumping equipment.
Research activity: Pumping machinery.
Research director: F. M. Nash.
Laboratory facilities: Hydraulic laboratory for routine and specialized testing of pumps, ejectors, etc.
Number of employees: 300.

468
Jennings Radio Mfg. Corporation, 970 McLaughlin Ave., San Jose.
President: Jo Emmett Jennings. Vice-President and General Manager: Calvin K. Townsend.
Field of activity: Vacuum electronic components for high-voltage applications.
Research activity: Development of vacuum components; research on high-current and voltage interruption in a vacuum.
Research director: Lewis B. Steward.
Laboratory facilities: Glass-working, furnace-brazing, and evacuation equipment with high-voltage test facilities including a 1,200,000-volt impulse generator and 10,000 kva available for testing development models of vacuum switches.
Number of employees: 210.
Consulting services.

469
Johnson-Williams, Inc., 2625 Park Blvd., Palo Alto.
President: Oliver W. Johnson. Secretary-Treasurer: Philip S. Williams.
Field of activity: Instrumentation for gas analysis by electrical methods.
Research activity: Behavior of combustible gases and vapors, primarily from safety standpoint; instruments for detection of such materials by electrical methods.
Research director: Kenneth W. Johnson.
Laboratory facilities: Facilities and equipment for making known gas or vapor mixtures and testing them for explosibility. Electrical measuring instruments for use in instrument development.
Library: 30 volumes.
Number of employees: 15.
Consulting services.

470
Kaiser Aircraft and Electronics Corporation, 1924 Broadway, Oakland.
President: Clay P. Bedford. Vice-President: W. A. Cannon.
Field of activity: Aircraft and electronics.
Research activity: Cathode ray tubes and related electronic circuits.
Research director: William Ross Aiken.
Laboratory facilities: West Coast Electronics Laboratory, 850 San Antonio Road, Palo Alto.
Number of employees: 950.

471
Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corporation, 1924 Broadway, Oakland.
President: Henry J. Kaiser. Vice-President and General Manager: D. A. Rhoades.
Field of activity: Alumina and aluminum metal; magnesia and basic refractories.
Research activity: Metallurgy of aluminum metal and its alloys; production of alumina and aluminum products; production of magnesia and magnesia products; reduction of alumina to aluminum; basic refractories.
Research director: R. E. Knight.
Laboratory facilities: At Permanente: pilot plant facilities including a 10,000 ampere reduction cell. At Milpitas: pilot plant facilities for production of new refractory products.
Library: 400 volumes.
Number of employees: 760.

472
Kaiser Engineers, Division of Henry J. Kaiser Company, 1924 Broadway, Oakland.
President: Henry J. Kaiser. Vice-President and General Manager: George Havas.
Field of activity: Architect, engineer, contractor services in the fields of heavy construction; steel, aluminum, hydro and steam power generation; petroleum and petrochemicals, nuclear energy, water supply and waste disposal, mining, dams, tunnels, cement, materials handling, light and heavy manufacturing plants.
Fields of research: Atomic energy; oxygen converter steel; operations research.

Research directors: P. D. Bush, atomic energy; C. R. Austin, oxygen converter steel.
Library: 4,000 volumes.
Number of employees: 4,000.
Consulting services.

473
Kaiser Gypsum Company, 1924 Broadway, Oakland.
President: Henry J. Kaiser. Vice-President and General Manager: Claude E. Harper.
Field of activity: Building materials.
Research activity: Industrial product and process improvement; development of new and improved gypsum products.
Research director: Manvel C. Dailey.
Laboratory facilities: Standard physical and chemical testing equipment. Research laboratory located in Redwood City.
Library: 100 volumes.
Number of employees: 900.

474
Kraftile Company, P. O. Box 907, Niles.
President: C. W. Kraft. Secretary-Treasurer: J. A. McDonald.
Field of activity: Structural clay products.
Research activity: Clay bodies and glaze improvement; new product development.
Research director: Alfred Wild.
Laboratory facilities: Transverse breaking machine; "Synchro-Lectric" viscometer; high pressure autoclave.
Library: 100 volumes.
Number of employees: 70.

475
Krenz, Oscar, Incorporated, 6th St. and Ashby Ave., Berkeley.
President: Walter R. Krenz. Vice-President: Lester A. Blair.
Field of activity: Alloy and alloy steel processing equipment; process design for food and distilling industries.
Research activity: Food and chemical processing, with particular emphasis on concentration, heat transfer, and processing of heat-sensitive materials.
Research director: R. L. Nowlin.
Number of employees: 60.
Consulting services.

476
Land-Air, Inc., Instrument and Electronic Division, Building 711, Oakland International Airport, Oakland 14.
President: S. J. Solomon. Executive Vice-President: Martin T. Dyke.
Field of activity: Avionics and electronic engineering.
Research activity: Time signal generators; sub-miniature airborne power supplies and FM and AM radio receivers; synchronous control circuits; digital cinetheodolites; cinetheodolite, data cameras.
Research director: Warren H. Hammer.
Library: 100 volumes.
Number of employees: 30.
Consulting services.

477
Lenkurt Electric Co., 1105 County Road, San Carlos.
President: L. G. Erickson. Executive Vice-President: Kurt E. Appert.
Field of activity: Multi-channel telephone and telegraph carrier and microwave systems; allied electronic products.
Research activity: Telephone and telegraph carrier and microwave equipment.
Research director: R. S. Caruthers, Chief Development Engineer.
Laboratory facilities: Microwave and large circuit design laboratory.
Library: 900 volumes.
Number of employees: 1,000.

478
Leslie Salt Co., 505 Beach St., San Francisco.
President: Sheldon Allen. Vice-President: J. C. Buchen.
Field of activity: Production and marketing of salt.
Research activity: Large-scale algae culture.
Laboratory facilities: Quality control laboratory located at Newark.
Number of employees: 400.

479
Levinthal Electronic Products, Inc., 2821 Fair Oaks Ave., Redwood City.
President: Elliott Levinthal. Vice-President: Albert J. Morris.
Field of activity: Radar and microwave equipment; medical instruments; radiation instruments; applied physics.
Research activity: Research in microwave transmitters, medical instrumentation, nuclear radiation detection, nuclear resonance.
Research directors: Albert J. Morris, microwave and medical electronics. Elliott Levinthal, applied physics. Wesley J. Van Sciver, radiation detection.
Laboratory facilities: Furnaces for growth of scintillation crystals. Machinery for production of variable inductors and IF transformers with special stability. Special medical and electronic test devices.
Library: 250 volumes.
Number of employees: 35.
Consulting services.

480
Lindsey Plastics Corporation, 133 S. Linden Ave., South San Francisco.
President: Harvey Lindsey. Vice-President: Richard Lindsey.
Field of activity: Plastic enamel coatings, corrosion control release coatings, applications of "Teflon" and other fluorocarbon enamels.
Research activity: Investigation of new applications for high-temperature inert enamels.
Research director: Robert S. Deal.
Laboratory facilities: Spraying equipment, ovens, and related machinery.
Number of employees: 5.
Consulting services.

481
Little, Arthur D., Inc., 114 Sansome St., San Francisco 4.
President: Earl P. Stevenson. Manager West Coast Office: Christian J. Matthew.
Field of activity: Industrial research and engineering.
Research activity: Chemistry, physics, biology, food technology, chemical engineering, mechanical engineering, metallurgy, operations research.
Laboratory facilities: Small chemical research laboratory, analytical laboratory, and pilot plant facility.
Number of employees: 25.
Consulting services.

482
Marchant Calculators, Inc., 1475 Powell St., Oakland 8.
President: Edgar B. Jessup. Vice-President, Manufacturing: Walter Kassebohm.
Field of activity: Automatic electric calculating machines, electronic computers, and integrated data processing systems.
Research activity: Calculators, their functional and constructional improvement; improvement of their components, and manufacture of equipment for building and testing them.
Research director: Harold T. Avery, Vice-President, Engineering.
Laboratory facilities: Equipment for building and testing mechanical and electrical equipment.
Library: 3,000 volumes.
Number of employees: 1,400.

483
Masson, Paul, Inc., 717 Market St., San Francisco.
President: John F. O'Connell. Vice-President: Otto E. Meyer.
Field of activity: Growing, making, bottling, and selling of wines, vermouth, champagnes, and brandy.
Research activity: Grape growing, wine making, wine chemistry.
Research director: Leo Berti.
Laboratory facilities: Wine chemistry laboratory, Pierce Road, Saratoga.
Library: 900 volumes.
Number of employees: 120.
Consulting services.

484
McCormick & Co., Inc., Schilling Division, 301 Second St., San Francisco 7.
President: C. P. McCormick. San Francisco representative: R. C. Crampton.
Field of activity: Spices, extracts, coffee, and tea.
Research activity: Quality control.
Laboratory facilities: Equipment for testing and controlling quality of manufactured spices, extracts, and coffee.
Number of employees: 550.

485
Merck & Co., Inc., Marine Magnesium Division, East Grand Ave., South San Francisco.
President: James J. Kerrigan. Director: D. H. McCondichie.
Field of activity: Magnesium salts.
Research activity: Applications for magnesium compounds and modification of magnesium compounds with particular emphasis on industrial applications.
Research director: L. F. Heneghan.
Laboratory facilities: Chemical laboratory equipment and complete rubber compounding laboratory containing all equipment necessary for rubber compounding and evaluation.
Number of employees: 60.

486
Microchemical Specialties Co., 1834 University Ave., Berkeley.
Manager: C. E. Camenson.
Field of activity: Microchemical apparatus (plastic, glass, metal, electronics); microchemical analysis, organic and inorganic.
Research activity: Microchemical apparatus.
Research directors: C. E. Camenson, T. M. Tracewell.
Number of employees: 32.
Consulting services.

487
Mountain Copper Co., Ltd., The, 100 Mococo Rd., Martinez.
General Manager: L. T. Kett.
Field of activity: Copper chemicals, fertilizers, pesticides, and by-products of pyritic ore.
Research director: C. P. Matzinger.
Laboratory facilities: Inorganic analytical laboratory.
Number of employees: 40.

488
National Canners Association, Western Research Laboratory, 1950 Sixth St., Berkeley 10.
President: William U. Hudson. Executive Secretary: Carlos Campbell.
Field of activity: Research laboratory for trade association of the canning industry.
Research activity: Food preservation and the production of raw products suitable for canning.
Research director: Ira I. Somers, Associate Director, Western Research Laboratory.
Laboratory facilities: Laboratories for chemical analysis and bacteriological investigations, Beckman Spectrophotometer, colorimeters, viscosimeters; small-scale canning equipment; apparatus for thermal death time determinations on bacterial spores and for studying heating rates in canned foods.
Library: 1,350 volumes.
Number of employees: 25.
Consulting services.

489
Pabco Products Inc., 475 Brannan St., San Francisco.
President: W. L. Keady.
Field of activity: Building materials, linoleum, felt base floor covering.
Research activity: Building materials, linoleum, floor coverings.
Research director: R. H. Lester. Technical director: H. E. Kaiser.
Library: 1,950 volumes.
Number of employees: 1,300.

490
Pacific Chemical Laboratories, 350 Clay St., San Francisco.
Director: Benno Lowy.
Field of activity: Analytical and commercial chemistry.
Research activity: Foods and beverages, fermentation; water correction; toxicology; cosmetics.
Library: 1,000 volumes.
Number of employees: 6.
Consulting services.

491
Pacific Coast Engineering Co., Oak and Clement Sts., Alameda.
President: Will C. Hall. Vice-President: C. D. Ramsden.
Field of activity: Contract manufacturers, engineers, fabricators, machinists.
Research activity: Ship model testing.
Research director: Don Faber.
Number of employees: 250.
Consulting services.

492
Pacific Foundry Company, Ltd., 3100 - 19th St., San Francisco.
President: H. J. Hartley. Vice-President: W. Schroeder.
Field of activity: Production of corrosion and heat-resistant castings; production of ore roasting multiple hearth furnaces.
Research activity: Metallurgy, ore processing.
Research directors: H. C. Wegner, metallurgy; J. Wissing and C. Rankin, furnace engineers.
Laboratory facilities: Chemical and metallurgical laboratory; multiple hearth ore roasting laboratory furnace and facilities.
Library: 500 volumes.
Number of employees: 250.
Consulting services.

493
Pacific Gas and Electric Company, 245 Market St., San Francisco.
President: N. R. Sutherland.
Field of activity: Public utility.
Research activity: Testing of equipment used in providing gas and electric service; research in corrosion and protective coatings.
Research director: W. N. Lindblad.
Laboratory facilities: High voltage D.C. equipment for testing insulation. Facilities located at 4245 Hollis St., Emeryville.
Library: 200 volumes.
Number of employees: 18,000.

494
Pacific Paint & Varnish Co., 4th and Cedar Sts., Berkeley 10.
President: S. U. Greenberg. Vice-President: W. T. Butner.
Field of activity: Enamels, paints, and varnishes.
Research activity: Research and development of enamels, paints, and varnishes, specialized industrial coatings, and synthetic resins.
Research director: E. A. Gauger.

Laboratory facilities: Hunter reflectometer, accelerated weathering apparatus, salt-fog cabinet, 100% humidity cabinet; special equipment for application, fabrication, and testing of coatings for food containers.
Library: 100 volumes.
Number of employees: 215.

495
Pacific Vegetable Oil Corp., 62 Townsend St., San Francisco.
President: B. T. Rocca.
Field of activity: Vegetable oils, animal and marine fats; oil bearing materials and their by-products.
Research activity: Drying oils; industrial application of all vegetable, animal, and marine oils; agronomy of oil bearing materials; oil cake meals in animal feeds.
Research director: John A. Kneeland.
Laboratory facilities: Laboratory located in Richmond.
Library: 1,000 volumes.
Number of employees: 150.

496
Paint Research Laboratory of Harlan Associates, 11 Duboce Ave., San Francisco 3.
President: Harold R. Harlan.
Field of activity: Paint formulating, testing, evaluation; drawing and enforcing painting specifications. Investigation into causes of paint failures and determination of corrective action required.
Research activity: Drying oils; synthetic resins.
Research director: Harold R. Harlan, Jr.
Laboratory facilities: Complete paint and varnish manufacturing in miniature. All paint and varnish testing equipment including that for accelerated weathering, abrasion, washability, wax slipperiness tests (Jones and Sigler instruments). Research equipment includes spectrographic equipment for infrared, ultra-violet, visible reflectance arc-and-spark spectrograph for analytical work. X-Ray diffraction equipment for pigment crystal research.
Library: 1,000 volumes.
Number of employees: 7.
Consulting services.

497
Palo Alto Engineering Company, 440 Olive Ave., Palo Alto.
President: W. Noel Eldred. Secretary: W. F. Cavier.
Field of activity: Transformers.
Research activity: Transformer design.
Laboratory facilities: Complete set of standard meters, bridges, etc.
Number of employees: 44.

498
Pelton Water Wheel Company, The 2929 Nineteenth St., San Francisco.
President: McClure Kelley. Vice-President and General Manager: W. F. Boyle.
Field of activity: Hydraulic turbines, governors, hydraulic valves.
Research activity: Hydraulic.
Research director: I. M. White, Manager of Engineering.
Laboratory facilities: Complete hydraulic laboratory for the testing of hydraulic turbines and valves.
Library: 1,000 volumes.
Number of employees: 250.
Consulting services.

499
Philadelphia Quartz Company of California, 6th and Grayson Sts., Berkeley 10.
President: A. W. Elkinton.
Field of activity: Heavy chemicals.
Research activity: Applications for soluble silicates.
Research director: T. K. Cleveland.
Laboratory facilities: Limited facilities for tests on detergency and adhesives.
Library: 600 volumes.
Number of employees: 75.
Consulting services.

500
Radiant Heat & Cooling Corporation, 795 Kifer Road, Santa Clara.
President: Ellis A. Rother. Vice-President: Steven B. Anderson.
Field of activity: Domestic heating.
Research activity: Personal comfort, boiler, furnace, and air conditioning; controls for these items.
Research director: Walter A. Long.
Laboratory facilities: Warm wall temperature test booth and other equipment for measurement of CO_2, CO, recovery rate of heat, pressure loss, and associated tests.
Library: 100 volumes.
Number of employees: 60.
Consulting services.

501
Reichhold Chemicals, Inc., 120 S. Linden Ave., South San Francisco.
President: C. J. O'Connor. Vice-President: M. W. Reece.
Field of activity: Synthetic resins, chemical colors, industrial adhesives, plasticizers, phenol, formaldehyde, glycerine, phthalic, anhydride, maleic anhydride, sodium sulfate, sodium sulfite, pentaerythritol, pentachlorophenol.
Research activity: Synthetic resins (alkyd, phenolic, urea, vinyl, melamine, styrene, and acrylic type); pigmented coatings.
Research director: Herbert L. Wampner.
Laboratory facilities: Facilities for paint testing and evaluation and for grinding, applying, and examining coatings; facilities for foundry resins testing and polymerization, esterification, and condensation reaction studies.
Library: 100 volumes.
Number of employees: 70.
Consulting services.

502
Relaxizor, Inc., 134 N. B St., San Mateo.
President: Burton Skiles. Vice-President: William J. Browner.
Field of activity: Electronic muscle contracting apparatus.
Research activity: Nerve impulse machines.
Research director: William J. Browner.
Laboratory facilities: Hi-amplification electronic equipment; test equipment and metal shop for sample production.
Number of employees: 28.
Consulting services.

503
Remler Company, Gray Scientific Division, 2101 Bryant St., San Francisco 10.
President: R. C. Gray. Vice-President, Manufacturing: A. R. Ogilvie.
Field of activity: Electronics.
Research activity: Radio, radar, vacuum tubes, and nuclear particle accelerators.
Research director: Winfield W. Salisbury.
Laboratory facilities: Signal generators, oscilloscopes, meters, and machine shop facilities.
Library: 1,000 volumes.
Number of employees: 125.
Consulting services.

504
Rheem Manufacturing Company, 800 Chesley Ave., Richmond 4.
President: R. S. Rheem. Executive Vice-President: D. L. Rheem.
Field of activity: Steel and fibre shipping containers; hot water heaters, water softeners, forced air and space heating appliances; air conditioning appliances; gas ranges; clothes dryers; storage tanks; automotive parts; aircraft and ammunition components.

Research activity: Plumbing and heating appliances; steel and fibre shipping containers; ordnance and aircraft.
Research director: L. Price, Jr.
Laboratory facilities: Facilities for developing and testing.
Number of employees: 1,525.

505
S & W Fine Foods, Inc., 155 Berry St., San Francisco.
President: Adrien J. Falk. Secretary: Frank A. Beeton.
Field of activity: Food canning, processing and distribution.
Research activity: New product, methods, quality control, food technology.
Research directors: Adolph R. Asti, Quality Control Director and Food Technologist; Richard Mathews, Research Chemist.
Laboratory facilities: Principal laboratory at Laurel and Heller Streets, Redwood City. Two commercial canned foods laboratories: one devoted to quality control, the other to new products research.
Library: 100 volumes.
Number of employees: 1,000.
Consulting services.

506
Schlage Lock Co., 2201 Bayshore Blvd., San Francisco.
President: Marron Kendrick. Vice-President: D. E. Golden.
Field of activity: Door locks, door closers, and miscellaneous builders' hardware.
Research activity: Kinematics, mechanics, friction, protective coatings.
Research director: Ernest L. Schlage.
Laboratory facilities: Experimental and model shop; chemical laboratory; mechanical testing laboratory.
Library: 200 volumes.
Number of employees: 1,700.

507
Spreckels Russell Dairy Co., Ltd., 1717 Mission St., San Francisco.
President: E. Mogensen. Vice-President: C. K. Katon.
Field of activity: Dairy.
Research activity: Milk and ice cream.
Laboratory facilities: Dairy products laboratory located at 4401 18th St., San Francisco.
Number of employees: 240.

508
Spreckels Sugar Company, 2 Pine St., San Francisco.
President: Charles de Bretteville. Vice-President in charge of operations: F. H. Ballou, Jr.
Field of activity: Sugar and its by-products.
Research activity: Processing and development of beet-sugar and sugar-beet by-products; agricultural research-plant nutrition, genetics.
Research directors: R. A. McGinnis, factory research; R. J. Johnson, agricultural research.
Laboratory facilities: Located at Woodland. Laboratory equipped with analytical, bench, and pilot equipment. Greenhouses, cold storage chambers, experimental farms.
Library: 800 volumes.
Number of employees: 2,500, during operating season.

509
Standard Oil Company of California, 225 Bush St., San Francisco.
Chairman of the Board: R. G. Follis. President: T. S. Petersen.
Field of activity: Petroleum.
Research activity: Petroleum and allied fields.
Research director: A. L. Lyman, President, California Research Corporation.
Laboratory facilities: Principal laboratory facilities for the company are the California Research Corporation facilities at Richmond.
Number of employees: 35,000.

510
Stanford Research Institute, Menlo Park.
Director: J. E. Hobson. Executive Associate Director: George R. Herbert, Jr.
Field of activity: Applied research in the physical sciences, economics and engineering and allied fields, for industry and government.
Research activity: Physical sciences, including chemistry, chemical engineering, metallurgy, ceramics, physics, air pollution, and biology; economics, including social sciences research; engineering; high explosives phenomena.
Research director: E. Finley Carter.
Laboratory facilities: Ion-scattering analyzer, radiation engineering (Cobalt 60 source), mass Spectrometer, antenna pattern measuring range, high explosives testing facility, air pollution environmental testing chambers, laboratory animal colony, computer facility.
Number of employees: 1,150.

511
Stauffer Chemical Company, 636 California St., San Francisco.
Chairman of the Board: Christian de Guigne. President: Hans Stauffer.
Field of activity: Industrial and agricultural chemicals.
Research activity: Industrial and agricultural chemicals and related fields.
Research director: Chester L. Arnold.
Laboratory facilities: Research facilities located in Richmond and Mountain View. Richmond Laboratory (1375 South 47th St.) includes extensive pilot plant facilities. Mountain View facilities (1496 East Fremont Rd.) include greenhouses and acreage for large-scale testing of agricultural chemicals.
Library: 2,500 volumes.
Number of employees: 475.

512
Stayner Corporation, 2100 Ward St., Berkeley 5.
President: Ralph R. Pletcher. Vice-President: L. W. Varblow.
Field of activity: Pharmaceuticals.
Research activity: Drugs for medicinal use.
Research director: Willis Jennings.
Laboratory facilities: Equipment for manufacturing compressed or coated tablets, capsules, liquids and ointments.
Library: 150 volumes.
Number of employees: 50.
Consulting services.

513
Sylvania Electric Products, Inc. (Microwave Tube Laboratory), 500 Evelyn Ave., Mountain View.
Manager: Gerald C. Rich.
Field of activity: Traveling wave tubes, klystrons, microwave devices.
Research activity: Design and development of low-noise, low-power, medium-power, high-power pulse traveling wave tubes, backward wave oscillators, reflex and two cavity Klystrons, interdigital structures, microwave devices.
Laboratory facilities: Complete facility for the manufacture and control of vacuum tubes. Equipment also available for environmental evaluation of all such items.
Number of employees: 210.

514
Temescal Metallurgical Corporation, 1415 South 47th St., Richmond.

President: Hugh R. Smith, Jr. Secretary: Milton B. Walkup.
Field of activity: High-vacuum engineering and development.
Research activity: High-vacuum research; vacuum-melted metals and alloys; metallized coatings.
Research director: Charles d'A. Hunt.
Laboratory facilities: 20 lb., 200 lb., 1,000 lb. high-vacuum furnaces (operating below 0.1 microns), necessary vacuum gauges; vacuum and metallurgical testing equipment.
Library: 400 volumes.
Number of employees: 25.
Consulting services.

515
Tide Water Associated Oil Company, 79 New Montgomery St., San Francisco.
President: D. T. Staples. Vice-President in charge of Manufacturing: H. Y. Hyde.
Field of activity: Production, transportation, manufacture, and marketing of oil.
Research activity: Petroleum processing.
Research director: C. K. Viland.
Laboratory facilities: Research laboratory, located at Avon, equipped for general research work on petroleum and its products.
Library: 2,800 volumes.
Number of employees: 9,000.

516
Timber Engineering Company of California, 4314 California St., San Francisco.
President: A. C. Horner. Secretary-Treasurer: W. C. Wallace.
Field of activity: Testing, promotion, and distribution of lumber and fastenings therefor.
Research activity: Fastenings for lumber.
Research director: A. C. Horner.
Number of employees: 9.
Consulting services.

517
Tinsley Laboratories, Inc., 2526 Grove St., Berkeley.
President: D. A. Jenkins. Secretary: H. I. Morrison.
Field of activity: Optical engineering.
Research activity: Optics.
Research director: Gustav Fassin.
Laboratory facilities: Mechanical and optical equipment capable of manufacturing scientific apparatus.
Number of employees: 15.
Consulting services.

518
Tracerlab, Inc., Western Division, 2030 Wright Ave., Richmond 3.
President: C. W. Tittle. Business Manager: John Trujillo.
Field of activity: Nuclear instruments and radiochemistry.
Research activity: Nuclear instrumentation; preparation of radiochemicals; radiotracer applications.
Research directors: Abel DeHaan, Jr., Chief Chemist; Jerome Kohl, Chief Engineer.
Laboratory facilities: Laboratory includes a separate radiation wing divided into "hot" and "semi-hot" areas for working with large amounts of radioactivity. This wing is physically detached from the main building and contains storage facilities, hoods, working areas, and remote handling equipment for isotopes of all kinds. Facilities and instruments are available for the absolute determination of any radioisotope. These instruments include alpha, beta, and gamma spectrometers; four-pi counters; liquid scintillation counters; and methane-end-window proportional counters.
Library: 350 volumes.
Number of employees: 95.
Consulting services.

519
Tri-Valley Packing Association, 240 Battery St., San Francisco.
President: Edgar Jackson. Secretary: L. Lehtin.
Field of activity: Canning, fruits and vegetables.
Research activity: Production and harvesting of agricultural products; production methods and controls.
Research director: N. E. Lilies.
Laboratory facilities: Laboratory of food technology in San Jose.
Library: 50 volumes.
Number of employees: 250 to 2,200 (seasonal).

520
United Airlines, Inc., San Francisco International Airport, San Francisco.
President: W. A. Patterson. Vice-President, Engineering and Maintenance Administration: John A. Herlihy.
Field of activity: Commercial transportation of passengers, mail, express, and freight.
Research activity: Study of future types of aircraft and propulsive means for same; tests of current aircraft and recommendations for new; development of special equipment for service aircraft.
Research directors: Raymond Kelly, Superintendent of Technical Development; William Mentzer, General Manager of Engineering.
Laboratory facilities: Laboratory and testing facilities.
Number of employees: 3,900.

521
Varian Associates, 611 Hansen Way, Palo Alto.
President: Russell H. Varian. Executive Vice-President: H. Myrl Stearns.
Field of activity: Microwave vacuum tubes (klystrons, traveling wave tubes, backward wave oscillators), radio-frequency spectrometers (including nuclear magnetic resonance), microwave electronic systems.
Research activity: Vacuum tubes, especially microwave tubes and high power klystrons; radio-frequency spectroscopy, including nuclear magnetic resonance, electron paramagnetic resonance, microwave absorption; magnetic field measurement; magnetoabsorption; linear electron accelerators.
Research directors: Sigurd F. Varian, Vice-President, Engineering. Robert L. Jepsen, Director of Research.
Laboratory facilities: Equipment for design, construction, test, and analysis of microwave vacuum tubes and tube components. Laboratories for high resolution and variable frequency nuclear magnetic resonance spectroscopy, electron paramagnetic resonance spectroscopy, microwave spectroscopy, magnetic field measurement, magnetoabsorption.
Library: 400 volumes.
Number of employees: 750.
Consulting services.

522
Victor Equipment Company, 844 Folsom St., San Francisco 7.
President: L. W. Stettner. Secretary-Treasurer: W. S. Fulwider.
Field of activity: Flame welding and cutting equipment; medical gas therapy equipment; high-pressure regulators; high-pressure gas discharging manifolds; hardsurfacing alloy rods; cobalt and tungsten castings.
Research activity: High-pressure gases; flame welding and cutting; medical gas therapy.
Research director: Ray Zimmer.
Laboratory facilities: Range of rotometers for testing volume gas equipment 0-30,000 c.f.h.; facilities for testing oxygen or compressed air up to 2400 p.s.i.; monometers for testing up to 100" water column or 0-20 p.s.i. mercury; high-pressure air available for static testing up to 30,000 p.s.i.
Number of employees: 325.
Consulting services.

523
Wallace, William, Co., Old County Road, Belmont.
President: Alan Kinkead. Secretary: H. V. Scott.
Field of activity: Metalbestos gas vent pipe, sheet metal products.
Research activity: Theory of venting; design and development of venting products; development of vent design data.
Research director: Richard L. Stone.
Laboratory: Vent pipe test structures; UL type flue gas producers: electronic indicating and recording potentiometers.
Library: 100 volumes.
Number of employees: 300.
Consulting services.

524
Webster-Ratliff Company, 593 Market St., San Francisco.
Partners: R. H. Webster, Bob Ratliff. Manager: William K. OpDyke.
Field of activity: Photo-copy equipment.
Research activity: Research and development of sensitized photo-copy paper and chemicals and of photo-copy equipment and the uses to which it can be put by industry, government, academic circles, etc.
Research directors: William K. OpDyke, R. H. Webster.
Number of employees: 25.
Consulting services.

525
Wells Manufacturing Company, 220 Ninth St., San Francisco.
President: George T. Wells. Secretary: Samuel Jacobs.
Field of activity: Industrial heating devices, commercial electric cooking equipment, automatic heat sealing equipment.
Research activity: Engineering and development of electrical products and heat sealing equipment.
Research directors: George Wells, Edwin Fichtner.
Laboratory facilities: General plant.
Number of employees: 75.
Consulting services.

526
Western Asbestos Co., 675 Townsend St., San Francisco.
President: C. B. Purcell. Secretary-Treasurer: J. J. Kelly.
Field of activity: Industrial insulation; acoustical and top daylighting.
Research activity: Top daylighting.
Research directors: E. J. Ahern, insulation; F. J. Taforo, acoustical; and F. H. Logan, top daylighting.
Number of employees: 150.
Consulting services.

527
Western Gear Corporation, 1035 Folsom St., San Francisco.
President: Thomas J. Bannan. Regional Manager: William Hoard.
Field of activity: Gears, gear drives, and special machinery.
Research activity: Electrical and mechanical power transmission.
Research director: John K. Morris.
Laboratory facilities: Heat, cold, high-altitude and salt spray test chambers; all types of life test equipment; tensile test, physical and chemical analysis equipment. Second plant in Belmont.
Library: 2,000 volumes.
Number of employees: 500.
Consulting services.

528
Westinghouse Electric Corporation, 410 Bush St., San Francisco.
President: Gwilyn A. Price. Manager of Sunnyvale Plant: George F. Gayer.
Field of activity: Electrical, steam, and mechanical equipment.
Research activity: Metals control; analysis of oils, insulating materials, varnishes, and finishes used in the manufacture of electrical apparatus.
Research director: Joseph H. Cox, Manager of Engineering.
Laboratory facilities: Located in Sunnyvale. Materials laboratory contains complete metallographic equipment including 1/25 of a million volt X-ray, radiographic apparatus, and other equipment designed to test the hardness, tensile strength, etc. of metals. Companion chemical laboratory. Facilities of quality control or gauge laboratory employed for precision measurements involving dimensions down to 10 millionths of an inch. Optical comparator and apparatus for checking gear hobbing equipment.
Number of employees: 2,600 in Sunnyvale.

Wetmore Hodges and Associates, Inc., Chestnut at Spring Sts., Redwood City.
President: Wetmore Hodges. Vice-President: C. E. Strobel.
Field of activity: Engineering research and development.
Research activity: Mechanical engineering, including heat power and heat transfer, electro-mechanical, hydraulics, automotive, and related phases of engineering.
Research director: Roy A. Hundley, Director of Engineering.
Laboratory facilities: Power absorption dynamometers, stationary and chassis; temperature control room, automotive vehicle analysis and measurement equipment.
Library: 500 volumes.
Number of employees: 125.
Consulting services.

U. S. Department of Agriculture, Agriculture Research Service, Western Utilization Research Branch, 800 Buchanan St., Albany 10.
Director: M. J. Copley.
Fields of research: Utilization of fruits and tree nuts; wheat and rice; wool and mohair; vegetables; poultry and eggs; sugar beets; alfalfa and other forage crops.
Current projects: Studies in progress on better ways of making plum, apricot, and prune concentrates to broaden their utilization possibilities; effects of temperature fluctuations upon frozen fruits, citrus concentrates, vegetables, and poultry products; frozen preservation of bread as a means of better utilizing wheat and other grains; determination of bloat-causative factors in alfalfa; preprocessing conditions for whole rice; new procedures for process control and for extracting the sugar from sugar beets; treatment to render wool more resistant to alkali and acid environments encountered in processing, and for better control of wool shrinkage during laundering; basic mechanisms of enzymatic and non-enzymatic changes in fruits and vegetables, particularly as related to changes in color, flavor, and texture characteristics; identification, isolation, and techniques for "locking in" chemical constituents responsible for flavor in various commodities; minimum amounts of irradiation treatments required to effect practical sterilization or pasteurization of fruit, vegetable, poultry, and egg products in their various commercial forms.
Laboratory facilities: Controlled-temperature rooms (temperatures range from —30°F. to elevated temperatures found in tropical climates); food processing laboratory, in which various agricultural products are frozen, dried, canned, and processed by experimental procedures under development; engineering laboratory; poultry shed; solvents storage.
Library: 10,000 bound volumes, plus equal number of pamphlets; 400 scientific, technical, and trade journals received; collection centers on chemistry, physics, engineering, and food technology.

601
U. S. Department of Agriculture, Forest Service, California Forest and Range Experiment Station, 347 Forestry Building, University of California, Berkeley.
Director: George M. Jemison.
Fields of research: Forest management, range management, forest genetics, watershed management, forest economics, soil-vegetation surveys, fire protection, forest insects, forest diseases, forest products utilization.
Current projects: Natural and artificial forestation, methods of timber cutting, timber growth and yield, tree breeding, brushland improvement, wild game habitat improvement, rotational grazing, snowpack management, streamflow, soil stabilization, vegetation-soil moisture relations, timber inventory and use, fire danger rating, combustion and ignition, use of fire, forest fire control, bark beetle and defoliator control, insect surveys, disease surveys, blister rust ecology, heart rot studies, lumber grade recovery, kiln drying .
Laboratory facilities: Experimental forests (Blacks Mountain, near Susanville; Stanislaus, near Pinecrest); San Joaquin experimental range (near O'Neals); hydrological laboratory (San Dimas Experimental Forest, near Glendora); forest genetics laboratory (near Placerville).
Library: Library maintained in cooperation with School of Forestry, University of California.

602
U. S. Department of Agriculture, Soil Conservation Service, Field Soil Correlation Office, 219 Post Office Building, Berkeley 1.
Director: William M. Johnson.
Fields of research: Soil morphology, genesis, classification and correlation, in the states of California, Arizona, Idaho, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, and Washington, and the Territory of Hawaii.
Current projects: Morphology, genesis and classification of selected soils; geographic distribution of specific soil types in nearly all parts of all the Western States and Territory of Hawaii.
Library: Complete set of soil survey reports for the seven Western States and published reports on soils of other parts of the United States and foreign countries.

603
U. S. Department of Commerce, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Seismological Field Survey, 14 Old Mint Building, San Francisco 3.
Director: Captain W. M. Gibson.
Technical director: William K. Cloud.
Field of research: Engineering seismology.
Current projects: Vibrations in epicentral areas of strong earthquakes; effects of earthquakes; vibrational characteristics of structures.
The Survey supervises a network of 46 strong-motion seismograph stations in western United States, as well as International Latitude Observatory at Ukiah.

604
U. S. Department of Commerce, Weather Bureau, Federal Office Building, San Francisco, San Francisco International Airport.
Director: R. Corday Counts, Jr.
Technical directors: R. F. Dale, Climatology, and D. L. Jorgensen, Meteorology.
Fields of research: Meteorology and climatology.
Current projects: Specific problems in weather forecasting.
Library: File of weather charts, surface and upper air; complete file of climatological information for California.

605
U. S. Department of the Army, Corps of Engineers, South Pacific Division Laboratory, Sausalito Base Yard, Sausalito.
Director: Chester B. Palmer.
Fields of research: Concrete testing, soils testing, chemical, and petrographic. Laboratory serves San Francisco, Sacramento, and Los Angeles districts of the Corps of Engineers. These districts encompass states of California, Nevada, Arizona, and Utah for military construction and, in addition, parts of Oregon, Wyoming, Idaho, and New Mexico for civil works construction.
Current projects: Facilities being utilized in Bay Area survey conducted by San Francisco District Engineers; hydraulic model of Bay Area, designed to reveal effect of various barrier plans and other physical changes, under construction (one of its purposes will be to test feasibility of salt water barriers in reclaiming valuable farmland from salinity pollution).
Library: 150 volumes of standards and specifications covering fields listed above.

606
U. S. Department of the Navy, Office of Naval Research, San Francisco Branch Office, 1000 Geary St., San Francisco 9.
Commanding Officer: Captain J. H. Rodgers.
Chief Scientist: G. F. W. Mulders.
Field of activity: Scientific administration of research projects in all fields of the natural and biological sciences.
Library: 1,200 volumes (reference works); special collection of 20,000 technical reports on research contracts of the Department of Defense; complete collection of ASTIA cards, i.e., abstract cards of all technical reports on Armed Services research contracts, including large number of microcards on which the documents themselves are reproduced.

607
U. S. Department of the Navy, U. S. Naval Radiological Defense Laboratory, San Francisco 24.
Commanding Officer and Director: Captain Robert A. Hinners.
Scientific Director: Paul C. Tompkins.
Radiological Medical Director: Captain A. R. Behnke.
Fields of research: Radiobiology, physiology, nuclear chemistry, nuclear physics, and operations research. Only laboratory in U. S. devoted solely to study of defense against harmful effects of radiations resulting from nuclear reactions and to development of means of preventing or minimizing hazards of those effects.
Current projects: Phenomenology of atomic bomb detonations; development of radiological counter-measures for atomic warfare; effects of radiation on biological systems; operations research in atomic warfare defense.
Laboratory facilities: Main building is a 6-story, concrete, windowless building (for maximum protection from possible atomic attack, more usable wall space, and reduced construction and maintenance costs). Equipment and facilities include a 2-Mev Van de Graaff generator; radiological instrumentation including monitoring equipment; radioactive isotope handling facilities; radiochemical analysis equipment; several climatic stimulating chambers, ranging from small 8-foot units to walk-in types, providing extremes in temperatures; high-intensity thermal carbon-arc sources; Cobalt-60 irradiator; spectrometers; calorimeters and radiometers; optical spectrograph; X-ray diffraction unit; electron microscope.
Library: 10,500 volumes; special collections include classified and unclassified research and development reports on effects of radiation, chemistry, solid state physics, biology, medicine, military applications of atomic energy, instruments and thermal radiation.

U. S. Department of the Interior, Fish and Wildlife Service, Ocean Research Laboratory, 450-B Jordan Hall, Stanford University.
Director: O. E. Sette.
Fields of research: Fishery fluctuations, oceanography, meteorology.
Current projects: Effects of meteorological and oceanographic conditions on the abundance and distribution of important commercial marine fishes.

609
U. S. Department of the Interior, Geological Survey (Pacific Coast Center), 4 Homewood Place, Menlo Park.
Geologist-in-Charge: David Gallagher.
Fields of research: All aspects of the geological sciences. In addition to serving as the Pacific Coast Center for the Survey, this office is also the headquarters for all Alaskan work.
Current projects: Projects under way in fields of mineral deposits, fuels, engineering geology, paleontology and stratigraphy, geophysics, and quality of water.
Laboratory facilities: Grinding and crushing laboratory; thin-section shop; photographic and photomicrographic facilities; chemistry laboratory; water analysis laboratory; X-ray diffraction and photospectrometry laboratory; paleontology and micropaleontology laboratories; petrography and photogeology laboratories.
Library: 18,000 volumes on geology and related sciences.

610
U. S. Department of the Interior, Bureau of Mines, Minerals Thermodynamics Experiment Station, 126 Hearst Mining Building, Berkeley 4.
Director: Kenneth K. Kelley.
Fields of research: Minerals thermodynamics.
Current projects: Low-temperature heat capacities; high-temperature heat contents; and heats of formation of metallurgical and ceramic substances.
Laboratory facilities: Low-temperature (50-298°K.) heat capacity calorimeter; high-temperature (298-1850°K.) heat content calorimeter; combustion calorimeter; hydrofluroic acid solution calorimeter; ordinary solvents solution calorimeter.
Library: 1,200 volumes; complete set of U. S. Bureau of Mines publications.

611
U. S. Department of the Interior, Bureau of Mines, Pacific Petroleum Experiment Station, 630 Sansome St., San Francisco.
Director: G. B. Shea.
Field of research: Petroleum drilling and production research.
Current projects: Well completion practices; determination of water content of oil-bearing rocks and other basic core data; identification of clay minerals in oil-reservoir rocks and in oil-well drilling; California oil reservoir performance; fundamental properties of California sands as related to secondary recovery; effect of free gas saturation on oil recovery by water flooding; effect of surface-active chemicals to increase oil recovery in water flooding; effect of water injection into a fault block of Wilmington Field.
Laboratory facilities: Oil well core analysis equipment; equipment for identifying and analyzing clays; oil well drilling fluid test equipment; apparatus for fluid flow tests through porous media.
Library: 6,000 volumes; special collections on petroleum development and production.

612
National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, Ames Aeronautical Laboratory, Moffett Field.
Director: Smith J. DeFrance.
Fields of research: Aerodynamics.
Current projects: Fundamental studies in aerodynamics with emphasis on higher speeds; major portion of projects are classified.
Laboratory facilities: 19 major wind tunnels, including world's largest.
Library: Scientific library on aerodynamics.

613
Veterans Administration Hospital, Palo Alto.
Manager: John J. Prusmack. Chairman of Hospital Research Committee: Roy S. Hubbs.
Fields of research: Psychiatry and related fields, including medicine, clinical psychology, and ethnology.
Current research projects: Evaluation of abstract behavior; group psychotherapy; protein fractions of cerebrospinal fluid; autonomic reactivity in schizophrenics under stress before and after treatment with reserpine; ritalin, a new stimulant; four new sedative drugs — rescinnamine and recanescine, pacatal and miltown; chlorpromazine as a lipotropic agent; determination of protein nitrogen; responses to the Mecholyl Tests in relation to prognosis in chronic schizophrenic patients.
Laboratory and library facilities: Medical and psychological laboratory facilities. Library maintains current and research collections in clinical psychiatry, psychoanalysis, and ancillary fields.

Special collections: Assorted gross specimens, predominantly neuropathological; large collection of histological preparations, including neuropathological.

614

California Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Plant Quarantine, 2 Agriculture Building, Embarcadero at Mission, San Francisco 5.

Director: C. H. Kinsley.

Technical director: Robert W. L. Potts.

Field of research: Identification of insects taken in quarantine.

Laboratory facilities: Laboratory for systematic identification of insects, particularly of foreign quarantine pests.

Library: 1,500 volumes.

615

California State Division of Mines, Ferry Building, San Francisco 11.

Director: Olaf P. Jenkins.

Fields of research: Mineral industries of California; mineral resources; mining operations; basic geology.

Laboratory facilities: Laboratory for identification of rocks and minerals; petrographic microscopes; facilities for studying polished ore surfaces; differential thermal analysis equipment; small electric furnace.

Library: Technical library, including mining, geology, mineralogy, mineral dressing, metallurgy, chemistry, mineral economics, petrology, petroleum, coal, and non-metallic minerals. Open to the public.

616

California State Department of Public Health, Viral and Rickettsial Disease Laboratory, 2002 Acton St., Berkeley 2.

Director: Edwin H. Lennette.

Fields of research: Viral and rickettsial diseases.

Current projects: Encephalitis, poliomyelitis, viral respiratory disease.

Laboratory facilities: Six laboratories for tissue culture work; two serologic laboratories; animal rooms.

617

California Regional Water Pollution Control Board, San Francisco Bay Region, 364 - 14th St., Oakland.

Chairman: John S. Longwell. Executive Officer: John B. Harrison.

Fields of research: Investigations covering quality of water in San Francisco Bay; character of sewage and industrial wastes being discharged therein and effects of the substances on marine life in the Bay; effect of these discharges on various beneficial uses of the water.

Current investigations: Fisheries and waterfowl resources of Bay Region; sampling of water conditions south of Dumbarton Bridge and adjacent to Hayward; effect of refinery waste in Suisun Bay and Carquinez Strait; receiving water conditions along easterly shore of San Francisco Bay.

Library: Unbound pamphlets, booklets, reports having to do with water pollution control, sewage and industrial waste treatment, and unpublished data regarding water quality and waste discharges within the San Francisco Bay Region.

618

San Francisco Department of Public Works, Bureau of Sewer Repair and Sewage Treatment, 2323 Army St., San Francisco.

Director: B. Benas, Superintendent of Bureau.

Fields of research: Sewage treatment, pollution of Bay water, industrial waste treatment.

Current projects: Chlorination of sewage; efficiency of various coagulents for sludge conditioning; digestion of sewage sludge.

Laboratory facilities: Laboratory at each of three sewage treatment plants in San Francisco (one in Golden Gate Park, one at 1700 Jerrold Ave., and the other at Bay St. near Kearny).

THE SAN FRANCISCO BAY AREA

THE AREA takes its name from its outstanding geographical feature, the San Francisco Bay. Roughly fifty miles long and between five and ten miles wide, nine California counties, Alameda, Contra Costa, Marin, Napa, San Francisco, San Mateo, Santa Clara, Solano and Sonoma, touch on its shores. These counties form a compact geographical and economic entity, the San Francisco Bay Area.

Within the area there exists a variety of topographical features and climatic conditions which support a rich and diversified plant and animal life. Temperate in climate, the area has neither extremes of heat nor cold, though there may be a surprising variation in temperature within a distance of a mile or two. Depending on the distance from the ocean, the January mean daily temperature ranges from 50 to 44 degrees; the July, from 59 to 75. Even in July a topcoat is desirable, for the cooling fogs are most often encountered in the mid-summer months. There are but two seasons in the Bay Area, the wet and the dry. The rainy season usually begins in November and lasts until March or April.

As rich in historical tradition as it is in natural resources, the Bay Area's written history does not begin until well into the eighteenth century. The narrow Golden Gate, leading into the Bay, was overlooked by the early Spanish explorers and the English navigator, Drake. It was not until 1769 that Jose Ortega, marching overland, discovered what was to become one of the world's best known harbors. In the year 1776, the year of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, the Spanish founded the first settlement in the Bay Area, the Presidio at San Francisco. Portions of the original garrison headquarters are still used as the Officers Club at the present Army base.

Under the Spanish and, after 1821, under the Mexicans, the Bay Area — the northern reach of the Spanish in the New World — was largely devoted to farming and cattle raising, hides being the main export. In the early years of the nineteenth century the Russians, in quest of the sea otter's pelt, established a fort and trading post in Sonoma county. The English, too, were trapping in the area.

It was in 1846, during the Mexican War, that the United States occupied California, the year that the short-lived California Republic was formed in Sonoma.

The Gold Rush in 1849 was, of course, the event that gave the Bay Area and California its impetus. From a small trading post with several hundred residents in the early spring of 1849, San Francisco had, by the year's end, become one of the world's busiest ports, with a population of nearly 10,000. The following year, California was admitted to the Union as the thirty-first state.

San Francisco, and later the Bay Area, became the West's most important financial and commercial center. It was not until well into the present century that the area began its large-scale industrial development which was enormously increased during World War II.

Since the war, expanding markets as well as natural advantages have accelerated the area's industrial development. Electronics plants, petroleum refineries, food processing and packaging factories, and chemical plants are but a few of the important industries found in the Bay Area.

Despite the rapidly changing economy and the even more rapid growth of the area — approximately 100,000 persons a year are coming into the nine counties — the Bay Area preserves much that has made it famous.

The best impression of the area's scenic beauty can be had from the top of Coit Tower in San Francisco or, better still, from atop Mt. Tamalpais in Marin County. Here the whole panorama of the Bay and the ships, the cities and the mountains are spread out before the viewer.

Within a few minutes' driving time of the major metropolitan centers are found such virgin areas as Muir Woods in Marin County, the regional parks bordering Oakland and other East Bay cities, the forests of San Mateo County. Farther away are the farms and dairyland of Sonoma County and the Napa Valley, home of some of California's finest wines. The orchards of Santa Clara County, side by side with huge new industries, offer exciting contrasts.

San Francisco, site of the largest Chinatown in the western world, is famed for its cosmopolitan atmosphere. This is perhaps best shown in the variety of restaurants here — Chinese, Italian, Basque, Japanese, German, French, Greek; the cuisine of most nations of the world is served in San Francisco. However, Oakland and other major cities are vying with San Francisco for the title of the "best-eating" city.

Cultural activities play a prominent role in the life of the Bay Area. San Francisco alone supports three major art museums plus a host of smaller galleries; Oakland, Richmond, San Jose and Stanford all have one or more art museums and there are many other specialized museums. In season, the symphony, opera, ballet, as well as New York stage productions, are presented. One of the country's heaviest concentrations of "little theatres" with productions to suit any taste is to be found in the Bay Area.

This brief summary precludes a listing of the Bay Area's numerous attractions and points of interest. Information on the Bay Area can be obtained from the various local chambers of commerce. Specific information on its economic and industrial aspects can also be obtained from the San Francisco Bay Area Council in San Francisco.

Dear Milt:

Thanks for yours of January 3rd. I am afraid we cannot undertake the project -- not because it doesn't have merit -- but because SEE IT NOW is now limited to ten shows a year, each an hour's duration. Still, we might be able to try it. Why don't you give me a shout again when the itinerary for the spring junket is definite, and we will see what, if anything, we can do.

Dear Ed...

As you doubtless know, the National Cartoonists Society has sent groups of cartoonists to all the outlying military installations at one time or another. The spectacle of these cartoonists drawing their well-known characters in every situation from a boiling hot North African Air Base to a freezing cold DEW Line radar outpost is quite a sight to see.

Of course, the boys appear at the lush spots as well, and in almost every situation there is a quality of recognition and participation on the part of the home-hungry personnel that is an always new experience for both the cartoonists and the audience.

We have had a feeling for some time that a Pan American show built around these excursions in which the familiar every-day cartoon characters are brought to the far places would be fascinating and informative entertainment for the viewing audience.

One of our units is scheduled to go out in the early Spring and we would be glad to hear from you if this has the makings of a program idea.

Cordially,

Milton Caniff

Dear Ed Murrow:

Your consenting to appear on my sixty-fifth birthday show Saturday, January 12, pleases me more than I can tell you. It will be the nicest possible present I can receive.

Your appearance will not be for more than one minute. And what a precious moment it will be to all of us -- especially Ida and my girls. In the next couple of weeks we shall send you a suggested opening speech which you may change to suit yourself.

May you have a very nice trip to Burma. Your making all these trips reminds me of what happened to Bob Hope, who is always on the go. He returned from one of his journeys, went into the bathroom to shower, and became hysterical with laughter. His lovely wife, Dolores, had placed two towels on the rack -- "Hers" and "Welcome, Traveler."

Thanks again, and happy journey!

Sincerely,

Eddie Cantor

An Open Letter to Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer

MEDFORD EVANS

Reprinted from....

A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF OPINION

An Open Letter to Dr. Oppenheimer

Who is Dr. Oppenheimer and Why? Perhaps he doesn't know himself. But Dr. Medford Evans, who is easily the world's greatest authority on the subject of Dr. Oppenheimer, tells him here

MEDFORD EVANS

Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer
Institute for Advanced Study
Princeton, New Jersey

Dear Dr. Oppenheimer:

This letter is in three parts:

1. Statement of the hypothesis that you are patriotic and humanitarian, in spite of much circumstantial evidence to the contrary.
2. With this hypothesis, an explanation of your determined opposition in 1949-50 to U.S. development of the hydrogen bomb.
3. An exhortation that you now tell what you know of clandestine channels of atomic information and materials.

At this point you may not want to read further, but others may, and as this is an open letter I will continue. For the benefit of the others I will be explicit about several things which are no news to you. At the same time this is not a primer of atomic politics, and a degree of understanding of the great figure you cut in the Cold-War world will be taken for granted. I thought once to introduce myself, but it will be clear to you anyhow that I am some guy with just enough information to ask certain questions which you are the one man in all the world best qualified to answer.

For the curious and the skeptical, documentary notes are attached. [See page 235].

I. HYPOTHESIS

Assume that you are not a dedicated Communist. Since you are, as Edward Teller observed, "complicated,"[1] you may not know yourself whether you are a dedicated Communist or not. Let us assume that you are not.

It is not an easy assumption. William Borden, Yale Law graduate whom the late Senator Brien McMahon picked to be Executive Director of the Congressional Joint Committee on Atomic Energy—to supplant Fred Rhodes and Dave Teeple, who were considered too hipped on security—after five years in the political maelstrom created by the atom, emerged with a singular grasp of officially confidential data (AEC, FBI, congressional) and the stark conclusion: "More probably than not, J. Robert Oppenheimer is an agent of the Soviet Union."[2]

From the record now published, it was a prudent inference. Intellectually prudent, that is. Whether Borden was prudent to say it out loud is another matter. But what else is one to make of your conduct? What can be made of regular cash contributions to Communist causes all during the period of the Nazi-Soviet pact? (That you so contributed is your own testimony,[3] not an accusation by enemies.) What do your friends have to say about that? (I will not say much about it here, either.)

On the other hand, if you were a dedicated Communist, would you not have done more damage to the United States than seems yet to have been done? After all, the Soviet Union has not yet cried to us, Checkmate! and if you were a Soviet agent how would it be possible for the Soviet Union to be militarily thwarted in anything? You were for seven years the key man in the American atomic energy project. The particular seven years I have in mind (1946-1952, inclusive) were Stalinist years in the Soviet Union. Beria was Stalin's man on the atom. If you were a Soviet agent you were Beria's man. Is it conceivable that Beria told you what to do? Dean Latimer did not think it conceivable that General Groves told you what to do.[4] I do not think it easily conceivable that Beria told you what to do. I cannot see how he could impose discipline on you, and I cannot see you willingly submitting to his discipline. Or anyone else's, for that matter. After all, you had become the shatterer of worlds.[5] Who was Beria? Who was Stalin?

As Old as Delphi

Let us assume that you are not a Soviet agent, not a dedicated Communist.

At first blush it is a comfortable assumption. But the comfort is short-lived. You are the emancipated new man, master of the new force; yet your characteristic style is as old as Delphi—with this difference: that where the oracle was ambiguous about the future, you are ambiguous about the past and the present.

Mere reticence is natural enough. After all, as you told the Gray Board: "Look, I have had a lot of secrets in my head a long time. It does not matter who I associate with. I don't talk about those secrets. Only a very skillful guy might pick up a trace of information as to where I had been or what I was up to."[6] This kind of sophistication has surely been useful to the United States now and then. We can hardly expect you to tell us, either, the whole truth. For one thing, as P.M.S. Blackett contended,[7] there isn't time for that.

What is tantalizing is that you so often drop clues. Or so it seems. Perhaps they are apples for Atalanta. I think they are clues. For example, in 1947 you made a speech before a committee of the UN, and quite gratuitously you said—the context concerns the difficulties of disseminating scientific information—"It requires instruction, it requires work to get an under- standing of these things abroad. I know this from experience. I know it is not enough to tell someone a secret: it is very hard to give away a secret. You have to work at it week after week after week because these things are complex."[8] Now why in the world would you say a thing like that?

Is Truth a mistress whom you will not marry but cannot leave alone?

The Case of Eldred Nelson

Do you remember when, during the 1954 hearings on your AEC security clearance, counsel for the government read to you a transcript of a wartime interview between you and General Groves' security officer? In that interview (September 12, 1943) Colonel Lansdale told you that he had "reason to believe that you yourself [had been] . . . felt out . . . to ascertain how you felt about . . . passing a little information to the party."[9]

If any such attempt was made, you told Lansdale, "it was so gentle I did not know it."

Then Lansdale tried to get you to name some acquaintance who might logically have been suspected of making some such attempt.

"There is," you said, "a girl called Eldred Nelson." An odd thing for you to say to a Colonel of Military Intelligence in 1943.

In 1954 you emphasized to Roger Robb, counsel for the Government Board, how odd it had been. "Eldred Nelson," you assured Robb, "is not a girl. He is not a Communist."[10] Transcripts, of course, are liable to error, but stenographers seldom supply a name like "Eldred."

"Is it now clear to you," asked Robb, "who Colonel Lansdale was talking about?"

"I don't know," you replied. "It might well be Steve Nelson."

"Isn't that pretty plain?"

"Yes."

"Why didn't you mention Steve Nelson?"

"I seem to have mentioned a Nelson."[11]

Bizarre!

Facing down a police officer, you withhold the name of Steve Nelson (you are later to tell Robb: "I knew he was a Communist and an important Communist").[12] Then, gratuitously, you introduce the name of Eldred Nelson (you will tell Robb: "He was a student of mine. . . . He was not a Communist"[13] (It does you little good, it does Eldred Nelson little harm (so far as we know), by itself it causes Lansdale little trouble. But it looks like involving the innocent to protect the guilty. Is this what your admirers have in mind when they call you seer and saint?[14] Perhaps so. Loyalty to Steve (you were to say: "He and my wife . . . had close affectionate relationships and I was a natural bystander"[15]) made you furnish Lansdale the wrong given name; compassion for Eldred made you, to throw the police off his track, lie about his gender; but intellectual honesty dictated the correct surname. Magna est veritas et praevalebit! "I seem to have mentioned a Nelson."

Kreuttner

"Be emphatic about Witch Hunts, McCarthyism, Guilt-by-Association, Police State Methods, Climate of Fear, Reign of Terror, Abridgement of Academic Freedom, and Thought Control. Be vague about Hiss, Greenglass, Gold, Fuchs, Remington, Rosenberg, White, Coe, Eisler, Oppenheimer, Lattimore, Sobell, Ware, Silvermaster and Coplon."

"I would suppose," George Kennan observes, "that you might just as well have asked Leonardo da Vinci to distort an anatomical drawing as that you should ask Robert Oppenheimer to speak . . . to the sort of questions we were talking about and speak dishonestly."[16]

Superficially, Kennan sounds absurd; for the ordinary supposition would be that if you wanted an anatomical drawing distorted no one could do it more artfully than Leonardo could have done it. Yet there is an odd felicity in comparing the prodigious and inscrutable painter of Mona Lisa—the military engineer of Caesar Borgia—with the brilliant director of the laboratory where the first atomic bombs were made, and resolute opponent of the manufacture of hydrogen bombs.

Kennan may have been right, too, in thinking that you have an ineradicable streak of honesty. Typically, your speech is an elaborate cryptogram. The tissue of lies is shot through with truth. Similarly with your conduct. In the role of Soviet agent you are almost totally convincing. Yet a stubborn loyalty to the United States apparently persists. You have certainly confused us, but it is almost uproarious to think how you must have baffled the Comrades. Otto John is a piker. For he is frivolous. You are serious. Or so it seems.

I am going to assume that, complicated as you are, you are primarily patriotic and humanitarian.

II. EXPLANATION

Why did you so energetically oppose the hydrogen bomb program in 1949-50? This question was explored in the hearings before the Gray Board with metaphysical thoroughness and inconclusiveness. Your friends have assumed that you were moved by two considerations: 1) that the U.S. was adequately armed without the H-bomb, and 2) that the use of an H-bomb would actually be just too terrible, that the A-bomb, through which you had already "known sin," was at least enough for the consciences of yourself, your fellow scientists, and the rest of us. Your friends have thought you fully justified in holding such views, whether you were objectively correct or not (assuming that there is here any such thing as objective correctness), and they have further thought it unfair to you and dangerous to all concerned that you should in any way be "put on trial" for having expressed such views, merely because they turned out to be counter to the official policy eventually adopted.

Your critics, in contrast, have thought that your friends have somehow missed the whole point, for to these critics the point at issue in the whole H-bomb business as it related to you was simply whether your advice had been sincere. Of course, they would say, there is no question but that an expert, such as Doctor Oppenheimer, must advise the Government in the light of his best professional judgment, whether it is what the Government wants to hear or not; and if the expert turns out at some future date to have been wrong, certainly he should not be punished for a fallibility common to all men. But what an expert is not supposed to do (they would say) is to give advice which, ostensibly in the interest of one country, is secretly intended to help another.

If I honestly think the gun is not loaded, and tell my friend it is not, then I am not guilty of homicide when he blows his brains out with it. But suppose I really know it is loaded, and yet tell him it is not? From the point of view of a third party the whole question of my guilt or innocence turns not on what I said but on what I was thinking when I said it. This is a very tough sort of question for a third party to answer. No wonder the Gray Board had a tough time with it; and no wonder the Atomic Energy Commission waived it in reaching a decision on your clearance.

The Chevalier Incident

Maybe we should let the whole matter stay dropped, but I think I have a new angle which, if it is right, has practical consequences. Perhaps you were neither offering straightforward though mistaken advice (as your friends claim) nor just deliberately giving us a bum steer (as your enemies have suspected). You gave advice which on the surface was wrong, and which was duly rejected; but it may have included, well obscured, some extremely valuable truths. You knew something you would not tell, and you told something that wasn't so, but what you told could lead to what you knew.

The pattern appears in what you told the Gray Board about a now famous but still obscure incident in 1943, when your friend Haakon Chevalier, then professor of French at Berkeley, approached you somehow on the general subject of giving information to the Soviets via one George Eltenton, a mysterious Britisher who subsequently disappeared. When at length you reported this attempt at espionage to the proper authorities, you not only withheld Chevalier's name, but also, you say now, gratuitously introduced an extraordinary quantity of false and misleading information.

> The story I told to [Colonel Boris T.] Pash [in 1943 Military Counter-intelligence Chief in the San Francisco area] was not a true story . . . the story told in circumstantial detail, and which was elicited from me in greater and greater detail . . . was a false story. It is not easy to say that.
> Now, when you ask for a more persuasive argument as to why I did this than that I was an idiot, I am going to have more trouble being understandable.
> I think I was impelled by 2 or 3 concerns at that time. One was the feeling that I must get across the fact that if there was, as Lansdale indicated, trouble at the Radiation Laboratory, Eltenton was the guy that might very well be involved and it was serious. Whether I embroidered the story in order to underline that seriousness or whether I embroidered it to make it more tolerable that I would not tell the simple facts, namely, Chevalier had talked to me about it, I don't know. . . .
> I think I need to say that it was essential that I tell this story, that I should have told it at once and I should have told it completely accurately, but that it was a matter of conflict for me and I found myself, I believe, trying to give a tip to the intelligence people without realizing that when you give a tip you must tell the whole story. When I was asked to elaborate, I started off on a false pattern.[17]

The italics, of course, are mine. I suggest that, in a man who has a feeling that he must get across a fact and who at the same time will not tell the simple facts, the tension may persist until it becomes a characteristic intellectual and moral posture—unendurable except for one whose intellectual and moral fibre is of superior toughness, and damaging even to him.

I suggest that in the debate over the hydrogen bomb program in 1949-50 you were—as in the Chevalier case in 1943, but on a larger scale—trying to give a tip to the intelligence people without realizing that when you give a tip you must tell the whole story.

What tip?

Here is what Dr. Luis Alvarez testified you told him one day near the end of October 1949, when you took him and Doctor Serber to lunch at "a small restaurant in the immediate neighborhood of the Commission building."[18] (Would that have been Rich's?)

> He [i.e., you, Oppenheimer] said that he did not think the United States should build the hydrogen bomb, and the main reason that he gave for this if my memory serves me correctly, and I think it does, was that if we built a hydrogen bomb, then the Russians would build a hydrogen bomb, whereas if we did not build a hydrogen bomb, then the Russians would not build a hydrogen bomb.[19]

I don't think your friends—or critics either—have taken you seriously enough. Doctor Alvarez went on to tell the Gray Board, "I found this such an odd point of view that I don't understand it to this day,"[20] and his reaction is typical of practically all those who for one reason or another will not go along with Borden's painful conjecture that you are a Soviet agent, but who also esteem you quite a bit this side of idolatry. These sane, shrewd people conclude, in effect, that this is just one of those screwball things that a noble, difficult genius like Oppenheimer will do or say every now and then. I suggest that in this case you meant what you said, and that you knew what you were talking about.

All but the Obvious

The reason why your arguments against the hydrogen bomb have probably been taken too lightly is that when you said, If we build a hydrogen bomb then the Russians will build a hydrogen bomb, whereas if we do not build a hydrogen bomb, then the Russians will not build a hydrogen bomb, your critics assumed that you meant that Russian decisions would be controlled by our action. I suggest that you had in mind that Russian capacity would be so controlled. The argument that whether the Russians would want an H-bomb or not depended on whether we had one first was extremely unconvincing, and since that is the way your argument was interpreted you did not win the debate. Had you said plainly: Look, they can't possibly make an H-bomb in Russia unless we make one here first; but if we do make one here, then we can't possibly keep them from getting it too; they depend on us that much, they are tied to us that close—had you said something like that, the debate might have gone a different way. Perhaps you thought, Surely they can see that for themselves, at least with the hints I have given! However, we have been credulous of everything but the obvious.

Hints and Hedging

You have given hints repeatedly. In the post-mortem before the Gray Board in 1954 you said:

> The notion that the thermonuclear arms race was something that was in the interests of this country to avoid if it could was very clear to us [General Advisory Committee] in 1949. . . . We thought it was something to avoid even if we could jump the gun by a couple of years, or even if we could outproduce the enemy, because we were infinitely more vulnerable and infinitely less likely to initiate the use of these weapons. . . . This is an idea which I believe is still right, but I think what was not clear to us then and what is clearer to me now is that it probably lay wholly beyond our power to prevent the Russians somehow from getting ahead with it. I think if we could have taken any action at that time which would have precluded their development of this weapon, it would have been a very good bet to take that. . . . I believe that their atomic effort was quite imitative and that made it quite natural for us to think that their thermonuclear work would be quite imitative and that we should not set the pace in this development.[21]

Again you said:

> I think we were right in believing that any method available consistent with honor and security for keeping these objects out of the arsenals of the enemy would have been a good course to follow.[22]

To me these look like hints. I understand that later in the hearing Gordon Gray picked you up on this very matter, and you hedged a bit. As follows:

> GRAY: Is it your opinion, Doctor, that the Russians would not have sought to develop a hydrogen bomb unless they knew in one way or another . . . that this country was proceeding with it?
> OPPENHEIMER: That was my opinion in 1949. . . .
> GRAY: . . . Would it not have been reasonable to expect . . . that they would do anything to increase their military strength?
> OPPENHEIMER: Right.
> GRAY: Whatever it might be.
> OPPENHEIMER: Oh, sure.
> GRAY: So you don't intend to have this record suggest that you felt that if those who opposed the development of the hydrogen bomb prevailed that would mean that the world would not be confronted with the hydrogen bomb?
> OPPENHEIMER: It would not necessarily mean—we thought on the whole it would make it less likely. That the Russians would attempt and less likely that they would succeed in the undertaking.
> GRAY: . . . That is two things. One, the likelihood of their success would we all hope still be related to their own capabilities and not to information they would receive from our efforts. So what you mean to say is that since they would not attempt it they would not succeed?
> OPPENHEIMER: No. [I believe this the most ambiguous flat No I ever read.] I believe what we then thought was that the incentive to do it would be far greater if they knew we were doing it, and we had succeeded. Let me, for instance, take a conjecture. Suppose we had not done anything about the atom during the war. I don't think you could guarantee that the Russians would never have had an atomic bomb. But I believe they would not have one nearly as soon as they have. I think both the fact of our success, the immense amount of publicity, the prestige of the weapon, the espionage they collect, all of this made it an absolutely higher priority thing, and we thought similar circumstances might apply to the hydrogen bomb. We were always clear that there might be a Russian effort whatever we did. We always understood that if we did not do this that an attempt would be made to get the Russians sewed up so that they would not either.[23]

General Groves said that Russia didn't seem to appreciate the effect of the A-bomb at Hiroshima until after Bikini, when "the Russian observers who were there against my wishes" got ashore again at San Francisco and went to the Russian consulate. And within twenty-four hours the attitude of the Russian delegate at the UN "changed completely." Maybe the great bureaucracy had been simply filing the spies' reports and ignoring them.

ISABEL PATERSON

National Review, May 23, 1956

So Gray took the hint just about as I am taking it now, and when he put it to you if that was what you meant, you backed down a bit, but not completely. You would naturally back down some, unless you were ready to go pretty far the other way. It would startle you to have Gray pick you up like that. It startled you enough so that you proceeded to fumble a related question. At least it looks like a fumble:

> GRAY: . . . at what time did your strong moral convictions develop with respect to the hydrogen bomb?
> OPPENHEIMER: When it became clear to me that we would tend to use any weapon we had.[24]

Now you had said, you know (see above), that "we were infinitely more vulnerable and infinitely less likely to initiate the use of these weapons." There is some difficulty in reconciling the two contentions: 1) that the tendency of the U.S. to use any weapon it might acquire created a moral objection to helping it acquire an H-bomb, and 2) that the small likelihood that the U.S. would use such a weapon as an H-bomb ("infinitely less" than the likelihood that the adversary would use it) would put the U.S. at a dangerous military disadvantage if H-bombs were acquired all round.

I will not press that. Nobody expects Euclidean consistency out of the Delphic Oracle.

Patriotic Impulse

I suggest, Doctor Oppenheimer, that you knew 1) that the USSR was technologically incapable of the independent production of nuclear weapons, and 2) that the U.S.A. was psychologically incapable of effective internal security.

I suggest that you sincerely did not want the United States to develop a weapon which you knew the Soviet Union would and could immediately steal (but could get in no other way), but that you were also unwilling to reveal what it was that made you so sure that Soviet Russia was in a position to steal it.

I suggest that you knew a great deal about the channels by which information and materials were transferred from the U.S.A. to the USSR. You did not want to reveal those channels to the American government or the American public—just as you once did not want to give Chevalier's name to General Groves—but you did have the patriotic impulse to prevent, if possible, our ever putting into the channels to Soviet Russia information and materials of a new order of danger.

You were like an embezzler's wife who will not denounce her husband to the authorities, but earnestly urges his employer not to enlarge his department.

"Scorpions in a Bottle"

Perhaps you have been misunderstood because of the same interference that jams my own attempts to get through to the public consciousness—a massive public preconception that Soviet Russia has a great atomic energy project of its own. Sure, it will be granted, Fuchs and the Rosenbergs made possible the Russian accomplishment and that was a terrible thing, but it is spilled milk now and we just have to set our jaws, tighten our belts, and pray for peace. Everyone knows that the Soviets have tested many atomic and hydrogen weapons, that while they are probably behind us in total stockpile the numbers on both sides are so great it hardly matters, that in certain respects they may have moved ahead of us (for example, they may have dropped an H-bomb from an airplane before we did), that on the whole the situation can be described as an "atomic stalemate," that the U.S.A. and the USSR are, in your own vivid phrase, like "two scorpions in a bottle, each capable of killing the other, but only at the risk of his own life."[25]

What people do not seem to know, however, is that when you used that image you did not say that the U.S.A. and the USSR had arrived at the stage where they were like two scorpions in a bottle; you said the time might come when they would be. (You said this on February 17, 1953. Perhaps you think that time has now come.)

In 1953 you very carefully estimated that "the USSR is about four years behind us. . . . the scale of its operations is not as big as ours was four years ago. It may be something like half as big as ours then was."[26] You, naturally, thought this was bad enough. "The very least we can conclude," you said, "is that our twenty-thousandth bomb . . . will not in any deep strategic sense offset their two-thousandth."[27] This suggests that you thought of us as having a ten-to-one superiority in productivity.

What seems to be unknown is that you—who are our chief authority on the meaning of the scientific evidence concerning Soviet nuclear developments—have never said flatly that the Soviet atomic project is independently formidable. Through you, others have been persuaded to believe that it is independently formidable. They have been persuaded to believe much more than you are committed by the record to uphold. The effect is that of an advertisement in which the advantages of, say, the Tucker automobile are strikingly set forth, while somewhere in the fine print is a statement that nothing is actually in production. The majority of readers overlook the fine print.

Forensically, you have left an overwhelming impression of Soviet achievement; academically, you have been explicit in your reservations, have unobtrusively hedged the bet.

In September 1949 it was you who told the Pentagon and the Congressional Joint Committee the meaning of the reported Soviet explosion—quickly dubbed "Operation Joe." You were the principal expert in a panel of four. "We went over [the evidence of the Soviet explosion] very carefully and it was very clear to us that this was the real thing, and there was not any doubt about it. . . . This was an atomic bomb."[28]

Yet three and a half years later you were to say of the then much larger volume of scientific evidence concerning Soviet atomic activities: "We do need one word of warning: This is evidence which could well be evidence of what the government of the USSR wants us to think, rather than evidence of what is true."[29] Well, of course, what we the American people think—two scorpions and all—is what the Soviet rulers want us to think.

Why do we think as we do on this subject? Largely because of you, it appears. Indeed you tempt one to the great-man theory of history. Dean Latimer said of you, "I have seen him sway audiences. It was just marvelous, the phraseology and the influence is just tremendous."[30]

"I went over to the State Department," you told the Gray Board, "where the question was being discussed . . . should this [reported Soviet atomic explosion] be publicly announced by the President and I gave some arguments in favor of that. . . . I was taken up to hearings before the Joint Congressional Committee. . . . They were quite skeptical and I was not allowed to tell them the evidence. . . . All I could do was just sound as serious and convinced and certain about it as I knew how. I think by the time we left, the Joint Congressional Committee understood that this event had been real."[31] Evidently the phraseology was sufficiently marvelous.

A Later Reservation

Yet again, three and a half years later you were to qualify your estimate of Soviet atomic achievement with the reservation: "This [estimate] is consistent with the facts known to us. It has not been proven by them, by any means."[32] The little phrase which I have italicized seems to me in its own quiet way to be as startling as Harry Truman's declaration,[33] (which you deplored[34]) that he doubted whether the Russians had a workable A-bomb.

You have convinced the United States government and the American people that the Soviet atomic project is independently formidable, but apparently you have not fully convinced yourself.

Why have your reservations and warnings about the inconclusiveness of the evidence in this area been so largely ignored? I don't suppose you understand that either. Sometimes people believe because they do not want to believe.

Nobody seems to have thought much about the fact that David Lilienthal, AEC Chairman at the time of the H-bomb debate, testified during your 1954 security hearing that, regarding "possible thermonuclear bomb capability of the Russians" . . . "there were no intelligence reports that I can recall."[35] This suggests that the Chairman of the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission had no positive information about the Russian plant which might have been supposed to have produced the Russian A-bomb. For if he had known anything about their A-bomb plant, as distinct from the bomb itself, then he would have known something about their H-bomb capability, just as, knowing something about our plant, he knew something of our capability.

A Counsel of Prudence

Excuse my repetitiousness, but what are we to make of the fact that these three men—1) Harry S. Truman, President of the United States, official source of the world news in 1949 that an atomic explosion had occurred in the Soviet Union, 2) David E. Lilienthal, Chairman of the AEC, government agency under which the scientific analysis of the evidence of all such explosions was conducted, and 3) you, J. Robert Oppenheimer, leading scientific adviser to both Truman and Lilienthal—have all made statements since 1949 casting doubt on the validity of what was officially said in 1949?

Is it not true—I think you would know—that for the past seven and a half years top American officials have based their working estimates of Russian nuclear capability, and their public statements about such estimates, on a certain kind of "counsel of prudence" rather than on complete, verified data? And is it not true that to whatever degree you have yourself been responsible for their having such an attitude, you nevertheless could have had, and did have, in your own mind an altogether different picture of the situation in the Soviet Union?

No doubt you were faced, briefly, with the same contradictory thoughts that puzzled others: 1) the improbability that Russia had the industrial capacity required to make an A-bomb —"machine tools . . . production of electronic control equipment, capacity to produce certain chemicals with the desired degree of purity, and things of that sort," the late Karl Compton explained to the Gray Board[36]—versus 2) the evidence that nevertheless an atomic explosion had occurred.

The situation, you saw, was not to be explained by the simple disjunctive implied in such arguments as:

"You say they can't make an A-bomb, but I know they've got an A-bomb, so you must be wrong."

Or:

"You say they have an A-bomb, but I know they can't make an A-bomb, so you must be wrong."

Your own flexible imagination would quickly see another alternative:

"They can't make an A-bomb, but they've got an A-bomb—so they must have swiped it."

I know it is not easy to swipe an A-bomb. They would have had to work at it week after week after week because these things are complex. But it could be done.

I suggest that when you concluded in September 1949 that the Soviets had indeed exploded an A-bomb, you knew then that they must have a pipe line—a damned good pipe line —to the American project. This would be consistent with what you knew of Communist methods (ingenious, thorough, unscrupulous) and American habits (careless, optimistic, naive).

The three wise men assigned to probe the Oppenheimer case were not even commissioned to look into the real scandal: that for eight decisive years our government was turning to nuclear physicists for guidance, not on technical details of atomic science, but on the very essence of grand strategy and national policies. Yet no derelictions Professor Oppenheimer might possibly be found guilty of can compare with the monstrous shame of statesmen who have invited atom-pushers into the highest policy councils of the nation.

WILLIAM S. SCHLAMM
U.S.A., May 17, 1954

Channels of Espionage

As the former director of Los Alamos you knew that nuclear bombs are assembled from components manufactured in every part of the United States. If such components can be transported so far they can be transported farther.

As a former intimate of Communists and a continuing intimate of former Communists, you knew of Communist channels through Mexico to Europe. Isaac Folkoff, a Communist "treasurer of something" you called him, explained to you in 1940 (you told the Gray Board) "all the business about the refugees, the camps in France, the resettlement problems, and how much it cost and how much it cost to get to Mexico, and all the rest."[37]

And you knew New Mexico. "In 1929," you said of your brother Frank and yourself, "we rented a little ranch up in the high mountains in New Mexico which we have had ever since, and we used to spend as much time there as we could in the summer. . . . It was a very primitive sort of establishment. . . . We spent part of the summer of 1941 together at the ranch . . . That was after my marriage. He [Frank] and his wife stayed on a while."[38] In 1943, you said "Groves sent an engineer around to look for a place [for a bomb laboratory]. He was around in the Southwest where I knew the country and in New Mexico, and I showed him and showed General Groves the city of Los Alamos."[39]

With your intimate knowledge of the process, the organization, and the geography, you were in a position to realize, the moment it became clear in September 1949 that the Soviets had exploded an A-bomb years ahead of cautious estimates, not that you and Compton and others had been wrong about the stage at which Soviet development had arrived, but that you had not given full credit to the Soviet underground. Now you knew that the Communist underground railway could carry freight as well as passengers. (We Americans are preoccupied with the theft of information data. Materials, to the Soviet mentality, are presumably more important. And in this case, almost as compact.) You knew better than anyone else how worthless the Manhattan District-AEC system of materials-accounting had been, so that no one could know by checking the inventory whether anything had been stolen or not.

More sophisticated than bomb physicist Robert Bacher,[40] you probably would not have been, as he said he was, "very deeply shocked to find how few atomic weapons we had at that time [December 1946]."[41]

What did happen to all that stuff they made at Oak Ridge in 1946? It was supposed to go into bombs at Los Alamos. According to Dr. Bacher, not much of it did.

Diversion of Material

Well, I suppose we shall never know. For in 1946 nobody was trying very hard to keep track of the stuff. I remember an old Trotskyite at Oak Ridge (I don't mean an aged Trotskyite; just a guy who had formerly passed for a Trotskyite, though actually some of the 4th International boys thought he was a Stalinist spy in their midst)—I remember how in dire tones he warned a group of young scientists (this was at a meeting in one of the Roane-Anderson buildings near the Central Bus Terminal) never to trust the U.S. Army. For the Army, he said, was undoubtedly secreting quantities of U-235 and plutonium in order to avoid turning them over to the forthcoming civilian agency, as it was supposed to do.

That is not too plausible, is it, that the Army would do that? But the old Trotskyite at least knew that, any such diversion of material by anybody at that time would hardly be detected. For he was a sharp mathematician, and himself worked on accountability for fissionable materials at the gaseous diffusion plant. You would probably recognize his name if I gave it. He has written for the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists. He left Oak Ridge, later tried to come back, fortunately (I think) didn't make it.

Then I remember one week-end in the spring of 1947 when an AEC accountant from the production division came to my house in Oak Ridge to get advice on how to draw up an organization chart for the brand-new materials-accounting branch.

Three years and some months later, when I was working in the Washington AEC office, I remember a "management improvement" report coming in from Los Alamos to the effect that procedures developed by that materials-accounting branch and approved by the Commission in 1948 were being duly installed at Los Alamos—in July 1950.

That was about the same time the FBI arrested Dr. Sanford Simons in Denver for illegal possession of plutonium which he had taken out of Los Alamos in 1946.[42] I don't know how they caught him. Probably a confidential informant. Not through the Los Alamos inventory system, I'm sure. As I recall, he got eighteen months.

Of course that fellow who stole the gold from Los Alamos in 1952 got a stiffer sentence. I believe he is still at Leavenworth. If he hadn't run into difficulties trying to fence the stuff—Treasury men and city detectives stumbled on his track in Oklahoma City in 1954—he would have made a clean break. Los Alamos never knew they had been robbed till Treasury caught the guy. He himself had worked in materials-accounting, and when he quit his job in 1952 he walked off with 110 ounces of pure gold bullion which according to his books was an overage, and he was too embarrassed to turn it back in. Nobody missed it.[43] What a joint!

Case of the English Teacher

Flash back to 1948—the AEC materials-accounting representative at Los Alamos then was a former high-school English teacher. Since, as your successor as Laboratory Director, Dr. Norris Bradbury, told the Joint Committee, "the problem of accounting for so-called S.F. [source and fissionable] materials is a very complicated and technical problem,"[44] the young man was clearly over his head. Nor could he turn to the excellent scientific personnel on Dr. Bradbury's own staff, for they were, Dr. Bradbury told the Committee, "doing all in our power to handle this question to the satisfaction of the Commission,"[45] i.e., the young English teacher.

Then the young man got a boss—a pretty high-powered accountant who went out to New Mexico from the AEC office in Washington. In Washington this man had distinguished himself by hiring as one of his two main assistants a former understudy in the bureaucracy of—guess who?—Nathan Gregory Silvermaster! Now don't misunderstand me. I am not a guilt-by-association man. As a matter of fact, I had some association with the protégé of Silvermaster myself. And I am not guilty of any kind of pro-Communist activity. But I think all of us ought to be investigated most thoroughly. I had another acquaintance in AEC who went to Colombia to work with Lauchlin Currie. It's a small world.

The reason why personnel is so important is the inherent difficulty of materials control. Your friend Walter Zinn, the great reactor expert, testified during the Hickenlooper Investi-

During 1950 Dr. Oppenheimer testified to the FBI that, although he was in the habit of giving some monthly contributions to the Communist Party, he had a change of mind about the policies of the Soviet Union, and "at the time of the Finnish War and the subsequent break between Germany and Russia in 1941 realized the Communist infiltration tactics into the alleged anti-Fascist groups and became fed up with the whole thing and lost what little interest he had."

The board established, on the other hand, "by testimony and other information," that "Dr. Oppenheimer made periodic contributions through Communist Party functionaries to the Communist Party . . . in amounts aggregating not less than $500 and not more than $1,000 a year during a period of approximately four years ending in April 1942," and that "as of April 1942 Dr. Oppenheimer had for several months been participating in government atomic energy research activities."

gation, ". . . if you cannot have people who you are confident will not do this filching . . . your inventories cannot control the situation."[46]

A few days later Dr. C. E. Larson and Mr. Jesse Herndon, Oak Ridge Laboratory Director and Electromagnetic Plant Superintendent respectively, testified before the Committee. Dr. Larson spoke of their use at that time of the polygraph (lie detector), and added, ". . . if we agree that the polygraph is not valid and the amount concerned is within our limit of error . . . we would never catch it."[47]

Mr. Herndon said, "This brings us right back to the personal integrity of the individual involved. If you don't have that, you don't have security."[48]

That Famous Article

But you know more about all this than anybody else. That is what gives so much weight to your words in the famous article in Foreign Affairs, where you speak of a time when "there will have been . . . a vast accumulation of materials for atomic weapons, and a troublesome margin of uncertainty with regard to its accounting."[49]

Naturally, you were not inclined to discuss these things fully with anyone. You were in large measure to blame—at least as much as any single other person—for the failure in materials-accounting. You knew that some of your friends would be caught up in any complete investigation into such an operation. More poignantly, you did not know which friends might be involved in something worse than negligence.

Against all this, however, you now knew that if the U.S. developed a new weapon the USSR would get its share of the product, and you knew that if the new weapon were a hydrogen bomb then even a small share could be catastrophic.

Serious as the Russian A-bomb was, it was by no means decisive. In June 1949 Senator McMahon had asked you: "One final question, Doctor. Are you satisfied with our weapon progress since the end of the war?"[50] And you had replied, "It is my business not to be satisfied, but I am . . . it is far better than I thought it would be."[51] Evidently we had a rather large number of A-bombs. And the Russians—concerning whom the issue was whether they had any at all—certainly did not have many.

Assuming that the Soviets would never have had any A-bombs if we had not made some first, it could be contended that by developing the A-bomb we had actually increased the danger to this country. For that development you shared responsibility. Yet it could also be argued that so long as we retained a runaway numerical superiority in A-bombs, our advantage would remain decisive. The number of A-bombs required to saturate the military objectives of a major power looked larger every day, and unless or until the Soviet Union achieved such a saturation number the power of restraint would remain in American hands.

With H-bombs the situation would be radically altered. The saturation number of these cannot be very large. Assume a U.S. superiority of 10 to 1 in either kind of bomb. Assume further (we observed above that you have implicitly made assumptions like these) that a great power can use many thousands of A-bombs (kiloton range) in a war, but never needs more than 15 or 20 (megaton range) H-bombs. The bottleneck in A-bomb military power is, then, production; the bottleneck with H-bombs is development. You told the Gray Board: "We could have had the atom bomb as far as ideas went considerably earlier than we could have had it as far as hardware went. . . . With the hydrogen bomb I believe that the pacing factor was good ideas."[52]

1949: U. S. Superiority

Now go back to September 1949. Though A-bombs now evidently existed on both sides, yet it was clearly going to be a long time before Soviet Russia would catch up with the

Kreuttner

"It isn't that we scientists think we're better than other people. It's just that we're in a good position to make things pretty uncomfortable for everybody if we don't get the privileges and immunities we're after!"

United States in production, a usefully long time before the Soviet Union would have thousands of A-bombs—and this was true whether they made them or swiped them. Throughout that long time the U.S. numerical superiority (10 to 1 or whatever) would be an effective deterrent. But once the "good ideas" for making an H-bomb jelled and were tested, it would probably not take the U.S. long to produce two or three hundred. If in this comparatively brief interval the USSR produced or swiped even ten or fifteen, then you would find your two scorpions in the bottle.

Your colleague, the late Dr. John von Neumann (subsequently AEC Commissioner), told the Gray Board what he thought your views had been in 1949—"that we practically had the lead in whatever we did, and the Russians would follow, and that we were probably more vulnerable than they were for a variety of reasons, one of which is that we can probably saturate them right now—I meant right then—whereas they could not at that moment. Therefore a large increment on both sides would merely mean that both sides can saturate the other."[53]

And here is the turn of the screw, the fact that in clandestine methods of delivery the Soviet Union would clearly have the advantage.

Clandestine methods of delivery would not only (as E. U. Condon says) "provide the pinpoint accuracy that long-range weapons may possibly lack,"[54] they might even — it seemed in 1949—be the only methods available. As you wrote "Uncle Jim" Conant, "I am not sure the miserable thing will work, nor that it can be gotten to a target except by ox cart."[55] Or, perhaps—to use Condon again—"in the hold of a ship floating idly at the Brooklyn docks."[56]

No wonder you wrote Conant that for the U.S. to become committed to the hydrogen bomb "as the way to save the country and the peace appears to me full of dangers." No wonder you told Teller to keep his shirt on.[57] No wonder you persuaded Rabi and Serber to reconsider their initial enthusiasm for an H-bomb as the answer to "Joe One"[58] (the first atomic explosion in the Soviet Union).

It was precisely "Joe One"—an atomic bomb essentially made in U.S.A., but assembled in, say, Stalinsk by Stalinists—which convinced you that now the U.S.A. must not make a hydrogen bomb.

You had a lot to answer for in the Communist apparatus so firmly installed at Los Alamos before 1946. One of the known agents of that apparatus — David Greenglass — last April gave the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee a somewhat more detailed account of an incident which he had related five years earlier during the trial of his sister Ethel and her husband:

> GREENGLASS: Julius Rosenberg had instructed me to find people who were sympathetic to Communism in this project, and after finding them, he said, "Don't mention them. Just write them down." . . .
> ROBERT MORRIS [Chief Counsel for the Committee]: Now, how many recruits had you written down? How many names had you written down, to the best of your recollection?
> GREENGLASS: Oh, I would say there were between 20 and 25. . . .
> MORRIS: Now, did this list of 20 to 25—did that exhaust, do you think, the reservoir of potential scientists who would turn over, who would work for Rosenberg?
> GREENGLASS: Let me—I will answer that. I frankly say "No." These people, these 20 or 25, were in my ken . . . there were others who were just as sympathetic who weren't in Los Alamos, that I heard of but I couldn't check of my own accord, and which I didn't put down, you see.[59]

Your own ken, Doctor Oppenheimer, is—to put it mildly—considerably broader than that of David Greenglass. On the other hand, your ability to assess the political inclinations of atomic scientists is probably much more accurate, too. Since you know so many more scientists, but would probably screen them more finely than Greenglass could, perhaps you too would come out with a list of twenty to twenty-five. The detail is speculation.

Later, your judgment of Communism hardened. Not only were you to speak of "the obvious war between Russia and the United States," but speaking of Communism itself you would say, you did say to the Gray Board, "Today it is a very simple thing. . . . We have a well-defined enemy."[60]

Yet as late as June 1949 you still felt that there was some inherent indecency in a national military security program. You told the Joint Congressional Committee, when they asked your advice about the foreign distribution of isotopes, that that was "one of the few areas in which we are free to act the way we would like to act, generously, imaginatively and decently; in the things that involve security we are inhibited from doing that."[61]

You said,

> I do not think anybody can be happy at the fine-tooth combing that has to be given to every man that has to work on the atomic energy program. But one understands why it is; and as long as it is restricted to those places where there are some secrets to be kept, people will stand for it.
> I think the [Atomic Energy] Commission has balanced very carefully, in the few cases I know about, the requirements of security and the requirements of progress and humanity. It has not been easy.[62]

Not easy for you, either, was it? Once you said:

> Though we are men of science and we have a loyalty to each other everywhere, we also have a loyalty to our homes and our countries against which we will not work.[63]

The paradox was that from where you sat the very thing which to Teller and Lawrence and Strauss, and later Truman, looked like the logical move for home and country was the thing which seemed to be most enormously against home and country. For that hellish thing you would not work. But you could not tell them why.

III. EXHORTATION

Seems pretty melodramatic, doesn't it? How does it feel now to lecture at Harvard? How does it feel to preside at the Institute? Does it seem that the decorum there is what is real—that that is Veritas—and that Steve Nelson is a comic-strip character whom we can safely leave for Daddy Warbucks to handle?

But that won't do, will it? Steve occupies the attention of the Supreme Court, he is real.

And Bernard Peters is real. It has been a long time since he was telling the Executive Board of the Communist-front Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists, and Technicians, in Berkeley (on April 14, 1943) "that it is absolutely necessary to get a good foothold on the hill."[64] Now Dr. Peters is in Tata Institute in Bombay, working for Homi Bhabha—the atomic spirit of Geneva?[65]

Joan Hinton—the girl scientist from Los Alamos who has gone over to the Chinese Communists—is real. As a matter of fact she would fit right in at Cambridge, wouldn't she? I don't know her, but doesn't she have a New England background and good egghead connections (Lattimore, yourself) and a lot of that unobtrusive kind of suddenly disturbing feminine intelligence? The Lord knows where she is—somewhere in Suiyuan province of Inner Mongolia, working with Pontecorvo, no doubt.[66]

NATIONAL REVIEW
211 East 37th St.
New York 16, N.Y.

These people, and so many more that I can't ask you about because I haven't the slightest idea who they are—or else no documentation so far—have not ceased to exist and to operate just because you are campused.

Doctor, why don't you come clean? It might be a novel experience for you. It might do you good. I think the amount of truth that came out in the 1954 hearings before the Gray Board did you a lot of good. In 1953 you said to the Graduate Alumni at Princeton this tortured kind of thing: "It is true that many particulars can be understood and subsumed by a general order. But it is probably no less a great truth that elements of abstractly irreconcilable general orders can be subsumed by a particular."[67] Now that is pretty high-level stuff and I don't necessarily know what you meant by it, but one thing those words might mean is that a double life is O.K. Right?

Almost two years later, chastened (I think) by the loss of your Q clearance and all that was involved in that loss, you said over CBS radio, "Never before have we had to understand the complementary, mutually not compatible ways of life and recognize choice between them as the only course of freedom."[68] This language is still rarefied—much more so in context, by the way—but surely part of its meaning is, sometimes you have to stand up and be counted.

Turn on the Lights

Man, this is it. This is one of those times.

Nobody who knows anything about your case, Doctor—nobody I know—doubts that if you really did break and tell all you know, the whole picture of the national defense and security of the United States would light up like a used-car lot.

If you are patriotic and humanitarian, why don't you turn on the lights? We might not like what we saw, but we sure would be better off seeing it than stumbling on it in the dark.

Maybe I'm wasting my time. Maybe I've got you wrong. Maybe Borden was right.

Well, but even if you are a Soviet agent, you could defect. They do it all the time. The damned Communist empire is going to hell in a basket, fast. You can see that. A guy that knows as much as you do still has time to switch. You could probably make a deal.

Not with me. I don't know a thing. I'm suggesting it to you. And to those on our side that have something to deal with. I'll bet you could get a call through to J. Edgar Hoover at almost any hour of the day or night. Very few people could, but I'll bet you could.

All right, think of it this way. You are an idealist, and you are a realist. I'm using both those words in the non-technical sense. You know the condition of man, and you know (for you have said it in your book) that we need to love one another. You want peace. You want to avert the destruction of cities.

Now the United States is a funny country. It is rich and fat and scant o' breath, not to mention naive and semiliterate. I think you know this country pretty well. You've been in New Mexico and Tennessee as well as California and New York. If you will think about it you will know that what we may call Jacksonianism is not dead by a long shot. Ask Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., what he thinks about that, though of course his opinion is probably not as good as your own.

Here's the thing—Old Hickory was a killer, an arrant nationalist killer. He left his imprint. You see, when he thought it was for Rachel or the United States he didn't think he was being selfish or immoral to shoot to kill, or order the troops to fire.

Nemo me impune lacessit. You know about the rattlesnake flag. And you must have noticed the American reaction to Bulganin's boast about rockets against Britain.

On the other hand, if the U.S. can be sure that it has a monopoly or an unrivaled superiority in atomic and hydrogen weapons, then it will probably be in no hurry to use them. We used them against Japan, but that was a sequel to Pearl Harbor. There doesn't have to be another Pearl Harbor, does there? Then perhaps there will not be another Hiroshima.

Speaking of Hiroshima—if you do decide to talk, you had better open your mouth sort of wide and make it real plain. I read in the New York Times where you told a graduating class last June that "the nation's leaders 'lost a certain sense of restraint' when they decided to drop the atomic bomb at Hiroshima."[69] This is an unfortunate way for a guy to get himself reported who not only "made the bomb," but also helped select the target.

You will remember that before the Gray Board you swore a solemn oath, and subsequently you said, among other things:

> Hiroshima was, of course, very successful, partly for reasons unanticipated by us. We had been over the targets with a committee that was sent out to consult us and to consider them, and the targets that were bombed [Hiroshima and Nagasaki] were among the list that seemed right to us. . . . We did say that we did not think exploding one of these things as a firecracker over a desert was likely to be very impressive.[70]

We need your testimony, Doctor. Let's have an operation candor and end the torment of secrecy. In spite of my probing into your personal affairs and speculating about your individual psychology, I am not anxious to regulate your life. My concern is with U.S. military security. I think that all invasions of your privacy ought to cease just as soon as you quit keeping private, matters of public consequence.

You can help your country. You can end the arms race by cutting off the "imitative" Soviets' source of supply of new information and materials. You can save from their own fanaticism those of your acquaintances who are working compulsively to undermine and sabotage the land that feeds them and the friends who guard them. They will not all hate you for it, for among them are some who want to be caught, being somewhat like the young fellow in Chicago who scribbled on the wall (in lipstick, wasn't it? It was pretty unpleasant), "Catch me, please, before I kill again."

Once you said, "We are gradually coming to a critical awareness of the fact that it is much harder to tell the truth than we like to think."[71]

Let's try again. It gets easier.

When you have done that you may find a new though ancient complementarity, where "Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other."

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am the British producer-director of the series REPORT FROM AMERICA which is currently (and successfully) being aired by the B.B.C. So much for that!

For too long a time I have nursed a strong desire to simply meet you.

I don't want to talk about REPORT FROM AMERICA or even SEE IT NOW. Least of all do I want to talk about myself. I'd just like to have lunch with you and leave the choice of conversation to you.

Does your impossibly busy schedule allow for such luxuries as unmolested feeding? I will take the liberty of phoning your secretary to learn the answer.

Yours sincerely,

Mr. Edward R. Murrow

New York, New York.

Dear Sir:

During the months prior to October 4, 1957, many stories dealing with important aspects of our defense program appeared in the open press. Because the essence of these stories is too involved its discussion in this letter must be deferred.

Rather, I should like to cite the fact that these stories were sparsely and sporadically distributed over a long period of time. The consequence of this has been that the picture comprised by their totality has never been presented to the American people. As a physicist who for the past five years has been engaged in the research and development phase of the U. S. Army's rocket and missile program, it is my conviction that the sum of these facts comprises the substance of an important story which, if presented to the American people, will enlighten our future course of action.

Because of the timely nature of this story it is quite possible that it would lend itself to presentation in the form of one of your current events programs. If you should feel an interest to discuss these events and their significance with me I should be very happy to hear from you.

As my schedule is presently comprised, I anticipate being in New York City in the A. M. of either Monday, Thursday or Friday, the 18, 21 and 22 of this month. Trusting that our respective commitments will permit such a meeting, I am,

Yours very sincerely,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Remsen Bird has sent me a copy of the letter he wrote you on November 17, and I can't resist seconding his suggestion.

Admiral Spruance has made a tremendously vital contribution to one of our projects involving better utilization of scientific manpower. This project was initiated in October, 1956 (see enclosed material) and, in April of next year, we will be holding a conference on senior scientific manpower with the cooperation of Spruance's Monterey group.

Dear Fred:

It was very nice to talk to you and Ed the other day.

I am enclosing some background material on cities for you to throw in a file and peruse at your convenience. You already have that speech I wrote for Andrew Heiskell.

If you have an opportunity I hope you will take a look at the Kinescope; I will be happy to come over and join you when you do.

It looks as though we may go ahead with a major series of articles on cities and their problems this spring in LIFE. It is a fascinating topic but so vast and intricate that one is almost baffled by the difficulty of simplifying and organizing the material so as to make it entertaining, pictorial, and educational. However I know it can be done if we are only given a free hand - with no inhibitions on imagination or proprietary direction.

The same of course goes for a television show on this subject. Most people won't accept the fact that the future of our (so called) civilization is dependent on what happens to our sprawling cities and the dwindling land resources around them.

I hope to see you and Ed again soon. Gladys sends regards. She's joining the Fund for the Advancement of Education on Monday to start a new research project for them.

Dear Leo:

Many thanks for sending me a transcript of the remarks made by Dr. Henry A. Kissinger for the Board of the Research Institute of America.

Leo Cherne
Executive Director

Research Institute of America
589 Fifth Ave. New York 17, N.Y.

The Research Institute recently issued a transcript of a talk given to a closed group of our top analysts and editors by Dr. Henry A. Kissinger. Because of the great interest our Members have shown in this report, we thought that you might want to see a copy.

The report was issued before the giant Soviet achievement of their second satellite and likely still further advances. These events, we believe, make his comments even more pertinent.

We must ask, however, in this instance, that it not be reproduced or reprinted in any form.

We will be happy to have any comments you're stimulated to make.

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

October 24, 1957

To Executive Members of the Research Institute:

I want to take you behind the scenes in a matter which is of such importance that it will affect not only the U. S. economy, but also, in my judgment, the very peace of the world and the survival of a free America in that world.

Several weeks ago Time magazine said "In the Pentagon, the State Department, the White House, top U. S. policy-makers are earnestly debating a new book, a brilliant, independent analysis of the nation's postwar diplomatic and military struggle with Communism." The book: "Nuclear Weapons and Foreign Policy" by Henry A. Kissinger, Associate Director of Harvard's New Center for International Affairs and policy consultant to the U. S. Joint Chiefs of Staff. Last Monday the New York Herald Tribune published an emergency editorial calling attention to Dr. Kissinger's views.

I asked Dr. Kissinger to address an off-the-record, round-table meeting of twenty of the top analysts on the Research Institute's staff. This is the group which meets at least once each month with a top business leader, foreign statesman, scholar, or Washington personage to get his private views on current developments.

Dr. Kissinger talked candidly. We asked questions, he answered them. In this case, the urgency and importance of the subject caused me to break the rules and ask Dr. Kissinger to permit us to send you a transcript of his remarks. He said we could do so with the strict understanding that you would hold his comments confidential, that you would under no circumstances permit them to be reprinted.

In the attached transcript, Dr. Kissinger answers such crucial questions as what will happen when both the U. S. and the U.S.S.R. have missiles in operational quantities.

I think you'll welcome having these views of the man whose judgments are taken so seriously in Washington and which are having such an impact on American opinion makers.

Sincerely yours,

Leo Cherne

CONFIDENTIAL

TRANSCRIPT OF REMARKS BY HENRY A. KISSINGER
BEFORE THE BOARD OF THE RESEARCH INSTITUTE OF AMERICA

I'm very glad to be here and very glad to have the opportunity to make the acquaintance of the Research Institute of America, which I have admired but never had the privilege of knowing.

I have warned Mr. Cherne that I will talk fairly informally. I will talk about the problems which seem to me to be most important in the field of military policy, and its relationship to diplomacy, and our whole posture vis-a-vis the Soviet Union and the rest of the world.

One of the basic problems of statesmanship is to relate the intentions of other powers to their potentials. A statesman always has the opportunity to ignore the capabilities of the other side by interpreting its intentions in the most favorable manner. Another way of saying it is that any statesman has the task of attempting to balance the capabilities of other states against how they might use those capabilities.

It is clear, for example, that the development by Great Britain of a thermo-nuclear capability is not a major threat to us, but not because this capability is of no consequence. They could do a fair amount of damage with it; but we don't believe, and correctly, that they are likely to use it against us. Conversely, the development by a Soviet satellite, or by China, of even a much less strong nuclear capability would be a substantial threat to us.

Since 1945 we have tended to balance the capabilities and the intentions of the Soviet Union, and in some respect that of other states, in a manner that requires the least sacrifice on our part. We have taken Soviet "peace" offensives at face value because they fitted in with our predilections and because it saved us from making difficult choices. And because of this, the Soviets have been able to concentrate on what I like to call the "strategy of ambiguity" -- in which the provocation always seems somehow out of proportion to the risks involved, or in which the issue always seems somehow to fit in with what we consider legitimate or what the rest of the world considers legitimate.

We've had this conceptual and moral difficulty not only in balancing the capabilities against the intentions but also in understanding what are the significant capabilities of power in the nuclear age. We've had great difficulty in coming to grips with the use of power, with the nature of the interest we have in the world, and with the measures we must take to achieve our goals.

We've not understood, for example, that the manner by which a power reacts to a challenge does not depend only on abstract definitions of aggression or of justice. What a power considers aggression will depend to some extent on its margin of survival. As long as we could not be defeated by a sudden attack, for example, we could afford to let another state strike the first blow. We could afford to let aggression become unambiguous and to let armed units cross sovereign boundaries. We tend to forget that of the wars which we later considered to be caused by the attempt of a state to achieve world domination, none was considered of sufficient provocation for America to enter it in the beginning. Hitler may have been interested in world domination, but his interest took the form of an attack on the Polish corridor and on Danzig, which did not seem worth America's interference in the war. The same, of course, was true in World War I. On the other hand, other states which have smaller margins of survival, and therefore "lower boiling points", must react very quickly.

One recent example of this was the Soviet arms deal to Egypt. When the Soviet arms deal was announced I happened to be in Washington. My recommendation at the time was that the Soviet arms deal had to be stopped by all means -- even by the use of force. My feeling was that, mathematically, any entry of Soviet arms into the Middle East had to lead to an explosive situation whatever the protestations of peaceful intent, and no matter how sincere Nasser might be. (It is, incidentally, a very naive notion that the sincerity of a revolutionary guarantees the fact that he will not bring about cataclysmic consequences.) It seemed quite clear that the entry of Soviet arms into Egypt would, if nothing else, force Israel to take some steps because a state like Israel, which cannot afford to lose a single battle, whose territory can be cut in half by one defeat, will not permit a threat to become unambiguous. A state whose margin of survival is narrow will seek to anticipate armed attack. And in this connection it is quite immaterial whether Nasser, in fact, intended to cross Israel's borders. The very build-up in Egyptian strength was certain to lead to an explosive situation. The sale of Soviet arms to the Middle East had to lead to some of the explosive consequences which plague us to this day.

Also, because we have had very great difficulty in understanding the role of power in foreign policy, we have conducted our diplomacy somewhat as if it were a popularity contest in which votes had to be canvassed and in which one gears one's measures to what seems to be the consensus of humanity (a consensus which is very often misinterpreted). We've forgotten that foreign policy is really the art of effecting the will of the sovereign state and that what a power will do will depend to some extent on the balancing of risks.

The United Nations last year proved relatively effective in the Egyptian situation because in Egypt a symbolic act could be coupled with minimum risk. It was clear to every state voting that it would not be forced to back its resolution by the assumption of a risk, however small.

The United Nations proved highly ineffective in Hungary because here the resolution could be given effect only by the assumption of rather substantial risks and because the states constituting the majority vote were not willing to run those risks.

It is quite clear that if we solicit votes, if we run diplomacy as a popularity contest, then the pressures of all the states that are most interested in preserving peace will always be directed against us. For votes in the United Nations are not inevitably determined by the delegates' agreement or disagreement with our policy of the moment. Very often the position of the U.N. will be affected by some more overriding consideration not directly related to the issue at hand. Thus the attitude of India on Hungary was fundamentally influenced by the desire not to establish a precedent which might be used against India on Kashmir. No American policy could possibly have changed this.

On other issues the vote in the United Nations will be affected by the desire of the many powers to preserve the peace almost at any price. Because they consider us the more malleable of the super powers, many of the uncommitted nations choose to direct their pressures against us. The Soviet Union, therefore, frequently profits from its intransigence by inducing other states to meet it half way, which nevertheless means a loss of position for the free world.

Because of our reluctance to employ force and our inability to think of using our power except against the kind of overt aggression which the Soviets very rarely present, diplomacy takes on paradoxical overtones. One canon of traditional diplomacy is that a negotiator should concentrate only on issues which seem soluble, and that he should avoid raising issues that do not seem to hold any promise of success. The application of this maxim enables the Soviets to control the pace of the negotiations by being extremely intransigent on certain issues and therefore making it clear that these issues do not have any promise of successful resolution. The Soviets can therefore divert the diplomatic debate to the issues which are most embarrassing to us and on which we have least to gain.

In some respects our approach to the Hungarian resolution is a good example of this. Instead of creating a fait accompli diplomatically by announcing what we would stand for and by forcing others to choose sides, we went around soliciting what seemed to us to be the consensus. This consensus was certain to be increasingly watered down the more uncertain we appeared.

Our difficulty in coming to grips with the problem of power has therefore exalted the role of weak and irresponsible states, of states who like to play major roles internationally and find it dramatic to do so and who can do so without paying any price.

This has created a very strange situation. In the past, the most difficult task of statesmanship was considered to be foreign policy and not domestic policy. In foreign policy, you were dealing with other sovereign states whose will you could not control, and the penalty for miscalculation in foreign policy was usually greater than in domestic policy. Now, paradoxically, foreign policy seems for many statesmen simpler than domestic policy. They find that while in domestic policy every action has a price, in foreign policy no action seems to have a price. When Nehru attempted to redraw the linguistic boundaries of India he found very quickly that he had communal riots on his hands. In foreign policy he had rarely come up against the international equivalent of riots.

The temptation is therefore tremendous to seek to escape difficult domestic choices by entering the international field, to postpone the difficult and thankless tasks of domestic construction for the glories of the international stage. All the more so since any state seems to be able to attract major attention by the degree of the irresponsibility it develops.

One of the consequences, therefore, of our difficulty in coming to grips with the problem of power has been a paradox: for decades, people concerned with international affairs, individuals interested in world peace, have argued that diplomacy was the alternative to war and that the world should look forward to a time when all disputes could be settled by diplomatic negotiations. We now find that diplomacy emerges as the complement of war and that the dream of generations for universal peace, if it were realized, would in fact lead to the perpetuation of all disputes, however trivial.

Now let me speak for a few minutes on the form the dilemma in respect to power has taken. I've mentioned the fact that we have tended to consider aggression as unambiguous and that we would then go all out to defeat it. We have also had the notion that peace is the normal relation among states and that on a certain day, perhaps after a four-power conference, perhaps after the Russians have become reasonable, peace will suddenly break out.

We are a status-quo power in the sense that we want nothing of the rest of the world except to be left alone by it, and therefore we tend to think of aggression as conducted for its own sake and for something as vague as world domination, to be resisted by maximum force and by collective action.

But to defeat the Soviet strategy of ambiguity, it is necessary to be clear about two questions: first, which transformations one is willing to resist, and secondly, how one is going to resist them.

I would suggest that in considering which transformations we are willing to resist, we will face some of our most difficult choices. I have tried to get individuals and groups in and out of government to address themselves to one question: which transformations would we resist no matter how they occur, even if they happen according to means that seem to us to be legitimate. We have to ask ourselves the question whether we are going to prevent the fact of Soviet expansion or the manner of Soviet expansion.

Because this choice of which transformation one is willing to resist is so difficult and because it is so affected by the varying positions of the major powers, an inconsistency has grown up between the attempt to assemble maximum force and the desire to achieve collective action. It is well illustrated by our alliance policy. We've found that the doctrine of collective security is quite capable of paralyzing a state that is capable of resisting alone.

In the past it was assumed that collective security was an accretion to the strength of each power. We find now that collective security may keep the powers that are capable of acting alone from responding effectively. This may have happened to us in Korea; it may have happened to the British in Suez.

We find also that the theoretical purpose of the alliance to resist aggression never seems to fit any of the issues actually in dispute. From Korea to Indo-China, from Suez to the present situation in Syria, there are always disputes within the free world coalition about whether this is really the case for which they had prepared. As a result we also find, of course, that the alliance becomes the whipping boy in the domestic policy of most countries.

In short, war (and even the threat of war) depends not only on the cost and not only on the objective alone, but on the relation of the price one has to pay to attain the objective. It seems to me that we have not understood this relationship because we have thought of aggression as being for something as vague as world domination. We have thought of strategy in terms of revenge, in which we can inflict greater losses on the enemy than he can inflict on us. But the growth of technology has made the disproportion of damage relatively unimportant in an all-out war. We've even found that under certain circumstances an inferior retaliatory capability can be very dangerous.

During the MacArthur hearings on the Korean war everyone agreed that there could be no doubt that we would win an all-out war should it break out. Still, we were afraid to press the Chinese too hard. The relatively inferior retaliatory capability of the Soviets could deter us because the gain in Korea seemed to us (and I think wrongly) out of proportion to the objective.

We've had a preoccupation with surprise attack. Most of our military leaders assume that a war will start with a surprise attack on the continental United States and that this is really the war we have to prepare for. In fact, this is the least likely war. The Soviets would have to achieve a preciseness of calculation and a recklessness which is really out of keeping with their past tactics. Their risks in starting such a war would be immense, while their gains would be problematical as long as they can make advances by other means.

We've had an obsession with technology -- as if a superior weapon, by itself, could get us a strategic advantage without our having a doctrine for employing the weapon. I was asked before we came in about the Soviet intercontinental ballistic missile. I think it is a worrisome phenomenon. I do not think it's a decisive phenomenon if we behave effectively. Missiles do not yet exist in sufficient quantity or with sufficient accuracy and, in any case, we are not that far behind the Soviets. By the time they possess missiles in operational quantity, we probably will possess them also, at least if we make a major effort.

However, when both sides possess intercontinental missiles, a surprise attack is even less likely. There is no particular point in attacking, even if you can inflict greater damage than the opponent, if the damage the opponent can inflict is already sufficient to destroy your society. Weapons like the intercontinental ballistic missiles are essential, but their primary use will be to avoid defeat, to prevent an opponent from attempting to destroy us. They cannot be used to achieve positive ends. They cannot be used to prevent minor transformations. For what will appear a "minor" transformation will be interpreted with increasing rigidity as the horror of all-out war increases and if our only possible response is all-out war.

I am not at all persuaded that an attack by the Soviet Union in Western Europe, if it were conducted with sufficient ambiguity -- if say, they moved troops into Western Germany ostensibly to disarm it -- would be considered a sufficient provocation by us to unleash an all-out nuclear attack on metropolitan Russia. I would not wish to be in the shoes of the President who has to make the choice: of insuring the destruction of the United States to prevent the occupation of Europe.

This brings me to my final point. We have gambled everything on the strategy of deterrence. We have assumed that if we could threaten the Soviet Union with overwhelming power, the Soviet Union would in fact not engage in aggressions. We have found that in practice, the more horrible we made our weapons technology, the relatively easier we made it for the Soviet Union to shift the risk of engaging in an all-out war to us.

In this age, with both sides capable, literally, of obliterating each other, the side which has the moral or the physical strength to act puts its opponent at a great disadvantage, because it can force its opponent to choose whether a certain measure is worth suicide. Therefore, we have found that wherever our deterrent policy did not work we were not prepared for a strategy for actually fighting a war. We had relied on a threat which in most cases we had proved unwilling to implement.

One of the disturbing things about British defense policy is precisely this: They have put themselves into the position of having to choose between suicide or surrender. The slogan among military people now is that our capability for war is designed to avoid war, not to fight one. I would suggest you cannot avoid war except by the willingness to fight one.

The implication of this, of course, is that we must develop a capability for fighting a limited war, and we have somehow to find the moral resolution to be willing to fight a limited war.

Without this readiness there will be a basic inequality in the position of the two sides. For the past 18 months, Washington has been worried about the possibility of a revolution in Poland. Some people argue that we must keep the Soviets from suffering substantial defeats, lest in desperation they start a war. If this is true, then it means the Soviets can blackmail us when they are weak as well as when they are strong.

If the Soviets are permitted to fill every vacuum, and we cannot use any opportunities in the Soviet orbit, we will be on the defensive all around a 20,000 mile periphery which is in a state of revolutionary ferment. If the Soviets can keep every territory that they conquer or annex and are relieved from pressure, and can always concentrate on the point of maximum embarrassment to us, the result is foreordained: There is no policy clever enough and brilliant enough to keep us from being eventually pushed out of Eurasia, a step at a time. One can lose a football game by holding the opponent to five yards at a time just as surely as by leaving openings where he can run the whole length of the football field.

So, my proposition really consists of two related recommendations. We have to be tougher inwardly in recognizing aggression and recognizing the things we wish to prevent and the things we wish to achieve. But, this will do us little good unless we can develop the physical capability to make this policy work through a doctrine of limited war, and by not letting the Soviets paralyze us with the argument that any limited war must automatically lead to all-out war.

WASHINGTON CALLING

MARQUIS CHILDS
1028 CONNECTICUT AVENUE, N. W.

LA SALLE BUILDING
WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

April 16, 1956

Dear Ed:

I made the enclosed talk at the University of Washington at the banquet dedicating their new communications building which is the finest in the country of its kind. Partly because I pay you and See It Now a well deserved tribute I wanted you to see this. But also I wanted you to read what I had to say about the problem of communication and the way in which, in my opinion, we are failing.

Any way here it is. It has been much too long since I have seen you. Is there any chance that you will be coming this way in the near future.

Regards,

Mark

TALK BY MARQUIS CHILDS, AT THE UNIVERSITY OF WASHINGTON, IN SEATTLE, ON APRIL 5, 1956.

A distinguished psychiatrist not long ago sent an open letter to a group of commentators and editorial writers challenging them to demand nothing less than the highest integrity from all men in public life. He was asking in effect that those who mould opinion, or who attempt to do so, lay down a stern law of rebuke and rejection for anyone compromising with the great moral issues of our times. His letter was written out of something like despair at the attrition, the dangerous erosion, of values that has taken place at almost every level of our national life. It was written in the hope that opinion could be mobilized and brought to bear in both a negative and a positive fashion on the principal figures seeking to resolve the troubles that beset us at home and abroad.

It is not a new dilemma that confronts us today but a very old one. We find ourselves as a nation in a position of incredible wealth and power. We want to enjoy that wealth and that power. We have worked very hard for it. Yet we are told by many voices which often have a nagging and insistent sound that we have manifold responsibilities in every corner of the earth which we must measure up to. If here at home we are to live up to the noble conviction of freedom and equality that inspired our beginning as a nation, we must quickly reform our ways. In short we are told, and this is repeated so often it takes on the shrill overtones of the voice of the common scold, that if Western civilization is to be saved then we in America by our constant, unfailing, steadfast effort must save it.

There is here, it seems to me, a basic problem of communication; a problem which has a long historical precedent and one with which you have a direct concern in the dedication of your Communications Building. The letter from the psychiatrist made me think a little of the prophet Amos in the Old Testament. You will remember that Amos addressed himself in the eighth century B.C. to the people of Samaria. He told them that they were selfish, self-centered, concerned with wealth and luxury for the few and unconcerned over the poverty and the suffering of the many. He told them that their foreign policy was ruinous since they arrogantly overrode the rights of their neighbors. Amos told the Samarians that if they did not mend their ways they would bring destruction down upon themselves. We know that within a relatively short time Samaria disappeared from the face of the earth.

Now Amos, of course, spoke out of the profound and passionate belief that his was the word of God. He was one of the great prophets who helped to create the tradition of the conscience that is at the base of our Graeco-Judaeo-Christian civilization. But I would like to suggest to you today that the problem of communication which confronted Amos was not unlike that, in kind at least, which confronts us today. This problem of communication -- the expression of the urgent demands of a time of crisis -- responsibility, idealism, discipline, as opposed to the old habits of comfortable and self-centered isolation, is the heart of the matter. We have never before had such extraordinary means of communication. Yet at the same time I think our failure to communicate, to reach a common understanding about ideas and ideals, was perhaps never more tragically evident. I venture to say that as a nation we were much closer to a common communication when Benjamin Franklin, whose 250th anniversary we are observing this year, founded the American Philosophical Society and pushed the development of the postal system primarily because he believed in the exchange of ideas.

There are many reasons why with such vast means at our disposal we should nevertheless fall so far short of conveying the true nature of the crisis in which we find ourselves and the obligation that is ours in that crisis. As you undoubtedly know, one of the occupational diseases of the business of commenting and analyzing is an overweaning sense of omniscience. The commentator all too often comes to sound like a poor imitation of one of the prophets of old. Prophecies of doom can be picked off every bush, and I did not come all the way out here to deliver still another Jeremiad. But, knowing your concern with the problem of communication, I did want to try to talk frankly with you today about what I feel is a serious failure.

Let me say first of all that in the new media of mass communication, radio and television, the effort at meaningful and vital communication simply has not been made. It is said that television by its very nature must be a medium of entertainment. But merely saying this does not absolve those responsible for the programs coming over this new form of communication, which now reaches well over half the American people, from their responsibility for helping to inform opinion on the great issues of the day. One could as well have said that the newspaper is a medium of entertainment and have filled it with comic strips, sensational crime and sports, devoting only a few paragraphs to the real news of the day. Some newspapers seem unhappily to be trying to follow that course.

Just as the newspapers can be used for entertainment or for true communication on the level of ideas and ideals, so can television. We have had at least some proof of how resourcefully television can be used to make vivid and real the problems that have in cold print an all too abstract sound. In his television program "See it Now" Edward R. Murrow showed how with the use of a little imagination the reality of threatening war in the Middle East, the overflowing farm surpluses, the integration of the races can be brought to life on the TV screen to hold the interest of an audience of many millions.

The "SEE IT NOW" program represents one of the few efforts by a major network to use television for these ends. Another was the interesting but unhappily short-lived program "Background" on NBC. The production costs of "See it Now" were high. That was one reason the sponsor dropped the program. For the same expenditure on a program of "entertainment" it was hoped to reach a very much larger audience. Then, too, that fateful word "controversial" was applied to certain of the "SEE IT NOW" programs. One can only guess at what the Founding Fathers would say if they knew we scurried away from what was labeled "controversial". Controversy was the life blood of the times that tried men's souls and it was only, in Washington's phrase, the "summer patriots" who ran away.

It is perhaps unfair in this instance to blame the sponsor since after all we were able to see this important experiment in the use of television in the news for two years. There is here a question of responsibility. News, the communication of ideas and ideals, cannot be left solely to the whim of the market place. That has been one of the serious weaknesses of commercial radio and television. So long as the market was bullish for news, as in World War II and its immediate aftermath, we had a great many news programs. But when commercial sponsors are no longer willing to pay for such programs, we find the news drying up.

This is a serious evasion of responsibility on the part of those with authority to determine program content. Let me add that I believe our system is best for us. The British Broadcasting Corporation, a government-owned corporation operating radio and most TV programs, is perhaps the best system for Great Britain. Such a system applied here would be subject I am afraid to grave abuses. But there is under our system a responsibility to serve the public. That responsibility is at the base of the franchise of the free press, free radio and television. If there is a default in this obligation to serve the public, then sooner or later the franchise will be weakened and even destroyed. Public service in television does not consist in supplying a constant diet of chocolate ice cream sodas.

In this connection I would like to mention the particular responsibility of a Presidential election year. We have heard a great deal in recent weeks about the abuses of campaign contributions. Those abuses are very real and the so-called clean elections law which now seems to have a chance of passage falls short of correcting them. If the cost of television time for political campaigning, both on the national and local level, is to continue to increase with the increased use of television, then those abuses will multiply. It would seem to be the part of wisdom not only for the networks but for local stations as well to come forward with an offer of substantial free time to the major parties and the principal candidates. Such an offer would contribute to a sense of justice and fairness in the right of both parties to put their case before the electorate although one of these parties happens at the moment to have very great financial resources coming from campaign contributions and the other party is faced with a deficit for a lack of such contributions. Those who own and control the facilities of radio and television ought to realize that a conviction of injustice, if it is allowed to grow and fester, will eventually bring political reprisals. Those reprisals could endanger the whole structure of our system of free radio and television. The political climate can change quickly and a privilege freely granted in one atmosphere can be abruptly withdrawn in another.

I have been talking about what might be called the mechanics of communication; or more accurately the mechanics and the politics of communication. I should like to suggest what seem to me to be perhaps deeper and more underlying reasons for our deficiency in real and meaningful communication one to another. Those responsible for the content of radio and television are often heard to say, "But if there is no demand for serious treatment of the news and the issues of the day, and we do have very little demand, why should we feel an obligation to provide such treatment for what must be after all a small minority."

They have a point. We may well ask ourselves why there is not a greater and more insistent demand for programs of substance concerned with the great problems of the time. Why is there such a passive acceptance of whatever "they" choose to send us from New York or Hollywood?

The fashion today is to put the blame for all our failures and deficiencies on our system of education. This is manifestly unfair if only because of the intense competition for the mind of the young. There has grown up what might be called a distraction industry. It is pervasive and far reaching. It takes in comic books, motion pictures, television, each with a skillfully calculated claim on young minds. If this has not already been done by some ambitious Ph.D. in the field of education, it would be interesting to try to estimate over a period of several weeks or months the amount of time in the lives of youngsters of an impressionable age claimed by this distraction industry.

I remember seeing in my youth a frequently reproduced picture of the young Abraham Lincoln reading by the glow of an open fire. We learned that he devoured every scrap of print he could get his hands on in that primitive frontier; the Bible, Plutarch's Lives, political tracts; and what he read filled him with a deep and abiding curiosity to learn more. He had not been subjected as he grew up to the thousand and one distractions that clamor for the attention of our young.

It is time to ask ourselves how the roots of intellectual curiosity are to be formed and how they are to grow and be nurtured. Nor is this an idle, academic question. It may have a far more direct bearing on the struggle with communism than we realize. A keen American observer recently in Soviet Russia noted the seriousness of students at almost every educational level. He saw teen-agers in book stores eagerly poring over books on physics, chemistry and mathematics. It occurred to him to wonder whether one reason for their absorption in serious subjects was that they were free from most of the manifold distractions now part of the daily fare of our young people. He wondered if this did not help to explain the zeal with which students in the Soviet Union were preparing to be scientists and engineers. These are sobering reflections when we know that Russia is turning out half again as many technicians and engineers as the United States.

I scarcely need to add that science is only one field in which we have begun to be aware of our deficiencies. We are beginning to understand that representative self-government cannot operate on an automatic pilot while we all enjoy the ride as passengers. It calls for understanding and for the kind of intelligent participation which grows out of the knowledge that there must be concerted effort by many if the system is to work. Yet a recent study conducted by the Fund for the Republic and published in Look magazine shows that only eight percent of the American people are concerned over world problems including the threat of war and only another six percent over national and local problems. A mere one percent were concerned over the danger of communist infiltration on the one hand and on the other hand the threat to our civil liberties inherent in the struggle with communism. Even allowing for a wide margin of error, these are shocking percentages. They show a tragic failure to communicate the meaning of this strange moment of history in which we live. Perhaps part of the blame should fall on education; the dilution of the curricula extending from the earliest grades up to and through the university. But we should not forget the fearful competition that education faces in our age of distraction.

Lastly I should like to speak about the failure of leadership in this matter of communication. Carved on one of the government buildings in Washington are the words, "Where there is no vision the people perish." That has a trite and commonplace sound. But it may be that we have too long taken those words for granted.

Mere expression of goodwill, mere good intention, is not vision. Vision signifies the deep and searching examination of the condition of mankind and the communication in vital and meaningful form of what the heart and the mind have found. I think we have a right to ask whether we today have from any source that vision of the past and the future which is one of the attributes of true leadership. Vision is not complacency, it is not self-congratulation, it is not expediency. It is often, as Lincoln knew so well, compounded of the darkest and bitterest truths which must for all their dire import be communicated if leadership is to serve the highest and noblest ends.

Let me try to illustrate what I mean in connection with the gravest issue confronting this country today. It is the issue of the equality of each citizen irrespective of race, color or creed as raised anew in the decision of the Supreme Court declaring the segregation of the races in the public schools to be unconstitutional. This may seem remote to you here in the Northwest where fortunately you have not suffered from the ancient quarrel that brought us to a terrible civil war. But believe me it is not remote. Just as did that controversy of a century ago, it relates directly to the rule of law and the powers of the Federal government. And this time the context is far larger than it was a hundred years ago. For our system is on trial before the world in competition with the system of communism. What happens in Alabama whether for good or evil will be reflected at once in the headlines of the press of India and Indonesia, in the farthest corners of the earth.

The gravity of the situation in the South can hardly be exaggerated.

There is on every hand the material for a terrible conflagration. Some minor incident which in other times might have passed almost unnoticed could today touch off fearful bloodshed and destruction. There are communities in the Deep South where an uneasy armed truce between the two races may be broken at any moment.

It is imperative that ways be found to ease this intolerable tension. Communication between the two peoples has all but broken down. Here, it seems to me, is a responsibility that President Eisenhower must assume. He should call the leaders of the two races together in Washington before it is too late. He should encourage them to try to find a way out of the present impasse. He should communicate to them his own urgent conviction of the need for a reasonable compromise. He has spoken in favor of moderation, he has cautioned against extremism. But this is not enough. He must put the weight of his own great popularity, the far reaching authority of the office he holds, in the balance. Even that may not be sufficient. But to do less, to permit the present drift to continue, is to wait for what could be irretrievable disaster.

Certainly such a course involves risks. Those who argue always for caution and political expediency can be expected to oppose it. But to wait, to wait for something in that fine Micawberish phrase to turn up, is a far greater risk. One may argue the wisdom of the Supreme Court decision and particularly the wisdom of its timing. But it is today the law of the land and the responsibility of leadership is to communicate the meaning of this decision in the lives of each and every one of us. This has not been done.

As the educator is a whipping boy in this time of troubles so also is the American official who undertakes to tell the world the American story. The Voice of America has been investigated and reinvestigated, condemned and denounced time and time again. Almost any member of Congress however obscure but believes that he could do it far better.

The Voice of America is a rather weak voice. It has many imperfections. But in all fairness we should consider the difficulties under which it must operate. Is it fair to expect this government agency to speak to the world with a clear, resolute voice when we here at home find it difficult to speak to one another in any reasonable or meaningful way about the issues that divide us? This seems to me the question we must ask ourselves. If we have all but ceased to discuss in a civilized fashion the problem of equality between the races then it is manifestly unfair to belabor the Voice of America for fading and failing from time to time.

My impression in the course of fairly extensive travel overseas is that the Voice is more effective than we have any right to expect. It was not so long ago that many of the employees in our information service abroad, often overworked and underpaid, were treated as though they were criminal suspects. Only two years ago two irresponsible mischief makers flashed through Europe presumably with the authority of a Senate committee browbeating and intimidat- anyone who challenged their dictates. We may have forgotten that sorry episode. Europe has not forgotten it nor have those Americans who here humiliated by the tactics of these two intolerable Katzenjammer kids. We should not be surprised to find that many able information specialists have resigned and that it is increasingly difficult to persuade qualified men and women to take remote and difficult assignments.

I have said that I would not deliver a Jeremiad. But if I have sounded rather like a prophet of doom, it is because of a deep sense of urgency and a concern over what seems at best inertia and indifference and at worst a stubborn refusal to consider the deadly nature of the contest in which we find ourselves; a contest in which all the values of our western civilization stemming from the Renaissance are in the balance.

The threat of Communist totalitarianism is so much more insidious than most of us understand. It is too often represented as a kind of cops and robbers pursuit. If as in a television horse opera we can only capture the bad guys and put them in jail, then the good guys will run things and we shall all be happy forever after. Something as elementary as this seems to have motivated the Federal officials who padlocked the Daily Worker at the moment it was demonstrating its inability to keep up with the latest gyrations of the Communist line and its inability to hold the attention of more than a handful of readers.

The threat that Communism insidiously poses is that it will pervert our own free way of life. In resisting it we shall become like it. Our fears will become so obsessive that in the pursuit of evil we shall forget the good of a strong and free society. The fever that plagued us two years ago has happily subsided. But we are left with many of the restraints, the inhibitions, the timidites of the rash of McCarthyism and they operate still to some degree on press, radio and television.

We suffer today from the twin blight of complacency and conformism. If ours is to be a dynamic society providing by word and deed the leadership of the western world, then there is no room in it for complacency. It is almost literally true that nothing that we do can possibly measure up to the extraordinary demands that are put upon us as Americans in this extraordinary century in which we are living. We can only give the best that we have in the hope that it will not be too little. That is what I know you will do in this fine new building dedicated to communication; to the urgent necessity that we speak to each other honestly and meaningfully about the issues that trouble us so deeply.

Dear Ed:

Thank you very much for your kind letter in response to mine inviting you to serve on the CITIZENS FOR JAVITS - Advisory Committee.

I know that you agree with President Eisenhower's belief that Jack is wanted and needed in Washington if the President is to have the strongest possible support during his second term in the White House, but I understand and appreciate fully your reasons for withholding your name from the roster of the committee.

I am sure that you are aware that we are currently cooperating with the Finance Committee in an effort to raise the funds needed for an intensive election campaign. Many of our friends who, like yourself, have personal reasons for not joining the Committee are showing their support of Jack Javits through their own generous personal contributions. It is our feeling that you too will want to participate in this way and I am therefore taking the liberty of putting this appeal in writing to you.

I assure you that we will be most grateful for whatever you can do to help.

Sincerely yours,

Bob

Dear Bob:

Thanks for your letter about the Committee for Jack Javits. I hold him in the highest possible esteem, but because of the nature of my work I cannot associate myself with either political parties or individuals. In this job one is obliged to do everything humanly possible to remain strictly neutral.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

At this moment it is a conservative estimate that Jack Javits has at least an even chance to be elected Senator from New York in the coming election. During his present term in the White House, President Eisenhower was seriously handicapped by an opposition Congress. Although the Democratic majority was down to two in the Senate, this was often sufficient to defeat some of President Eisenhower's most important legislation.

The election of Jack Javits will balance the scale, and I need not tell you that President Eisenhower is most anxious that for the first time in many years New York have a solid Republican representation in the Senate.

If you agree with me that this objective is of vital importance, I invite you to join an Advisory Committee we are forming to assure the election of Jack Javits. Therefore, with my assurance that there is no obligation implied other than what you, yourself, will elect, and as we are desirous of completing the formation of the Committee, I do hope I may have your acceptance at your earliest convenience.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Enclosed please find a transcript of "Political Quiz," an innovation in American political program broadcasting. Here is Adlai Stevenson asking questions of the panel composed of former President Harry Truman, Senator John Sparkman, Governor Foster Furcolo and Mrs. Barkley. I thought you might want to quote portions of this program on your Tuesday night broadcast (you will note this is for release Tuesday night at 7 P.M.) and the program will be broadcast over CBS network later that night (10:05-10:30 EDT). We think we have hit on an entertaining as well as informative format for political programming with the quiz program idea. If you have the time, may I suggest you give this program a listen. The warmth and laughter is not apparent in the transcript.

With appreciation and every good wish, I am

Sincerely,

FOR RELEASE TO A.M. PAPERS
MONDAY, MAY 13, 1957

Democratic National Chairman Paul M. Butler today predicted that the Democratic National Committee's upcoming radio program, "Political Quiz," will add a new and effective format for political campaigning in the future.

The "Political Quiz" will be a feature of Democratic Party Night, May 21, and will be carried nationwide as a public service on the CBS Radio Network that night, 10:05 - 10:30 P.M., EDT.

"With Adlai Stevenson acting as quizmaster and a panel composed of former President Harry Truman, Sen. John Sparkman of Alabama, Gov. Foster Furcolo of Massachusetts and Mrs. Alben Barkley, we have come up with an informative and,at the same time, entertaining discussion of current and past political topics," said Mr. Butler.

"Although this first version of 'Political Quiz' is not concerned with the campaign efforts of any candidates, I think that the format in the future will be able to provide a new and very effective political campaign weapon," added the Democratic National Chairman.

"Political Quiz" was tape recorded recently when the Democratic Party leaders were meeting in Washington, D. C. Governor Stevenson presided over the 25-minute program, during which he asked the panel members to answer questions ranging from well-known political quotes to defining campaign slogans.

Mr. Butler said, "We are combining the isolation booth with the voting booth as we entertain and inform America's vast radio audience."

Introduction by Paul M. Butler, Chairman,
Democratic National Committee

FOR RELEASE TO A.M. NEWSPAPERS
WEDNESDAY, MAY 22, 1957

7 PM radio May 21

MR. BUTLER: Tonight is Democratic Party Night. In hundreds of towns and cities across our nation, thousands of Democratic Party members are having a good time. We call it "Fun for Funds." A feature of Party Night is "Political Quiz," a panel of political experts questioned by Adlai Stevenson. The questions on "Political Quiz" have been asked and answered at the local parties. Now, these party goers are listening to this program to see whether they did as well as the panel: Former President Harry Truman, Sen. John Sparkman of Alabama, Gov. Foster Furcolo of Massachusetts, and Mrs. Alben Barkley. And now -- Adlai Stevenson.

MR. STEVENSON: I am speaking to you from Washington, the nation's capital. Since I last talked with many of you over the radio, a number of things have happened. Then, Mr. Eisenhower and I were engaged in a contest to see which of us would live here in Washington. I have always thought Washington was a nice place to visit, and I would like to have lived here; not of course, that I don't like Augusta, Gettysburg, Denver, Palm Springs or even Thomasville. People in Washington are still talking about a historic occurrence which took place here not long ago. Secretary Dulles and President Eisenhower were both in town at the same time, and that leads to our first question: The question is: Where did they meet?

GOV. FURCOLO: Well, I don't know where they met, Governor, but I could hazard a guess if you want it -- it must have been either at the Railroad Station or the Airport.

MR. STEVENSON: You are correct. It was at the Airport.

The answer to this question that follows is the name of a man, one of the most beloved Americans of a generation ago. He once said, "I don't belong to any organized political party. I am a Democrat." Now, who said this?

MR. TRUMAN: Woodrow Wilson, wasn't it?

MR. STEVENSON: Mrs. Barkley?

MRS. BARKLEY: I don't know.

MR. STEVENSON: Senator Sparkman?

SEN. SPARKMAN: Did you say that was a generation ago?

MR. STEVENSON: Well, yes.

SEN. SPARKMAN: That was before my day, you see.

MR. STEVENSON: Well, you're a much older man, Governor Furcolo?

GOV. FURCOLO: Well, I don't know who it was, but certainly he's multiplied considerably since that time, because we have many of them now.

MR. STEVENSON: Well, the answer was -- Will Rogers. Perhaps some of you, and I'm sure, President Truman, all of you, have had some personal experiences with Will Rogers, or remember some of his engaging sayings. I remember, during this past campaign, one that occurred to me one day, when I read in the paper, another prophecy by the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Benson, that the position of the farmer was about to improve. I said that it reminded me of a remark of Will Rogers', who once said that "the first three years of a Republican Administration are always the hardest because by that time you get used to living on prophecies."

MR. TRUMAN: It's as correct today as it was then.

MR. STEVENSON: There was another one that I am sure you will remember, President Truman. Rogers paid a visit, I think it was to President Harding, and said that he'd like to tell Harding some of the latest political jokes. I believe Harding's reputed to have said, "You don't need to, I have them in my Cabinet."

MR. TRUMAN: That was reported. He also at the conference in London, informed the people of the United States that they had to carry out the King's throne because it was covered with gold, and the Americans might take it home with them. Then Joe Robinson had him sent home.

MR. STEVENSON: Now, who was it said recently that it gave him a pain to hear his rich friends in the U. S. Chamber of Commerce squawking about high Government Defense spending at a time when they've never been more prosperous?

MRS. BARKLEY: That was Secretary Wilson.

MR. STEVENSON: You're quite right.

MR. TRUMAN: My admiration went up a notch on that statement.

GOV. FURCOLO: It was a doggoned good answer.

MR. TRUMAN: It was.

MR. STEVENSON: Now, Mr. Truman, here's one for you. Who said, in 1948, "All civil service employees are mediocre at their best?"

MR. TRUMAN: That was ---

MR. STEVENSON: "Now, if I had my way, the present civil service system in force in the national, state and local governments would not exist."

MR. TRUMAN: That's Thomas E. Dewey -- he made the same sort of a positive statement about a certain engineer out in California, and it cost him a lot of votes.

MR. STEVENSON: Yes, I think we remember that, too. Now, which one of the three following statements was made recently by the United States Postmaster General, Mr. Arthur Summerfield:

One: "The public be damned."
Two: "Neither snow nor rain, nor heat, nor gloom of night stays these couriers from the swift accomplishment of their appointed routes."
And three: "I need another $47,000,000."

MRS. BARKLEY: I know he said the last. He may have said all three.

MR. TRUMAN: Old man Vanderbilt said the first one, and then denied that he ever said it.

MR. STEVENSON: So Summerfield gets credited with the idea that $47,000,000 is needed to run the Post Office; President Truman says it was William H. Vanderbilt, head of the New York Central who said the public be damned, and I think that's correct. And who made the famous quotation about couriers pounding through the snow and rain?

SEN. SPARKMAN: I don't know who made it, but it's supposed to be the slogan of the Post Office Department.

MR. TRUMAN: I don't know who made it.

MR. STEVENSON: It was made by Herodotus, the Greek historian. Now, isn't that fascinating?

MR. TRUMAN: It is.

MR. STEVENSON: Some very valuable information I picked up somewhere. It didn't win me very many votes either.

Now, in 1948, Gov. Thomas Dewey, the Republican Presidential candidate, said that one of the things he was going to do when he got to Washington, was to sweep the cobwebs out of government, to which a prominent Democrat replied, "If my memory does not betray me, I recall that when the Democratic Party took over on March 4, 1933, the spiders in Washington were so weak from starvation that they couldn't even weave a web." Now, who said that, Mrs. Barkley?

MRS. BARKLEY: That was Alben.

MR. STEVENSON: That was Vice President of the United States, Alben Barkley.

GOV. FURCOLO: That was the really beloved Vice President, and I might say that anyone who has never read that entire speech, certainly should. I think it's one of the finest documents I have ever read in my whole life.

MR. TRUMAN: It is.

SEN. SPARKMAN: Of course, he was not Vice President when he made it. It was made at the Philadelphia Convention. I was sitting just behind him and had a manuscript in my hand, and was following it, and when he came to that about spiders weaving cobwebs, I said to my wife, "Spiders don't weave cobwebs." That night I asked Senator Barkley about that, and he said, "You know, after I had written that, I woke up at three o'clock in the morning one night thinking about that same thing." He said, "I got up and looked it up in the encyclopedia and I found that spiders do weave cobwebs."

MR. STEVENSON: That was an imperishable remark, like another famous remark of your late distinguished and beloved husband, Mrs. Barkley. I remember so well the time he said and I heard him say it: "A bureaucrat is a Democrat who holds an office that some Republican wants."

MR. TRUMAN: That's correct as it can be.

SEN. SPARKMAN: Gosh, we could spend all day talking about things he said, but here's one other that I think is rather appropriate. In the 1948 campaign, in a speech in Philadelphia, I remember hearing him over the radio, he said, "You know, the Republicans talk of stabilizing the farmer; I now know what they mean by it, foreclose on all his stock and move the farmer into the stable."

MR. STEVENSON: Now, who said this: "If I were an American, I would be a Republican." Do you recall?

That was the late Andre Vishinsky.

MR. TRUMAN: The smartest Russian of them all, and that's how smart he was.

MR. STEVENSON: Who said this, in August 1955: "Now, as a result of our patient effort, in a spirit of conciliation, the problem of the Suez base has been successfully resolved?"

MRS. BARKLEY: That was John Foster Dulles.

MR. TRUMAN: He has made many a statement like that that didn't pan out.

MR. STEVENSON: Almost two years later, the Russians are in the Middle East and America's best allies, France and Britain, are out of the Middle East, and the Suez will haunt us for years to come.

In what century was the following said, and who said it: "The right to suffer is one of the joys of a free economy, just as the right to prosper is?"

MR. STEVENSON: Don't tell me that was John Stuart Mill.

GOV. FURCOLO: It sounds to me like a Congressman with whom I served, but I'd just as soon not identify him at the moment.

SEN. SPARKMAN: Well, it was the former Governor of Arizona, wasn't it?

MR. STEVENSON: You're correct, his name is Pyle, Howard Pyle.

SEN. SPARKMAN: He was serving as assistant to President Eisenhower when he made the statement.

MR. STEVENSON: He said it at a press conference in Detroit in May 1946--56. Here's another one now. In what century was the following statement made and who made it: "If all Americans want is security, well, they can go to prison?"

MR. TRUMAN: His name was Eisenhower.

MR. STEVENSON: And the date was December 8, 1949.

SEN. SPARKMAN: Houston, Texas, wasn't it?

MR. STEVENSON: That's right.

MR. STEVENSON: Who made these two statements? "President Truman's decision that the United States should go to the defense of the Korean Republic was courageous, righteous, and in the public interest" --that's the first statement. The second statement was: "The Truman Administration plunged us into the Korean War without the consent of our citizens through their authorized representatives in Congress." Who can remember those two? Senator Sparkman?

SEN. SPARKMAN: Strangely enough, both statements were made by the same man.

MR. TRUMAN: That's correct.

SEN. SPARKMAN: And the name of the man who made the statement was John Foster Dulles. The first, there's this difference--the first statement was written before the 1952 campaign.

MR. STEVENSON: The first statement was that "the defense of the Korean Republic was courageous and righteous and in the public interest."

SEN. SPARKMAN: That is right. However, in the Republican platform of 1952 which Mr. Dulles wrote, the second statement appears.

MR. STEVENSON: "That the Truman Administration had plunged us into war without the consent of our...."

SEN SPARKMAN: That's what the platform says.

MR. TRUMAN: Consistency, thy name is not Republican.

SEN. SPARKMAN: Oh, consistency, thou art indeed a jewel.

MR. STEVENSON: Now, here's another one, who said this one: "My major goal is to cut federal spending to something like $60,000,000,000 within the next four years."

MR. TRUMAN: Mr. Eisenhower, in 1952.

MR. STEVENSON: You're correct.

MR. TRUMAN: He's still trying to reach that goal after four years of administration.

MR. STEVENSON: But he's been going the wrong way. It's now $72,000,000,000, and the largest peacetime budget in history. Speaking of President Eisenhower's record-high $72,000,000,000 budget, a Cabinet member said that if the upward trend in Government spending isn't stopped, "there could be a depression that would curl your hair." Who said that?

MR. TRUMAN: The present Secretary of the Treasury.

MR. STEVENSON: Correct, Mr. George Humphrey.

In the middle of the hullabaloo about the Administration's present big budget, a man dropped into Washington and made page one news with his comment on this subject. He said this: "I can't for the life of me understand what persuaded Dwight to go for that big budget this year." Now who is that man?

MRS. BARKLEY: That was his brother Edgar.

MR. STEVENSON: You're correct.

MR. TRUMAN: He said Edgar had been criticizing him ever since he was five years old.

MR. STEVENSON: You're correct. That was Edgar Eisenhower.

Some of the Presidents of the United States have been criticized for spending too much time on their sports activities and hobbies. Taft and Wilson played golf, Franklin Roosevelt saved stamps, Cooledge saved money.

MR. TRUMAN: His own.

MR. STEVENSON: The question is, what Republican President was criticized by the Democrats for playing croquet so much on the White House lawn?

MR. TRUMAN: His name was Rutherford B. Hayes, and he made a right good President in spite of that croquet thing, for he moved the troops out of the South.

MR. STEVENSON: And what's more, he stayed in Washington to play croquet.

MR. TRUMAN: All the time.

MR. STEVENSON: Now, here's a short news item, the like of which goes out regularly from Washington on the wires of the press associations. The one which follows is United Press Item #139 for May 2. I'll read it to you, and the question is to fill in the blank. "_____ took advantage of the beautiful spring weather today to play golf at nearby Burning Tree Country Club."

MR. STEVENSON: Well, don't all answer at once.

SEN. SPARKMAN: The President.

MR. STEVENSON: That's right--here's a quotation from an Eisenhower Cabinet member who used to be in the saddle. He said: "We're here in the saddle as an administration representing business and industry." Who said it and what happened to him?

GOV. FURCOLO: Well, that was Douglas McKay, the former Secretary of the Interior, and incidentally, he was unsaddled by Wayne Morse out in Oregon.

MR. STEVENSON: You're right, Governor Furcolo--he was certainly unsaddled. There's some more of them going to be unsaddled before very long.

In the 1956 campaign, who was it said that "the Democrats will not tolerate the kind of campaign which has the vice-hatchet man slinging slander, and spreading half truths while the top-man peers down the green fairways of indifference."

GOV. FURCOLO: Sounds to me like a gentleman named Adlai Stevenson.

MR. STEVENSON: Well, you're wrong.

MRS. BARKLEY: Frank Clement of Tennessee.

MR. STEVENSON: That's correct.

MRS. BARKLEY: In the keynote address.

MR. STEVENSON: That's correct, Mrs. Barkley.

MRS. BARKLEY: At the '56 Convention.

MR. STEVENSON: What member of a President's Cabinet was sentenced to prison for accepting a bribe?

MR. TRUMAN: His name was Albert B. Fall, he was a Harding and Coolidge candidate, wasn't he?

MR. STEVENSON: He was Secretary of the Interior, Mr. President, under Harding, you're correct.

MR. TRUMAN: May I tell a story about Senator Fall right here? With the first Cabot Lodge, the Senator from the great state of Massachusetts, he went to call on President Wilson, when he was ill, and as they went to leave after their discovery that Wilson's mind was still working, Mr. Fall said to the President, "Mr. President, I'm praying for you." Mr. Wilson raised his head up and said, "Which way, Senator?"

MR. STEVENSON: Here's one about an artist who sometimes drops his pencil in favor of the typewriter. He wrote a book not long ago, in which he said, "When I look back over appointees like Henry L. Stimson, John Sherman Cooper, Frank Knox, John Wynant, John J. McCloy, Warren Austin, Robert Patterson, and others, it sometimes seems to me, that we had better Republicans in government under the Democrats than we have been getting under the Republicans." Now who was it said that?

MRS. BARKLEY: Is he a caricaturist? It sounds like Herblock.

MR. STEVENSON: You're correct. It was Herblock, the Pulitzer prize winning cartoonist.

MR. TRUMAN: He's still winning them. He writes the best editorials in the United States with a drawing.

MRS. BARKLEY: And Fitzpatrick--let's not forget Missouri.

MR. TRUMAN: Oh, that's right.

MR. STEVENSON: Everyone knows how important women have become in politics today, but I'd like to ask you, what party first recognized that women were important, and elected women to its national committee?

GOV. FURCOLO: It must have been the party of the American Husbands.

MR. STEVENSON: Can you identify that with the Democratic Party? It was. It was the Democratic Party in 1920.

SEN. SPARKMAN: By the way, it was during that same administration that women were given the right to vote. President Wilson was interested to the extent that he went back to New Jersey to vote for that amendment.

MR. TRUMAN: That's correct.

MR. STEVENSON: The next question is this--who said, "The necessary and wise subordination of the military to civilian power will be best sustained when life-long professional soldiers abstain from seeking high political office."

MR. TRUMAN: That was the present occupant of the White House in a letter which he sent to a newspaperman in New Hampshire, and he brought it in and showed it to me before he sent it. I was the President, and he at that time, was in charge of NATO.

MR. STEVENSON: That's most interesting. You're quite correct. I didn't know that interesting bit of history, that it was President Eisenhower who said that.

MR. TRUMAN: I have a copy of that letter, but I never did pull it on him.

MR. STEVENSON: Was that when he was in NATO, or when he was Chief of Staff or at Columbia?

MR. TRUMAN: No, it wasn't when he was in NATO, it was when he was Chief of Staff of the United States when that happened.

MR. STEVENSON: Now, the question is, where does the money come from that keeps the Republican and the Democratic Parties going? First, let's hear about the Democratic money?

MRS. BARKLEY: It comes from the people--the little people.

MR. STEVENSON: Well, you're quite right about that. It comes, in our case, in the case of the Democratic Party, in small amounts from many people. It comes from "$5.00" affairs such as this one in which you are taking part. Like all quiz-masters, I suppose I have some information here with me this evening, so I am in a position to give you a few facts on where Republican money comes from. Contributions of $500 or more, officials of the one hundred biggest prime contractors doing business with the Defense Department gave the Republicans in the last campaign, twenty-seven times more than they gave the Democrats. Officials of the thirty-seven biggest advertising agencies gave the Republicans $51,000 according to these figures, and they gave the Democrats exactly nothing. Officials of the one hundred biggest industrial firms in our country gave the Republicans $1,000,000, and they gave the Democrats only $73,000. Now, so much for that.

Here are some 1957 Republicans speaking on the subject of modern Republicanism. The question I want to ask you is, can you name the men who made each of these statements? The first is this: "Essentially, Ike's new Republicanism is a form of bribery, a program to buy votes with the voter's own money." The second is, "If we don't get back to fundamental Republicanism, we are not men of distinction, but men of extinction." And the third, "New Republicanism betrays every historical tenet and principle of our Republican Party." Now, who can identify those three statements?

MR. TRUMAN: I can't identify the statement, but I can give you a definition of a modern Republican which I heard this morning.

MR. STEVENSON: What's that, Mr. President?

MR. TRUMAN: Well, it was stated by one of the young Governors, that modern Republicans were counterfeits, and then it was further defined by the present Speaker of the House of Representatives, that a modern Republican is something like a modern antique.

MRS. BARKLEY: That's good.

MR. STEVENSON: I thought they sort of reminded me of that wonderful definition of harmony. Remember?

MR. TRUMAN: Yes, indeed.

MR. STEVENSON: A red-headed girl in a polka dot dress riding a giraffe.

MR. TRUMAN: Tell us who made these statements.

MR. STEVENSON: Yes, who can remember the first one--"Ike's new Republicanism is a form of bribery, a program to buy votes with the voters' own money."

That was made by Representative Noah Mason, Republican of Illinois.

And the second, "If we don't get back to fundamental Republicanism we are not men of distinction, but men of extinction."

That was made by Robert T. Mount, Republican National Committeeman from Oregon.

And the third, "New Republicanism betrays every historical tenet and principle of our party."

That was made by Clarence Budington Kelland, former Republican National Committeeman from Arizona.

MR. STEVENSON: What is modern Republicanism as you panel members see it?

MR. TRUMAN: I've given my definition, I wish the rest of you would give one.

SEN. SPARKMAN: Let me say that I've heard a good many, but here is another good one--Modern Republicanism is never putting off until tomorrow what should have been done in 1873.

GOV. FURCOLO: Someone sent me a letter that--

MR. STEVENSON: What have you got there, Governor Furcolo?

GOV. FURCOLO: That said that, Republicanism has been described as being like an iceberg, it's cold, slow-moving, and very little of it shows above the surface. It said, the Republican iceberg is ten percent visible, ninety percent submerged, and one hundred percent at sea.

MR. STEVENSON: That's very good.

MR. STEVENSON: Well, I think, ladies and gentlemen, our lady, and our gentlemen, that this concludes our question and answer period. If you all have any concluding remarks for our very attentive and patient audience I'd be very glad to welcome them, if not, we thank you, we bid you goodbye, and are grateful for your attention.

MR. BUTLER: On behalf of Democratic Party members everywhere, I would like to thank our Panel members of "Political Quiz", Governor Adlai Stevenson, Former President Harry Truman, Senator John Sparkman, Governor Foster Furcolo, and Mrs. Alben Barkley, and remember, Democratic Party Night next year will be Tuesday, May 20, 1958.

This is Paul Butler, wishing Democrats everywhere, a happy "Party Night" and thanking each one of you for your help to our great Democratic Party.

This is in regard to your memo of June 26 concerning a cable from Lou Cioffi.

Did the Murrow show order the interview with General LaCoste? If so, then the Editor on duty was in error in using the cable on another show. If not, then he did right.

The correspondents sometimes slug cables expecially for Murrow

1) because they like and admire Ed; and

2) because the show pays more than some other shows.

But the correspondents are not working for the Murrow show, or the Edwards show or any other show. They are working for CBS News and unless a story is particularly ordered, it should be used at the first available opportunity.

June 26, 1956

Lou Cioffi secured an exclusive interview yesterday with General LaCoste and cabled its contents to New York slugged PROMURROW. The cable arrived after last night's 7:45 show and was quoted on the 11 pm local news. I also understand that the French News Agency had the top original copy of the cable this morning. (They had heard the 11 pm news and requested the text.) I do not know the whereabouts of the carbon copy. It was not on the cable board when I came to work today.

Certainly, a good spot news story is not exclusive property. However, in this instance, I think the cable should have been held for the person to whom it was sent.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Last year the Trustees of the Estate of the late Florina Lasker transferred to the New York Civil Liberties Union the sum of $25,000 for the establishment of the Florina Lasker Civil Liberties Award. (Miss Lasker was the first Chairman of the New York Civil Liberties Committee - predecessor of the NYCLU - from 1932 until her death in 1949, and also served as a member of the ACLU's Board of Directors during that period.) The awards of $1,000 are to be administered by the NYCLU and presented at its Annual Luncheons. The recipient will be invited to address the meeting.

The terms of the award provide that the recipient, selected by a national Nominating Committee, shall be an "individual, organization or group who, by word or action, has displayed consistent and outstanding courage and integrity in the defense of civil liberties, whether in the performance of duty or above and beyond the requirements of duty, and by so doing has made a constructive and significant contribution to civil liberties." (The first award, in 1957, was presented to Roger Baldwin, founder of the ACLU.)

Because of your interest in civil liberties, we invite you to submit, for the consideration of the Nominating Committee, your suggestion for the recipient of the 1958 Lasker Award. A form for this purpose is enclosed. Please note that the deadline for suggestions is December 15, 1957.

We look forward to hearing from you.

Favored Battle Dance Wins Mile 'Cap
Anita Route Stakes Aim of 'Dumpty'
Wesson Outlines Publicists' Confab

GOLDEN GATE FIELDS, Albany, Calif., Nov. 11.—Battle Dance, a solid favorite with the Saturday crowd of 16,892 in the featured San Francisco Mile, was forced to do his best to win the race as predicted, meeting surprising opposition from the one-time New York stake horse, North End. Carrying his 125 pounds, which included able rider Henry Moreno, with seeming ease, Battle Dance was outrun to the head of the stretch by North End, but Moreno roused the son of Bolero when straightened out for the run to the wire. From the head of the stretch, it looked as if Battle Dance would roll clear of North End, but the latter fought it out head and head with bitter stubborness until only about 20 yards from the wire, where he cracked, and Battle Dance drew clear to win by a little more than a length. It was not as fast a race as we imagined it would be, for Battle Dance rounded the oval in 1:35⅕. He picked up $8,400 in first money to bring his seasonal earnings to a substantial $82,145. In 14 starts so far this year, Battle Dance has won six stakes, and has been unplaced only twice.

Wilbur Clark flew over from Las Vegas and Bill Radkovich planed up from Los Angeles for the between-races gallop of their world record-holding Irish colt, Dumpty Humpty. With Peter Moreno in the irons, and in the Clark-Radkovich silks, Dumpty Humpty was greeted with volleys of applause, and Clark and Radkovich had their pictures taken with the horse, sort of for the record inasmuch as neither partner was on hand last Saturday to see Dumpty Humpty traverse his six furlongs in 1:08. "We will nominate this colt for everything possible at Santa Anita," co-owner Clark tells us, "and my partner and our trainer, Don Early, are absolutely confident that Dumpty Humpty will go a distance. I feel we were extremely lucky to get such a good one as Dumpty Humpty in our first purchase since the formation of our stable at Del Mar last summer. Racing is not a sport of luck, but like in most any other line of endeavor, luck can be most helpful."

Radkovich Newcomer in Racing

Radkovich has been in racing less than a year. He is a building contractor with headquarters in Alhambra, a suburb of Los Angeles. While a long-time Santa Anita and Hollywood Park racing fan, it was only after months of "talking to" by trainer Don Early that he finally agreed to enter the sport as an owner. At one time Early had worked for the Radkovich firm as an engineer, and as an engineer was rated as excellent by his employer. Partner Clark has had several horses, off and on, in past years, with his only one of quality being the consistent sprinter, Barbastel, whom he raced on the West Coast in partnership with Duke Wiley. "We are not going overboard buying horses," added Clark, "for I've had enough experience as an owner to know that cheap horses not only can break you, but take all the fun out of the sport as well. Of course, getting a good horse is harder than this statement might make it appear, but at least, you can try for the good ones, and if they turn out cheap, get rid of them. Of the horses that I have owned, only one failed to win a race. I gave him away."

Dumpty Humpty New Turf

By JIM MITCHELL

Uncle Sam has passed the "Roosians" in the space race . . . those "human satellites" zooming around the earth are WILLIAM RADKOVICH and WILBUR CLARK . . . power behind their flight into outer space is a horse named DUMPTY HUMPTY . . . never have two persons hit the stratosphere so fast, with things continuing to happen as quickly, as in the case of RADKOVICH and CLARK, bosom pals, and partners in a racing stable they eventually hope will be tops . . .

DUMPTY HUMPTY cracked a world record at GOLDEN GATE when he ran six furlongs in 1.08 last Saturday . . . but it was the manner in which he did it, and succeeding raves from turf experts, which have sent RADKOVICH and CLARK soaring . . . CLARK, the power behind Las Vegas' Desert Inn, and RADKOVICH, millionaire contractor, have other plans to further develop their racing stable, DUMPTY HUMPTY providing rocket-like impetus . . .

WEBB EVERETT, former Santa Anita racing secretary and now Golden Gate general manager, said: "I have never seen a colt run so fast and as easily". . . World of Speed and a New World's Re

Dumpty Humpty flashes to world record of 1:08 for six furlongs at Golden Gate Fields.

'Dumpty' In World Record!

By ABE KEMP

Dumpty Humpty is the world's fastest sprinter.

The four year old Irish bred earned this distinction yesterday at Golden Gate Fields when he waltzed—and that is the right term—to a new world's six furlong record in winning the $10,000 added Richmond Handicap.

His time of 1:08, which clipped one fifth of a second off the previous world mark of 1:08⅘ established over the same East Bay course by Bolero on May 27, 1950, had hand timer Russell Brown shaking.

But his watch was steady as he jotted down the sizzling fractions of :22 for the quarter, :44⅘ for the half, :56⅘ for the five eighths and out in 1:08. The crowd of 17,430 gasped when the lights on the tote board revealed the sensational performance.

It was done with such ridiculous ease that Pete Moreno,

(See KEMP, Page 20, Col. 4)

KEMP'S RACE STORY

Dumpty Humpty Sets Record

who rode the colt, was amazed.

"He (Dumpty Humpty) is the runningest dude I ever sat on," he choked on his words.

When the happy pilot calmed, he said that he only let the horse run from the quarter pole, where he took command, to the eighth pole.

"He was going so easily," Pete said, "that when I looked back and couldn't find the second horse, I just took a double wrap on him and let him coast."

The second horse, Pirnie, finished six lengths back, followed by Caronat and Lassabatt.

"I've seen many good horses," commented General Manager Webb Everett, "but I've never seen a colt that ran so fast and so easy as Dumpty Humpty."

That expressed the unanimous opinion of all horsemen.

GAVE WARNING.

The tongue twisting named 4 year old indicated his potential in the Mill Valley Purse earlier in the week when he raced to within three-fifths of a second of Bolero's world mark.

But few had the courage to predict that he would shatter the record in the Richmond.

Caronat gained the lead breaking from the gate. But Moreno had his horse under such stout restraint that it was plain he could send him to the front whenever he willed. That he did passing the quarter pole and from that point on the only question was his winning margin.

What made Dumpty Humpty's time all the more remarkable was that he was bucking a 40 mile an hour gale.

He has been nominated for the San Francisco mile next Saturday.

PAYS $4.50.

The favorite, Dumpty Humpty paid $4.50 and earned for the racing firm of William Radcovich and Wilbur Clark, who jointly own him, $8,250 out of the gross purse of $11,100.

The likes of Bolero, Noor and Citation have preened themselves over the bouncy East Bay course in the past.

But nothing has ever been seen like this trim, eye-filling Irish bred, who runs with flawless precision.

What he will do when lengthened out is a question. But at six furlongs, we'd like to see the horse that can beat him.

If he can sustain his speed over a distance, the top handicap horses in the country had better look to their laurels.

MILLION BET.

Dumpty Humpty is trained by Don Early and that young man merits an accolade for the slow and painstaking manner in which he has brought the colt to his present peak.

All in all it was a bountiful day for the directors of Golden Gate Fields. In addition to having a new world mark to boast of, they were happy over the first million dollar handle of the meeting.

The total wagered on the nine race card was $1,037,719.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

May I take this opportunity to congratulate you and your staff for your excellent film portrayal of the complex school problem which recently confronted the good citizens of Clinton, Tennessee.

Your documentary, Clinton and the Law, was a fair and balanced presentation of an exceedingly difficult issue. It was a heart-warming true to life picture of the courage and conviction displayed by the thinking people of this wonderful community.

As a southerner, I am sure you realize that Clinton is not a problem city. Clinton, Tennessee could be Clinton, Any State; any place where violence supplants law and order; where the rights of human beings are violated.

I am sure you would also be interested to know that my staff has just completed a documentary series, SEE THE HARVEST, which was shown on all of the television stations across the state last month, and is currently in great demand in schools, civic clubs and other organizations. SEE THE HARVEST depicts the progress that has been made in Tennessee in recent years. I would be most happy to make the series (four 15-minute films, color, or an edited 35-minute version) available to you for your personal viewing or for any other use you would care to make of it.

Included also is a copy of the special address I made before our General Assembly earlier this month in which I outlined my principles on the public school problem.

With best wishes and kindest personal regards, I am

Yours sincerely,

Text Of Gov. Clement's Address To Legislature Outlining School Plan

Wednesday, January 9, 1957

Following is the text of Governor Frank G. Clement's address today to the State Legislature outlining the Administration's school plans:

Lt. Governor Maddux, Mr. Speaker Bomar, distinguished Senators and Representatives of the 80th General Assembly, My friends and fellow citizens:

The words I speak to you today represent a decision I must live with the rest of my days on this earth and through all Eternity.

Human that I am I would have gladly let the cup pass from me. However, I am perfectly willing to accept both Divine and human judgment of my words and deeds on this occasion.

I come before you to speak the truth. I come to suggest that course of action which, under prevailing circumstances, I honestly believe to be in the best interest of all of you in general—and Tennessee's children in particular.

Since the days of the recording of the Old Testament, down through the years even until this day, there have been differences of opinion over race associations.

In our own country, in the State of Pennsylvania, there was a schism in one of our large churches as far back as 1787, when Negro members voluntarily withdrew from the church and started a church of their own. So we must, at least, recognize the fact that there are precedents to the problem which confronts the citizens of our great Volunteer State today.

Someone once said that he was not so concerned with what George Washington said in his day, but he was greatly concerned with what Washington would say and do were he here today facing current problems.

I am not so concerned with what extremists on either side think of what I shall say here today—nor those out-of-staters of both races who come into our midst stirring up trouble and strife where none existed to further their own gains. I shall not attempt to please them. But I am greatly concerned about what our God-fearing law abiding citizens think—the farm families who put their children on school buses in the early dawn not to see them again until dark; the thousands of factory workers trying to educate their children, trusting them to the care of our good teachers; the doctors, lawyers, merchants—yes, all of our good citizens. I am tremendously concerned with your thinking and your problems and it is to you, our loyal, peace-loving, God-fearing citizens—through your representatives whom you have sent here to Capitol Hill, that I address my message.

Seeds of Destruction

In the course of human history many peoples and many nations have risen to positions of eminence only to fall, to decay, or to be destroyed. More often than not the source of their disaster has come from within and not from without. They have carried within themselves the seeds of their own destruction. They have been unable to resolve their own internal conflicts.

We in America faces today within our country a crisis which can lead to our destruction. For if we cannot, as Americans, regardless of race or color, live in peace and harmony, as a united people, our disunity may well destroy us. HOW CAN WE BE TRUSTED WITH THE PEACE OF THE WORLD IF WE CAN NOT KEEP PEACE AMONG OURSELVES?

Yet scarcely a day passes without some incident of racial violence. Men in the fullness of their hatred and fear, heedless of consequences, urge us on to further extremes of distrust and violence.

Greatest Problem

The relations of the races has been termed the greatest problem confronting responsible officials and citizens of Tennessee today, but I say to you that it is much more than that, it is our greatest opportunity.

WE COULD RENDER NO GREATER SERVICE TO OUR STATE, TO OUR NATION AND TO POSTERITY THAN TO SHOW THAT WE AS TENNESSEANS, AS SOUTHERNERS, AS AMERICANS, WHITE AND NEGRO, CAN ADJUST OUR PROBLEMS AND WORK AND LIVE IN PEACE AND HARMONY.

We cannot render that service through impassioned denunciation.

We cannot render it through the use of force.

We cannot render it by hiding behind a screen of generalities.

We cannot render it by attempting to deceive ourselves and our people.

We must face the facts as they are.

We must let reason, not passion, be our guide.

We must be ever mindful of those great religious and political principles which are our most precious heritage.

Our nation has not become the international champion of all history because we were the largest in area, which we are not; or the most populous in the world, which we are not; or the most richly endowed, which we are.

WE HAVE BEEN BLESSED BY GOD, RESPECTED BY OUR FELLOW MAN, AND HAVE BECOME PROSPEROUS BECAUSE WE HAVE IN THE BROADEST SENSE OF THE WORD PROCLAIMED OUR DESIRE TO BE RIGHT—"ONE NATION, UNDER GOD INDIVISIBLE, WITH LIBERTY AND JUSTICE FOR ALL."

In 1607 the first permanent settlemet in what is now the the United States was established at Jamestown, Virginia. In 1619, before the Mayflower landed at Plymouth Rock, the first Negroes came to Virginia.

Plantation Economy

With the expansion of the plantation economy thousands of Negroes were brought to these shores. They were brought primarily to work the tobacco fields, the rice fields and the cotton fields. They came and they remained as slaves.

But the presence among us of these multitudes of a different stock, bound in servitude, bought and sold as chattles, raised from the beginning of our nation problems of the first magnitude.

Many and varied were the plans and programs advanced to solve the problems of racial relations. Some maintained that slavery itself offered the only sound approach. Some complete and immediate abolition of slavery. Some sought a solution. in the establishment of Negro colonies in Africa. But the Negroes were, even then, no longer Africans. They spoke English; not some native dialect. Even as slaves they followed our ways. They believed and worshipped the same God.

Despite the best efforts of men of good will, no solution to the problem of slavery was found acceptable to the nation as a whole. Resulting tension overthrew reason and divided our country. Slavery and the relations between the races was certainly a condition, if not a prime cause, of the great and tragic conflict which we then fought among ourselves in the War Between the States.

The victory of Northern arms abolished the institution of slavery but it did not solve the problem of race relation.

Aftermath of War

In the aftermath of that war our Southland lay prostrate, our homes were burned, our possessions lost, our sons and fathers buried. Federal troops patrolled the streets of our cities. Military governors sat in our governors' chairs. The scalawag and carpetbagger ruled. White and Negro had to find some new basis for living together in peace and harmony.

In time civil government was restored. The wounds of war were healed, and gradually there emerged that pattern of relations between the races which we term segregation. The Negro generally lived in his own section. Separate accommodations were provided in public transportation. We went to separate schools We worshipped in separate churches. The standard we set to govern our relations was embodied in the concept of "separate but equal" treatment.

We must face the problems of today in the light of the past.

We must accept the fact that no law, no judicial decree can erase three hundred years of history.

BUT IN OUR RECOGNITION OF THE EXISTENCE OF DIFFERENT BACKGROUNDS FOR NEGRO, WE MUST NOT OVERLOOK THE FACT THAT THE NEGRO IS EQUAL TO THE WHITE IN THE EYES OF THE LAW AND IN THE SIGHT OF GOD.

He is an American citizen, even as the white.

He pays taxes, even as the white.

He serves in our armed forces in defense of our country, even as the white.

He is entitled to equality of opportunity.

When the Negro reads the Declaration of Independence, when he hears our leaders speak of the rights of man, he knows that he is a man, he knows that he is an American, and he will never be content to be treated as anything less.

Whether we like or not, the Negro will never willingly keep an assigned place in society if that place is set in shame and degradation.

Historical Difference

We in Tennessee have not been unmindful of the historical difference in the Negro and of his right to equal treatment. Nowhere has our concern to recognize both these facts been better exemplified than in our public school system.

In recognition of the historical difference between the races Tennessee has required that separate schools be maintained. In recognition of the Negro's right to equal treatment we have tried as best we could to make Negro schools equal to the white. Both have excellent schools and unfortunately both have schools which leave much to be desired. The pay schedules are the same for Negro teachers as for whites. The school transportation program and the free text book program are the same for Negroes as for whites. State school funds are distributed without discrimination for the children of both races. The great Tennessee Agricultural and Industrial State University, is comparable to the institutions maintained for the whites.

We have based our public school system on the concept that as a matter of constitutional law the separate but equal schools open to the Negro afforded them the equal protection of the laws guaranteed all citizens under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States in the 1896 case of Plessey vs. Ferguson had expressly approved that principle.

In recent years, however, some have minimized the problems involved and have contended that any system of compulsory segregation on the basis of race denies to the segregated group the equal protection of the laws—thus they say that compulsory segregation is unconstitutional.

In the 1954 case of Brown vs. Board of Education of Topeka, the United States Supreme Court handed down its opinion holding statutes compelling segregation of the races to be unconstitutional. Recognizing the sweeping effect of its opinion the court called for additional arguments before entering its final decree. Finally, on May 31, 1955, the court entered its decree.

Controversy Breaks

No decision rendered by any court has ever produced a greater storm of controversy.

A careful analysis of what the court actually did say in that case is essential to the development of any workable solution to our difficulties.

THE COURT HELD THAT STATUTES COMPELLING SEGREGATION IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS ON THE BASIS OF RACE WERE UNCONSTITUTIONAL. IT HELD THAT NO STATE COULD IN THE OPERATION OF ITS PUBLIC SCHOOLS DISCRIMINATE AGAINST PERSONS ON ACCOUNT OF THEIR RACE. THE COURT DID NOT PURPORT TO TAKE OVER THE ADMINISTRATION WHERE IT HAS ALWAYS BEEN, IN THE HANDS OF THE LOCAL SCHOOL OFFICIALS. IT DID NOT PURPORT TO REQUIRE THE STATES TO MIX ARBITRARILY PERSONS OF DIFFERENT RACES IN THE SCHOOLS. IT DID NOT DEPRIVE INDIVIDUAL PARENTS AND CHILDREN OF THEIR RIGHTS OF VOLUNTARILY CHOOSING THE SCHOOLS THEY WISH TO ATTEND.

The Fourteenth Amendment is a limitation on the powers of the states, NOT a limitation on the freedom of individuals.

At the time of that decision the statutes of Tennessee, as of sixteen other states, required segregation of the races in the public schools. The validity of the Tennessee statutes was tested before the Supreme Court of Tennessee only last October. On the basis of the decision of the United States Supreme Court, the Supreme Court of Tennessee held that the Tennessee statutes compelling segregation were unconstitutional. All three Federal District Courts in Tennessee, presided over by Tennesseans, have held likewise.

Whether we condemn these decisions or praise them, whether they were right or wrong, we must face the fact that the highest courts of our nation and of our state have held that any statutes compelling segregation of the races in the public schools is unconstitutional.

We must recognize that any school system we may develop which is based upon a legal foundation of compulsory segregation will, when challenged, be held unconstitutional by either or both the state and federal courts.

Respect For Court

And while it is easy to express disrespect and defiance of a court beyond our state borders, I yield to no man in abiding respect for the Supreme Court of Tennessee as one of the most able judicial bodies in this great nation.

We must therefore develop a new legal foundation for our school system based upon a recognition of the realities of our situation. In so doing we must remember that while the law may be changed, the facts have not changed.

We must also bear in mind that Tennessee is a diverse and varied state. In some counties there are no Negro school children. In others there are three Negro school children for every one white. In some counties the Negro population is concentrated, in others it is scattered. In some counties the Negroes have excellent schools, in others they are poor. Some of our counties are wealthy, others are not. Any new system must be sufficiently flexible so as to allow for these differences which exist across our state.

When the last General Assembly was in session there were some who wished then to enact local legislation in connection with this problem. At that time I opposed such legislation, regardless of its nature, because the Supreme Court had not then entered its final decree and there was no way of foretelling what its provisions would be. I was further convinced that legislation in this field should not be the result of hasty and precipitate action but rather of calm and judicious appraisal.

Decree Comes

The Supreme Court has entered its decree. I have given this matter my constant attention for much of these past two years. Many months ago I ordered studies made by some of the most able lawyers in our State and by the Commissioner of Education and his staff with specific attention to be given to the programs adopted and considered in other states.

I did not then think it proper, and I do not now think it proper, to fan this problem into a raging conflagration. We have studied these problems almost daily, approaching them with a prayerful, practical attitude and today I come to you with the results of these long months of study and submit to you the plans which we believe to be in the best interest of all of our citizens and especially of our children. Too much attention has been given to the few representing the voices of the vociferous while too little attention has been given to the many—the almost forgotten sacrificial symbols in this battle of the adults: the little white child and the little Negro child.

I am convinced that to do nothing would serve neither the white child nor the Negro child, but rather would lead to confusion and chaos.

I AM EQUALLY CONVINCED THAT EXTREME MEASURES WILL NOT HELP US REACH THE GOALS WE SEEK, BUT RATHER WILL LEAD TO A WORSENING OF OUR DIFFICULTIES.

I stand on these principles:

First: Our basic purpose must be the preservation and promotion of peaceful and harmonious relations between the races. Our new system must not deprive any minority group of its right to equal treatment. But in protecting the rights of minority we must not inflict wrongs upon the majority.

Second: We must provide adequate educational opportunities for all our children. As the Constitution of Tennessee so wisely proclaims, knowledge, learning and virtue are essential to the preservation of our republican institutions, and the diffusion of the opportunities and advantages of education throughout the different portions of the state is necessary to that end. I, for one, will not be a party to any action which would imperil or endanger the continued existence of our public schools.

Choice Without Force

Third: We must give our people the opportunity of choosing without force or compulsion the course which best suits their needs and desires. A solution based upon voluntary action by each individual citizen can succeed.

Fourth: We must not attempt to impose an inflexible system throughout the state. We must allow the local school officials who are most familiar with the needs and wishes of their people to choose their own course. No principle of government is sounder than that the control of local affairs should be left in local hands.

Fifth: If the local officials are to cope effectively with their problems they must have the fullest powers and discretion compatible with a democratic government.

Sixth: While giving our local officials the full power and discretion to choose their respective courses, we must provide those checks and balances which our history has taught us are essential to the prevention of arbitrary action and to the protection of the rights and privileges of all our people.

Upon a most careful consideration of the facts as they exist, in the light of these principles, in order to preserve and promote peaceful and harmonious relations between the races and to secure to each child within this state adequate educational opportunities I recommend to you, the senators and representatives of the Eightieth General Assembly and to the citizens of the great state of Tennessee the enactment of the following five statutes:

First: An Act empowering the officials of our local school systems to provide separate schools for white and Negro children whose parents, or guardians voluntarily elect for their children to attend school with members of their own race.

Power to Assign

Second: An Act bestowing upon the boards of education of each local school system the full power to place, assign and transfer the pupils within its jurisdiction. The Act will provide that in determining the particular schools to which pupils shall be assigned the board may base its decision upon sociological, geographical, physical, psychological, fiscal, educational and any other factors which may be material in educational and any other factors which may be material in determining the best interest of the particular child, the other children and the community as a whole. The Act will contain provisions for fair and reasonable administrative and judicial review of the actions of the school boards and will be patterned after the historic principles of Tennessee law.

Third: An amendment to the present statute authorizing the transfer of pupils from one school system to another. The purpose of this amendment is to clarify and strengthen the powers of the local boards in this regard.

Fourth: An Act authorizing boards of education to establish, maintain and operate schools jointly. The local officials will have the same powers with respect to pupils and teachers in such schools as in other schools within their jurisdiction. This Act will afford local school systems an opportunity to establish larger and better schools than they might otherwise be able to do.

FIFTH: An Act to amend the present statute dealing with the transportation of school children. The purpose of this Act is to make this statute conform to the program herein outlined.

In the course of preparing these recommendations, I also gave consideration to the powers of the boards of education in other respects, two of which I wish to mention. The first is the power of the boards to employ, assign and dismiss teachers. In this regard I direct your attention to Sections 49-224 (12), 49-1410, 49-1306 and 49-1313 of Tennessee Code Annoated. In my opinion these statutes give to the local school officials ample power and discretion in this regard. Therefore I believe that no futher legislation on this point is neccesstry or advisable.

No Amendment Needed

I have also considered the advisability of amending the compulsory attendance law. I am convinced that no much amendment is needed and that any such fundamental educational policy amendment would be against the best interest of our people. Any weakening of these laws is likely to lead to serious abuses. I am therefore opposed to any such amendment.

In developing this program consideration has been given to the actions and experience of other states but no attempt has been made to engraft upon our laws practices and procedures which, while they may or may not meet the needs of others, are foreign to the educational system and to the educational of our state. This program was designed by Tennesseans for Tennessee. It is in harmony with and strengthens our present laws. It envisions no radical changes which lead to the weakening, if not the destruction, of our present school system.

It is my earnest conviction that the enactment of this program is necessary for the promotion of peaceful and harmonious relations between the races and for the preservation and efficiency of our public school system.

I would be the last to say that this program is a panacea to cure all our ills. BUT IT IS AN HONEST PROGRAM. It is not compounded of the medicine of political quackery in an effort to deceive and delude our people. It faces the facts as they exist. It is founded upon sound principles. Without hesitation I urge its adoption.

In this hour of crisis we will need the persuasive abilities of the Angels; we will need the patience and forebearance of the Saints; we will need the wisdom and knowledge of the ages; we will need the strength and courage of the greatest among us; we will need the faith to move mountains—but all of these things will not be enough!

If we are to succeed in our purpose, if we are to live, work and go to school in peace and harmony, we will need, we must have, white and Negro alike, the greatest gift of them all—the charity which our Lord and Master commanded us to bear in our hearts and souls for one another.

And now may Almighty God be with one and all.

Dear Mr Murrow,

It has been twenty-one years since we met in Paris, and I have during the interim watched and admired your magnificent and sustained campaign for academic and intellectual freedom.

I hope that you will lend your tremendous prestige to clearing up the mystery of the death or abduction of Professor Jesus de Galindes of Columbia University.

It seems to this observer that rather than receiving dictators in the White House, it would fit better into the American tradition to investigate why agents of those dictators threaten the intellectual and personal freedom of writers and thinkers within our national confines.

The disappearance of Professor Jesus de Galindes should be one of the most active interests of this government and the responsible parties should be shown up in the full glare of public opinion. Indeed, if the responsibility of the Trujillo dictatorship can be proved and exposed fearlessly, the world will have a remarkable chance to discredit and possibly cause the overthrow of one of the most scandalous dictatorships of the Americas.

Respectfully submitted,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

We are planning a major picture essay on New York City. An important amount of space is to be devoted to this subject and, as editor in charge of the project, I hope to present an honest and interesting picture of the New York way of life to LOOK's 24,800,000 readers.

But there is one question that the editors of LOOK find most difficult to answer. Therefore I am putting this question to some sixty prominent New Yorkers, hoping to tabulate my answer from your responses.

WHO, IN YOUR OPINION, ARE THE TEN MOST IMPORTANT NEW YORKERS?

May I hear from you at your earliest convenience?

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am taking the liberty of sending you some news stories, editorials and "letters to the Editor" from both Southerners and Northerners, only a sample of which tells the temper of the "Man on the Street". I am a great admirer of yours and enjoy your programs, however, many of us get very much provoked with you, when on some programs in interviewing certain people you put words in their mouths - you really do! - by asking questions with the answer included.

Please do me and your Southern audiences (and many in the North), the favor and justice of reading these articles, some of them mention you. Of course, if our way of life is to be dictated by the Foreign Countries -- what they think of us -- when all they want from us is our money, then let us suffer by all means! In the meantime, I suggest that the newsmen, Radio and TV commentators from the North pay a visit here and see how different things really are. We have no Levittown, Detroit, New York and Chicago "goings-on" as you have, but that is different, of course, - "No matter what, it is okay for the North, those events are never mentioned in the interviews or broadcasts, only incidents in the South that are never as serious".

The negroes here know who their friends are, who helps them, takes care of them - if the "Do-Gooders" would only let them alone, they get along fine with the white people. Come and see for yourself. They, the Negroes, have fine schools, churches, their own ministers and teachers - why should they not have pride in their own race? - to want their own leaders, teachers and so on, instead of aping the white man. We would have much more respect for them if they would concentrate on building up their own culture and leadership. They had been doing just that down South until the NAACP was organized and the leaders in that organization gained so much power themselves. They do not care about the masses, they do nothing for them. Ask some of the Negroes in the South and hear what the true story is.

Aside from all this, how any thinking person can relinquish "STATES RIGHTS" because the NAACP SAYS SO, is beyond our clear thinking.

I will continue to listen to your programs, watch your TV programs and count myself one of your admirers, but wish that you could be a little fairer and openminded on the South. We really are not the awful people the Radio, TV and newspapers in the North say we are, and I wish you could take a census of the Northerners who have settled in the South who now say "we used to think that way until we settled down South and now know the situation and realize that your way of life is right and just for you". So, Mr. Murrow, we do not care how the North does and would not presume to try to change your way of life, but please let us do what we know is best for us. What is good and right for Idaho or Maine or New York is not right for Mississippi or South Carolina and the rest of the South. We got along fine until the NAACP and the North and the Politicians started to run our lives.

Please read the enclosed - these articles, etc. would not be allowed in the North - we print both sides down South - so we know both sides.

Incidentally, in the years I have been voting, I've always stood in line with the negroes which proves they live in precincts with white people - no Levittowns down here!

Thanks for some very fine programs, and looking forward to future openminded thinking and commentating,

Sincerely yours,

Foreign Nations Should Be Told Truth About South

"O, say can you see
By the dawn's early light . . ."

IF, AS SOME having authority say, Khrushchev is being tough internationally now to divert his people from trouble at home and to save his tottering position, what is the loudest and most accepted voice with which the free lands could go over his head to the Russian people and tell them (1) that nuclear warfare means individual as well as collective death to them with the rest of us, and (2) that the free lands are willing to do anything for peace — but trust Khrushchev?

That voice would be President Dwight Eisenhower's — to the presently assembled General Assembly of the United Nations.

And then there's the whole big idea of America. An amazing number of Americans themselves don't know it. Just when it is time to give Asia, Africa, Russia and all the rest a better look, some of us aren't seeing straight enough to make them see straight.

COMES A GENTLEMAN, for example, proposing a nation-wide referendum on racial integration — as if that would prove anything or be the American way. You are reminded of other gentlemen who want the President elected by popular majority and still others or the same who see only outlawry and race oppression in Southern resistance to national decisions against vital and passionate interests of the South.

How can we hope to have Asia, Africa, Germany, Japan, etc, understand us when so many of our own don't!

This nation is founded on two great propositions, not just one.

The proposition that the majority generally shall rule.

And, equally, the proposition that there shall be things on which the majority shall never rule.

Most of the Constitution is given to the second proposition, to protections and safeguards against the sometime tyranny of 51 per cent.

If Asia, Africa, Germany and Japan are thinking ill of America's vaunted democracy because of what they are being told about outlawry and race oppression in the South, the solution is to stop telling them. It is to put them straight about the South and about the American propositions. They should be advised that there is no more "outlawry" here than among most peoples and that what passes for it is a clash between the two American propositions as reflected in two laws — federal and state.

They should be reminded that "race oppression" here is trifling in comparison with what they know, and that even though there is discrimination in the South and hate outside the South, the colored man has advanced more rapidly and is more privileged and well-heeled in America than anywhere in the world.

But too many Americans had rather make a point against the South, it seems, than preserve the American name in the world.

THAT ABLE thinksman, Ed Murrow, for example, should stop and think. When he quotes people in Germany and Japan against imagined outlawry and race oppression in the South, his moral is that the South should behave itself. But the proper moral is that Mr. Murrow and other world voices should give Germany and Japan better real information.

Mr. Murrow should be diverted a little from his moralizing when his sources in Great Britain, where this country is far better known and understood and where some of the same problems exist, report more sympathy for the South than criticism.

Couldn't Ed tell Germany and Japan it isn't outlawry but honest constitutional crisis? Couldn't he tell the Germans that Southern "race oppression" is not what Germans who remember Hitler imagine?

Time has learned that we can read and write, that we take notes, and that we know about the Constitution of the United States.

STROM THURMOND has joined Senators Mundt, H. Alexander Smith and Mansfield for a constitutional amendment to eliminate the winner-take-all Electoral College system of assigning each state's electoral vote. Under his amendment there would be candidates from each congressional district as well as two from each state at large, as in congressional elections. They say this division by political-geographical districts would be better than division between political parties.

The South should certainly agree.

In either change the menace of overblown Negro minority power — or balance of power — in big doubtful states would be eliminated. The important thing — with 1960 so near — is to get on with a change by agreeing on one. Many Southerners are politically so in love with Sen. Thurmond just now that whichever change he endorses will have their support.

Who says this column is of no use in the world! Strom Thurmond called himself J. Strom Thurmond until I pointed out the stilt and superfluity of the "J" and the dignity, euphony, simplicity and ruggedness of plain "Strom Thurmond."

He might never have been able to break the filibuster record if he had been weighted down with that dangling "J."

South Is Being Betrayed By Leading Americans

Caption: South is Being Betrayed "What will Asia say?"

ALSO AFRICA?

If they think ill of America because of situations in the South, blame these ranking Americans who make false points against the South to Asia and Africa, fouling their own nest.

Blame my able friend Edward R. Murrow, ridiculously wondering if this country can consistently denounce Hungarian awfulness when we have a Southern one, as if there were the least comparison between the wholesale killings, exilings, tyrannies and brutalities in Hungary and sporadic Southern incidents whose every victim is lionized.

Blame Secretary Dulles, who tells the world Southern violence and race oppression compromise negotiations with Asia and Africa when he should be telling Asia and Africa it isn't so, that the Southern Negro is better off, better treated, more privileged and well-heeled than most of the human beings from Greenland's icy mountains to India's coral strands.

Send the word to Secretary Dulles, fellow Southerners, and to Ed Murrow. It's the truth and we need them in our business.

Secretary Dulles might be persuaded to tell Asia and Africa that in both economic and political status the Negro fares better in the United States than anywhere else on the face of the earth.

HE MIGHT TELL them that unlike Russia, we do not liquidate or exile opposition—even though we are in the most bitter national division since the Civil War. As they yearn for self-rule, he might tell them that self-rule in shining America is looked upon by millions as meaning the genuine sort that goes with local as against distant government, as ideal Communists don't dare admit.

He might remind them that ours is the most genuine democracy in the world even if about to be impeached by a federal interference which is persuading all whites who can afford it to send their children to private schools, leaving the poor in the public ones.

The Secretary should consider that Asia and Africa are capable of being shocked more by the cynicism of Jimmy Hoffa's indicated election to the teamster presidency than by separations in the South. It is "American imperialism" which Asia and Africa are taught by Red Russia and China to fear, and tyrannical dictatorship within our great labor organizations, accompanied by cheating, bullying and oppressing fits this fear. It suggests to Asia and Africa that if this is our domestic habit it can be our foreign, too.

FINALLY, Secretary Dulles might take thought for America's need the world crisis of maintaining in all vigor, integrity and promise its burgeoning Southeast corner. America needs the South in its world business. To gain the world at the expense of this South would profit nothing if it cost this country the strength at home to hold the gain.

Supreme Court Can Be Reversed

P 9-21-57

By DAVID LAWRENCE

WASHINGTON — Many people are asking how, if public sentiment desired it, a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States can be reversed.

There are many ways. In the past a Constitutional amendment has at times been found necessary but where the Supreme Court goes beyond its function and legislates or when it sets itself up as a trial court and refuses to hear evidence on both sides—as happened in the "desegregation" case of 1954—then Congress can take a hand and pass a law specifying rules for the court to follow thereafter.

In the "desegregation" decision of 1954, the Supreme Court decided the case primarily not on questions of law or interpretation of the Constitution, but on the basis of what it deemed psychological or sociological considerations. Although the writings of some sociologists — one of them a prominent Communist sympathizer—were cited by the Supreme Court, no opportunity was given for cross-examination or refutation of those sociologists nor for the introduction of contrary evidence from other witnesses. The trial court itself had received no evidence on the subject because the psydhological issues were not raised there.

WHEN THE SUPREME tribunal renders a decision without hearing all the evidence or when it disregards the lack of evidence in a trial court below, there is bound to be resentment. Congress can remedy the situation by enacting a law specifying that the Supreme Court take into consideration the evidence on both sides of a dispute. In recent months the Supreme Court has been especially solicitous about Communists and has reversed decisions where the credibility of some witnesses had been challenged, not in the same case but in other cases. That's going pretty far even to help the case of Communists charged with sedition. Certainly, the people of the South are entitled at least to a parity with Communists.

The right of Congress to formulate rules for the Supreme Court to follow is derived from article three of the Constitution, which says:

"IN ALL CASES affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and those in which a state shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned, the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as a law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make."

This could be applied so that Congress would not let the Supreme Court have any jurisdiction whatsoever in the future in certain cases and the final decisions would be rendered by state courts in each locality. This has happened before in American history, especially in controversies arising in the Reconstruction era.

Some letters received by the writer recently have argued that Congress cannot write rules for the Supreme Court in those cases "in which a state shall be a party." But it seems to have been over-looked that there never has been a clear-cut decision by the Supreme Court itself as to when a state is really a party to a lawsuit. Thus, when citizens sue a school board, the federal courts hold that the suit is against the individuals who happen to be members of such a board, because, it is argued, if the board has exceeded its powers, its actions should not be considered "state action." It isn't the state but the individuals "acting under color of law" who are sued.

AT ANY RATE, the Eleventh Amendment to the Constitution, adopted in 1798, specifically reserves to state courts the jurisdiction of suits between citizens and a state. It prohibits the exercise of such jurisdiction by all federal courts as well as by the Supreme Court of the United States.

If the American people, however, wish to give back to the states all rights and powers — taken from them by a Supreme Court decision—to deal with public schools and educational matters, a Constitutional amendment would be the most effective method. Such an amendment could declare that "notwithstanding Article Four and the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments or any other provisions of this Constitution, the power to control admissions to public schools and to regulate and administer the processes of public education is one of the powers reserved to the states as provided in Article Ten."

Inevitably, as questions arise concerning ways and means of preventing "enforced" association of citizens against their will, the foregoing methods will come more and more into public discussion.

TODAY IN NATIONAL A

Dictatorship

WASHINGTON — Every governor, every sheriff, every mayor and every local official who has anything to do with the administration of state or city laws can be hauled into federal court on any pretext now and charged with alleged interference with a federal court order. This can happen no matter how earnestly and conscientiously the official may be performing the duties of his own office.

Such is the situation which confronts the American people today as they note the unprecedented action of a federal judge in summoning the governor of a sovereign state so that the court may pass judgment on his executive ability, his efficiency and his good faith in discharging the duties of his office.

If the governor of Arkansas should perchance differ with the terms of an injunction that may be issued by the federal judge after the Sept. 20 hearing and continue to keep troops on guard, in accordance with his conscientious belief that he is fulfilling his duty as the chief executive of his state in preventing bloodshed and disorder, he can be charged with "civil contempt" and put in jail. Under existing federal law, he will not even have the benefit of a jury trial.

IF THE TROOPS are withdrawn and bloodshed follows, there is no way to hold the arbitrary - minded Federal judge responsible for the death of any citizen.

How easy it would be for impassioned opinion to uphold a dictator in America today if he attempted overnight to transform the American system of government into an irresponsible government—judging by the widespread indifference to what is happening in Arkansas.

L AFFAIRS

By Federal Judiciary

P 9-14-57

By DAVID LAWRENCE

Many persons say frankly in their conversations with their neighbors that the governor ought to be jailed, but the average citizen today knows little about our dual system of government. Lack of education in the schools on the Constitutional rights of the states, plus the steady whittling away of those rights by a usurping federal government, aided by a usurping supreme court, has persuaded many citizens that, of course, anything the federal government does is right in all controversies with the states.

"Why don't you remove the Wisconsin senator from office?" wrote many citizens to President Eisenhower in 1955. They didn't seem to realize that there is a guarantee of freedom of speech in the Constitution. Nor did they know apparently that the states are supposed to be sovereign. But now a governor is to be interrupted in his duties and perhaps removed by a federal court and put in jail.

NOR DO THE PEOPLE generally understand that a governor can be tried now without a jury and sentenced to jail by the same judge who makes the charge and acts as prosecuting attorney, judge and jury. Congress debated this very issue recently in connection with the "civil rights" bill but surrendered to the concept of a federal dictatorship. There are no jury trials in "civil contempt" cases.

This correspondent made a memorandum for himself on Sunday, Aug. 31, apropos of the passage of the "civil rights" legislation by Congress and put it in his files to be read a year hence. The memorandum read as follows:

"The damage done to Constitutional government by a majority at the session of Congress just ended is epochal. It is the worst blow to the dual system of government inflicted in the history of the republic.

"For the states have been placed in the role of subordinate 'satellites' of the federal government. Their governors, their justices, their mayors and their sheriffs now can be court-martialed at any time by federal injunction. They no longer are independent, self-governing units.

"Only a patriotic and impartial-minded Supreme Court of the United States can strike down this usurpation of power by Congress. The membership of the present court—itself recently guilty of usurpation—affords, however, little hope of saving the Constitutional system.

"The legislators call the new measure, for instance, a law on 'civil rights.' They have made millions of persons believe that only the right-to-vote issue is involved. Actually, the new law is a condemnation of state government in America—its capacity to rule. This deprives the states of their historic right to determine for themselves what the qualifications of voters shall be and whether state, county and city officials are properly enforcing such state laws. This opens the way at any time for the central government to break down the authority of state governments on any question by further use of the same principle of federal authority now written into the 'civil rights' legislation."

ONLY FOUR DAYS LATER the prediction in that memorandum came true. There is chaos today in the relations between the states and the federal government. Footnote for history: In this tragic hour the President and the Congress and the Supreme Court of the United States are away from Washington on vacation.

Which 'Constitution'?

(Editor's Note: The following editorial appears in the current issue of U.S. News & World Report, and was written by David Lawrence, editor of the magazine.) N+C 9-12-57

President Eisenhower, in telegraphing to the Governor of Arkansas last week, said:

"When I became President, I took an oath to support and defend the Constitution of the United States. The only assurance I can give you is that the Federal Constitution will be upheld by me by every legal means at my command."

But which Constitution?

Is the so-called Fourteenth Amendment, under which "integration" is being forced today upon an unwilling population in the South, really a valid part of the Constitution?

The Southern States, after the war was over, ratified the Thirteenth Amendment abolishing slavery and this was accepted as legal by the Federal Government. Yet when the same legislatures in the South subsequently assembled lawfully and rejected in due form a proposed Fourteenth Amendment, all Southern members of Congress were deprived of their seats in the Senate and the House. Federal troops were ordered to take charge of these State legislatures. Puppet legislatures finally did "ratify" under duress.

The Supreme Court in the last 89 years has never ventured in a single instance to decide the issue of whether this "ratification" was actually lawful.

Why, therefore, are some of us so explicit and eloquent nowadays in sanctifying the phrase—the "supreme law of the land"—as requiring compliance with the vague and undefined edicts of a Supreme Court that has plainly disregarded the illegality of the so-called Fourteenth Amendment?

Where in the Constitution are the federal courts given the right to control or regulate the schools of the nation and to dictate to them whom they shall admit as students and whom they shall refuse to admit?

Where in the Constitution is there any delegation of power to the Federal Government to put in jail parents who wish to persuade other parents to refrain from sending their children to mixed schools? Yet federal injunctions today seek to coerce these citizens and deprive them of their right to speak freely as guaranteed under the First Amendment of the Constitution.

The President's telegram to the Governor of Arkansas will become a historic document. It may have unfortunate consequences in the future relations between the States and the Federal Government. It appears to be an ill-advised statement prepared for Mr. Eisenhower by overzealous lawyers in the Department of Justice. The telegram said in part:

"You and other State officials—as well as the National Guard, which is, of course, uniformed, armed and partially sustained by the Federal Government — will, I am sure, give full cooperation to the United States District Court."

Where in the Constitution is any power given to the President or to anyone in the Federal Government to say to the Governor of a sovereign State that he must not use the National Guard — State troops — to maintain order? And since when does the fact that the National Guard receives funds or uniforms or guns from the Federal Government deprive the Governors of our States of their right to use these troops for State purposes without first obtaining the permission of the Federal Government?

Does this mean, too, that the allocation of federal funds to schools, which has been urgently advocated in recent months by the President, will give the Federal Government some new and hitherto unbestowed grant of power to pass judgment on the efficiency of a State Governor or to question his motives when he attempts to do his duty, as he sees it, under the Constitution of his own State as well as the Constitution of the United States?

Since when, to be sure, is it the duty of the National Guard to execute federal injunctions? Since when has the National Guard become an instrument of the federal judiciary? Since when has an injunction or order issued by a lower court become a final decree that must be obeyed under threats of reprisals by the Chief Executive even before the court order has been properly reviewed on appeal to the higher courts?

Are the Governors and State legislatures now mere puppets, and have our several States suddenly become "satellites" which can function only with the consent of a federal dictatorship?

There is only one Federal Constitution in America. It is in the Articles and lawfully-adopted Amendments to the document itself. All misguided attempts to amend this Constitution by the fiat of nine judges must be deplored as a usurpation of power and a defiance of the Constitution itself.

For to the people alone—uncoerced by military force —is given the power to change the Constitution. The method is specifically prescribed in the Constitution itself.

This is the way to preserve our dual system of government. It is the only way by which the nation can maintain internal peace and national unity.

How Is It Being A Southerner?

N&C 9-13-57

How is it being a Southerner these days?

Part of the answer is that there are many Souths and many kinds of Southerners. But, then, that was true a hundred years ago when another consttutional crisis flared across the land.

It is being the basic type of Southerner in all periods of the region's history—the small farmer. For this type of Southerner, who can be found anywhere in the sandhill country stretching from Southsde Virginia to Florida's mid-country, being a Southerner is knowing adversity, remembering adversity, and meeting adversity. Time has toughened this breed. His strong Protestant faith, revealed in the almost Puritan white Baptist and Methodist churches, has taught him that evil must be wrestled with and defeated.

Sociologists have a term, "other - directed", which describes Americans whose character and behavior are shaped by the pressures around them, who have surrendered principle and abandoned the fighting spirit. The Southern farmer of the pinelands and of the small villages and towns is perhaps the least "other-directed" breed in the United States. Tractors may have replaced mules and television aerials may dot houses in the rural South, but the repository of the fighting Southern spirit is still strong in the hearts of these people.

THE SOUTHERN FARMER may be leaving the land in increasing numbers. But there are great numbers who are still there, still working under the hot sun, still shrewdly scratching a living from the soil. And in many places the loss in farm population has been a loss only of the weakest. In many areas of South Carolina people are earning a good living from the soil, sending their sons to great agricultural schools like Clemson, spreading in influence and affluence.

As travelers cross the South, they don't often see the economic independence of the Southern farmers. They know, of course that some crops are price-supported, and, if the government sought to break Southern resistance to race mixing by economic pressure, it could conceivably cut off price supports. But what edict from Washington could be worse than the boll weevil, the prices paid in Northern markets or Japanese textile competition? The Southern farmer has survived and is surviving all these.

The Southern farmer's house may not look as modern as the Northern city dweller's suburban home, though many do. But those fields stretching behind the house belong to the farmer—clear of mortgage. The Northern suburban home is not.

Furthermore, there may be fields down the road or in adjoining county that were left to the farmer by his father or that his wife inherited. There may be cows in the pasture and hogs down by the creek. The farmer's son may have a job in town. The rural community of the South is what sociologists call familistic and cooperative" instead of individualistic and competitive as in the North." The Southern farmer is most probably part of a big family, and Southern families — brothers and kinsmen — help each other.

THIS BREED is accustomed to freedom, their fathers and grandfathers before them were accustomed to freedom. It isn't something gained in this generation, something their people have never fought or starved for. Their racial memories are of freedom under Southern skies, not of oppression and fear and subservience in the slums of Europe.

Being a Southern for this breed is being free? And anyone or any group, whether editors of The New York Times or "liberal" professors in New England colleges or whatever, simply don't know this Southerner if he thinks he will live any way other than free.

THERE ARE OTHER breeds of Southerners.

Being a South Carolinian is something special. The Palmetto State has a fiery tradition. Respect in South Carolina has always been given to bold, outspoken men, "fireeaters" they called them in pre-Civil War days, not compromisers, dealers. Of course, the state has had its demagogs, scallywags, opportunists, fixers, men who hang onto the coattails of Washington officials.

But that's not the way the basic human grain runs in this state. Memories are long, families are known—their qualities fixed in mind, and daring and courage count more than smoothness and a willingness to admit that one side of a question is as good as another.

THE SOUTH'S CITIES have always been few. They are more numerous today. Some have a special character—cities such as Charleston, Richmond, Montgomery. They represent an aristocratic outlook on the world, an outlook characteristic of the South's realistic view of men and events, open acknowledgement that some men are more courageous, intelligent and able than others. Their older elements are tight-knit. And while some of the sons of old clans are blank-eyed, ignorant and itching for advancement at any cost, old traditions form a mold that casts human characters even as some individuals may resist it.

And some do resist. They resist by prefering pleasure above all else, forgetting that what they have was handed own by someone else, ignoring duties.

Yet another Southerner is the Southern suburbanite who generally lives in a one-class, one age community.

This Southerner is the unknown element in the present-day South. And the course of Southern resistance, the future of the South as a region of independence depends much on this breed.

Of course, anyone who lives in a new community came from an old one. And what he brings to that new communty, the foundation on which he builds, determines the strength of his new community.

Today, the houses going up in the countless "acres", "terraces", "lawns", — the stock names given housing developments — resemble houses being built in New York, Ohio, and California.

What about the people inside? Are they like people everywhere else, mass men? Or are the people in new communties mindful of tradition, family loyalty, love of the land—all the things that have bound Southerners together and made them distinctive among the people of the United States?

HOW IS IT being a Southerner? The real answer to that question will be spelled out in the years ahead, in acts of courage, determination, sacrifice and political intelligence.

English Students Surprised By Race Relations

N&C 9-22-57

COLUMBIA, Sept. 21 (AP)—Two Cambridge University students visiting here said today they were "agreeably surprised by the relations between the white and Negro races."

They said that in Europe and "the North the picture is painted much worse than it is. "The Negro in the North is not a great deal better off," they added.

"Before coming," they said, "we imagined a case of bitterness between the races. But we have found none."

D. W. T. Osborn and J. H. Hussey made these observations while visiting Columbia on a rapid tour of the United States.

NICHOLAS STANFORD

SCEF—New Anti-South Pressure Organization

N&C 9-17-57

NEW YORK

The Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., a device used by "liberals" to harass the South, has just acquired two recruits in the persons of Carl and Anne Braden, operating out of Louisville, Ky.

Braden is the onetime newspaper copyreader who served as the "beard" or straw man in a block-busting operation in Louisville. Braden bought a house in a white residential neighborhood ostensibly for his own use, in reality with the express intention of reselling to Negroes.

The Bradens now are working as full-time field secretaries for the Southern Conference Educational Fund, an offshoot of the old, notoriously Red - infested Southern Conference for Human Welfare.

THE SCEF, with headquarters at 822 Perdido Street, New Orleans, is headed by Aubrey W. Williams of Montgomery, Ala., former head of the National Youth Administration.

On March 19, 1954, Sen. Eastland (D-Miss.), sitting in New Orleans as a one-man convocation of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, heard John Butler, an ex-Communist from Texas, testify that Williams attended a "closed Communist meeting" at Nashville, Tenn., in 1942.

"Closed" meetings are attended only by tough, disciplined Communist Party regulars. Fuzzy-headed social workers, parlor pinks, Marxist college professors, collectivist-minded clergymen and other fellow-travelers are firmly excluded. To attend a "closed" meeting one must be high in the councils of the Communist Party.

Subsequently, Butler testified, Williams was introduced to him as a Communist Party organizer.

WILLIAMS of course heatedly denied membership in the Party. So did Dr. James A. Dombrowski, executive director of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, whose name has cropped up rather frequently in connection with "front" organizations."

The SCEF is said to be supported by "voluntary contributions from individuals in all parts of the country." If this is true it differs from the old Southern Conference for Human Welfare, which derived a good portion of its income from "liberals" in New York City.

If the financial backing of the SCEF is obscure, its purposes are not.

A CIRCULAR LETTER from the Bradens says: "We shall pay special attention to the job of winning voting rights for all citizens and organizing support for civil-rights legislation at the national and state levels."

The letter also says:

"The help of many people like yourself brought victory in our struggle against sedition laws and segregation in Kentucky. We feel that through your continued cooperation and support we will be able to contribute to final victory over segregation and discrimination in the whole South."

"Victory against sedition laws" is another way of saying the organization's purpose is to make the conviction and deportation of Communist Party members as difficult as possible.

"People like yourself" refers, among other things, to former members of Henry Wallace's Progressive Party and of the Independent Citizens Committee for the Arts, Sciences and Professions. The latter group was about as independent as the editor of The Daily Worker, following the party - line with downright Muscovite fidelity.

The available evidence seems to indicate that the SCEF is a party-line operation of a familiar type, dangerous as a rattlesnake and and phony as a three-dollar bill. Its pronouncements deserve to be received with the utmost skepticism.

Sweetness And Light?

Smug Hypocrisy In N. Y. Papers

By NICHOLAS STANFORD

NEW YORK.

Smugness and hypocrisy are annoying traits. The smug hypocrisy of the New York press in reporting news, or what passes here for news, of events in Little Rock, Nashville and other hot spots outdoes even the previous achievements of the New York press, which is saying plenty.

The tabloid Daily Mirror sandwiched in among its Little Rock portfolio a picture of white and Negro first-graders attending their first day of classes at a New York school.

Anybody can see it is a carefully posed publicity photograph having little relation to actual situations existing in New York schools. Anybody who can read a newspaper knows all is far from sweetness and light in the New York school system.

Yet The Mirror asks its readers to believe New Yorkers to be paragons of tolerance, as contrasted to the Southern whites whom it depicts as Ku Klux Klan fanatics.

As might be expected the "liberal" New York Post is most vociferous in its denunciations and loudest in raising the cry of "Lynch Faubus!"

Murray Kempton, filing from Nashville, writes in characteristic purple prose of the backward, benighted Tennesseans who oppose race mixing in the schools.

Is Kempton himself as broad-minded and tolerant as his pieces in the Post? Do his own children, for example, attend mixed schools in New York?

No. Kempton doesn't even live in New York. He commutes from Princeton, N. J., where the race problem is as near the zero point as anywhere in the eastern U. S.

Even Richard Watts Jr., The Post's drama critic, gets into the act, writing that "There couldn't be dramatic irony of more shocking bitterness than the shout of those pathological white hoodlums to the dauntless Negro school children: 'Go back to the jungle!'"

"Pathological white hoodlums" is strong language. How about Watts? Does he practice what he preaches? Does he, for example, live in a mixed, or "black-and-tan," neighborhood?

Not Watts. One of the richest working newspapermen in New York, he has an independent income and lives in a segregated all-white apartment building on Fifth Avenue into which a Negro tenant could not force his way except at the point of a gun.

A sentimental little story in one of the papers asks us to believe that "For the life of them, a group of first-graders in one New York school can't understand why school segregation is a problem in the South. They themselves are of all races and they get along fine. So they sat down to write to President Eisenhower about it."

Further down it develops the young scholars were put up to it by a teacher who wanted to get her name in the paper — and did.

If the kids want to study the race problem at first hand, they need go no further than New York's five boroughs, where, although New York's teacher pay scale is the highest in the nation (average, $5,407) jobs are going begging because teachers don't want to teach in Negro and Puerto Rican schools.

There is school segregation in New York, so much so that the NAACP and allied pressure-groups have agitated for a "shuttle" system of mixing races by transporting Negroes to schools in white neighborhoods and vice-versa. This is a nuisance for all concerned; parents, as a result are picketing Public School 201 in Flushing.

With all this going on in its own backyard, New York's pious protests about Little Rock and Nashville have a somewhat hollow sound.

Soviet Segregation

Post 9-23-57

To the Editor, Evening Post:

The Russian Ambassador to the U. N. told the Ceylonese Ambassador that, if he went to Little Rock, he would be treated worse than in Hungary because of his color. Though never in either Hungary or Little Rock, I have been in the Soviet Union three times, and especially noted the treatment of their non-whites.

Comprising 16 per cent of the total population as compared with 10 per cent in the U. S., by a system of internal passports their non-whites are not permitted to travel except in the Southern tier of Soviet States. Year before last when Supreme Court Justice Wm. O. Douglas visited those areas, he reported:

"The Soviets have foisted segregation on Central Asia. There are separate schools for the natives and separate schools for the Russians."

It is fortunate that our brand-new Ambassador Maxwell H. Gluck has arrived in Ceylon to explain this to Prime Minister Bandaranaike (doesn't rhyme with Ike).

A Layman's View On Race

N & C 9-22-57

To The News and Courier:

This Sunday the Catholics in South Carolina will be asked to make a substantial contribution towards defraying the expenses connected with educating young men for the priesthood for the diocese of Charleston. In the past our Catholic people have been happy to take part in this activity; however with the passage of time we now approach it with mixed emotion and some reluctance. For an increasingly large number of these seminarians are, to use a hackneyed but accurate expression, being brainwashed in the frenzied new religion of racial amalgamation. This has become painfully true not only in regard to the products of our Catholic seminaries but of those of our Protestant neighbors as well; a fact which the families and friends of these young men have learned by unhappy experience.

David Lawrence quite aptly said that "Race is a badge of distinction". I would carry that further and say that "Race is a badge of distinction, created by God; to be worn with pride for the honor of God."

I am proud to be a white person, not because of anything I have done, but because God made me so, and more, it is my duty to be so; for to be ashamed of it, or to belittle it would be to belittle the work of God.

I believe that my Negro neighbor can and should be proud of his race for the same reason. He does not need to be forced upon me to achieve his destiny with God, nor do I need to be forced upon him to achieve mine. Indeed any thinking or unthinking person when regarding the startling physical differences with which the races were endowed shrink instinctively, naturally, and violently from the idea. Not out of political oratory was born the old homily, "Birds of a feather flock together." For our Divine Master Himself said "In My Father's house there are many mansions." Must the plural usage be emphasized?

In this concept of decent separateness, we have in general learned to respect our differences and live in harmony until there came among us those who would make over all others to their own image; and those who find profitable fishing in troubled waters. It is freely admitted that low persons have taken advantage of this separate society to their own low ends. But will abolishing the separateness abolish injustice? It can never be; for injustice knows no color, no race, no honor, it knows only expediency. And Negro is unjust to Negro as white is unjust to white; and Negro is fully as capable of injustice to white as white is to Negro.

There is no injustice in living as separate racial entities, the pontifically expressed but still the personal opinion of Bishop Rummell to the contrary notwithstanding. But it is a most real injustice to the Negro to tell him directly or by implication that he cannot hope to be anything unless he be intimately and thoroughly mixed with the white race.

We as Catholics have always been taught that it was the duty of the Church to speak out against injustice WHENEVER and WHEREVER it occurred. So be it. And we have seen the Church accept and cooperate with the custom of racial separation. It is a matter of civil and church record that individuals and religious order groups in good standing with the Holy Roman See have engaged in distinct and separate apostolates to the Negro.

Separate schools, separate churches, separate hospitals, separate universities, and separate seminaries have been built in the South, and in the more practical dioceses are still being built; and for the record they are being built principally with white money. And today Bishop Fulton Sheen, national director (and fund raiser) for the Society of the Propagation of the Faith, is pleading for the establishment of a native clergy; and he has given most excellent reasons for his conviction. And there is no question as to his good standing with the Holy See.

The recent and sudden flipflop on the part of some of our modern churchmen is quite similar to the action of the Washington court; and it leads inevitably to one of the following conclusions:—

1. The Church failed in its duty in the South and erred; and the laymen, priests, nuns, and bishops of yesterday were immoral and sinful.

2. Truth is not an absolute and real value, but rather, a variable propaganda commodity that changes handily with the times; and the end purpose justifies any means used to accomplish it.

3. Separation of the races as such is not immoral and sinful at all.

Sympathy In North

N&C 9-20-57

To The News and Courier:

I am writing to you because of our deep concern regarding the high-handed method taken by our administration in forcing "integration". Many of the white folks in the North don't approve of the manner in which this has been accomplished, but they are either too complacent or they don't know what to do.

Cleveland is being flooded with colored folks. The white folks are running as fast as they can to the suburbs.

We have always been Republicans down through the ages in my family, but as we see it, there is a crying need for a new party consisting of "Conservative Republicans and Southern Democrats".

We hope that the white folks in the South realize that they have thousands of Northern sympathizers. It is true that there are so-called "crazy do-gooders" up here who just don't know the score, but by and large, thinking citizens are tired of a good many outlandish ideas coming out of Washington these days. Before this good old country of ours is gone to the dogs completely, it seems that this is the time to get a powerful, red-blooded American to run at the head of a new party.

Weak Leaders

N&C 9-17-57

To The News and Courier:

President Eisenhower is upholding what nine justices say our Constitution is. They are upholding what Gunnar Myrdal says it is, and Myrdal interprets it pleasing to the NAACP which has the backing of the Communist Party. And to think, the fate of this nation lies in the hands of such men!

It's tragic, indeed, when the words of a foreign sociologist from an all-white country can reach out, like the tentacles of an octopus, all over this nation and hold us in a paralyzing grasp in this integration issue. And it's worse than tragic, when this was made possible because nine irresponsible men—whose word would become "the law of the land" — were appointed to that high office by vote-buying presidents paying off their political debts.

No wonder our nation is weak, for a nation is no stronger than its weakest leader — and God knows, all ours are weak. When our robot leaders—including most federal judges—speak, we know the voice is theirs but the words are those of the NAACP and other pressure groups.

Since the NAACP is giving the orders, why doesn't Mr. Eisenhower just step down and let Roy Wilkins have the office—for Wilkins, Thurgood Marshall and Adam Clayton Powell (and their backers) are the real leaders of this nation, anyhow.

It would be well to get all white politicians out of office, and let the half-breeds and their communist friends take the reins instead of standing behind cracking the whip on the white robots.

We don't need two sets of drivers in Washington.

Divide And Conquer

N&C 9-15-57

To The News and Courier:

This forced mixing of the races is a part of the communist program. Racial tension is one of their greatest weapons.

In this country they want to set race against race, North against South and the other way round. Then when they get everything in utter confusion they hope to step in and take over the government. That is the method they have used in other countries.

We are supposed to be fighting communism all over the world, but we are letting them take over this country.

The whole world is going through a revolution. What is going on in this country is just part of it.

To The News and Courier:

The following letter has been sent to Time Magazine:

This is with reference to your article in the Sept. 9 issue of Time entitled "The Congress: The Last, Hoarse Gasp."

It seems that every time my name appears in Time it is necessary that I write a letter to the editor to correct the misinformation reported therein. Your article of Sept. 9 compels me to write again in order to correct the impressions conveyed by your article.

On Aug. 30, 1957, I issued a statement with reference to my extended address against the so-called civil rights bill in which I made the following points: (1) that the Southern senators agreed that each senator was on his "own" to oppose the bill as best he could, (2) that I urged another meeting of Southern senators for the purpose of agreeing to conduct an organized extended debate, and (3) that while urging this meeting I notified Sen. Russell that I intended to make a long speech against the bill. The statement I issued on that date has been verified by Sen. Russell.

In my view, the bill was unnecessary, unwise, and unconstitutional. In my speech I pointed out seven different ways in which the bill violated the Constitution. Under the circumstances, I felt it to be my duty to try to point out the dangers inherent in H.R. 6127.

Praising Thurmond

To The News and Courier:

We were happy to see that you editorially commended Sen. Thurmond on his speech against the so-called civil rights bill.

The Vicksburg (Miss.) Sunday Post contained what I think is an excellent editorial. A copy of the editorial page is enclosed herewith, with the thought that perhaps you might like to reprint this editorial.

The gist of the editorial follows:

"Sen. Thurmond's speech was not an effort to grab headlines. It was the pure and adulterated expression of a man who was thoroughly shocked that it had come to the point in America, when rights and guarantees were thrown out of the window, under the guise of civil rights.

"He gave us all a great example of courage in the face of insurmountable obstacle. We accord him the honor which should go to one who has performed a patriotic duty, over and above the call of duty."

To The News and Courier:

Strom Thurmond is to be lauded for the stand he took, single-handed, trying to save his people's freedom.

Thurmond can compare favorably with John C. Calhoun, Wade Hampton and Benjamin R. Tillman.

The thing to do is institute impeachment proceedings against the Supreme Court for unconstitutional aggression in taking over legislative powers not granted by the Constitution.

Impeachment proceedings are in order for President Eisenhower for he has twice publicly sworn an oath, that he would "protect, defend and preserve the Constitution of these United States," while he insisted that jury trials be abolished. He did everything in his power to destroy this bulwark of liberty and has succeeded admirably in a wicked design.

The only Southern governor to do anything for the defense of his state and the whole South is Gov. Faubus of Arkansas. The wait and see attitude of the other Southern governors means abject submission. The time has come when nothing else will do but swift and decisive action or our state will become a vassal of the national crooked ring of Northern politicians.

Support For Faubus

(By Telegraph)

To The News and Courier:

The following is a copy of a telegram sent to the editor of the Charlotte Observer:

Your editorial on Eisenhower's qualities and the affliction of Faubus along with his political ambitions be all of each what they may, causes me and other Americans to wonder if the issue was left to popular vote on Gov. Faubus's actions would not Faubus receive two to one support? I cannot believe that the original Constitution is to be abandoned to politicians, presidents and judiciary. Would not you better serve your country and your subscribers by honestly presenting the facts rather than by continuing your determined effort to present the thinking of your Northern owners? I believe you have been tagged the carpet bagger editor of the South. If this be true, the

A Northerner's Advice

N+C 9-18-57

To The News and Courier:

Please allow a Northerner, who has been forced by the compulsory school attendance laws of his native state to send his children to public schools that accept Negro children in the same classrooms, to say a few words to you.

The Democratic and Republican Parties, the U. S. Supreme Court, the Eisenhower administration, both houses of Congress, the NAACP, the Urban League, the B'nai B'rith, the Anti-Defamation League, the Fund for the Republic and the entire Northern press are consolidated against you. They are going to win in carrying out the Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954, thereby reconstructing the South a second time.

The success of the fixed, dead set, adamant, irrevocable determination by these modern day Thad Stevens is as sure as the sunrise.

With the stage set as it is, and in the face of such a formidable array of fanatics, stupid in hate and clamoring for revenge and to settle old scores, you have only one weapon left to fight with, which is the boycott.

Don't have anything whatever to do with Negroes, no matter what your school boards, your school teachers and the text books used in your schools teach your children while they are the school. Do some teaching yourself after your children come home. Teach them to have nothing to do with or say to Negroes who are in their classrooms. Whatever you do don't teach them to fight, abuse, insult or molest in any manner these Negro children, for that is exactly what the integrationists want.

It was Northern integrationist money that organized the Seaboard White Citizens Council and sent John Kasper south to stir up trouble and incite violence.

Remember that violence is what the North wants, so avoid it as you would pestilence. Quarantine the Negro; ostracize him; give him the full impact of silence and the cold shoulder. He and his backers have you bound and gagged, and have taken every weapon from you except the boycott. So use it with every ounce of strength and energy at your command.

Don't forget that you have white traitors in your midst who are both openly and secretly collaborating with the haters in the North for the purpose of bending you to their will and grinding you under their heel.

This writer during his lifetime has been in many New York State courtrooms when court was in session and cases were being tried. He has been in many of those in New York City. But he has never seen any of these courts swarming with Southern lawyers and Southern newspaper reporters and photographers, Southern do-gooders, their faces scowling with contempt for Northern judges and Northern juries and seeking news stories about the riff raff and scum of whom the North has an abundance. This writer has often wondered what would happen here in the North if such a situation should develop and become a reality.

As a last word, keep ever in mind that Northern integrationists, no matter how their fawning overtures are couched in honeyed accents, have a deep-seated hate for you. The spirit of Garrison, Phillips, John Brown and Harriet Beecher Stowe is still alive, lusty and rampant here in the North.

In the 96 years that have intervened since the first shot was fired at Fort Sumter, Northern hate for the South has reached the point where it knows no bounds and has become maniacal.

Philadelphian Speaks

To The News and Courier:

The following are excerpts from a letter I have sent to Walter H. Annenberg, editor of The Philadelphia Inquirer:

In contrast to your extreme intolerance manifested and to your paper's blanket condemnation of "the South", very properly the so-called "South" has not seen fit to reply to you, in kind, nor to publish slanderous references to all those living in and about the City of Philadelphia.

Your attitude and likewise the attitude of other publishers in this general area, similarly motiviated as you seem to be, is an attitude that is certainly not for the best interest of any American community!

It is not nearly enough for me to here say to you "people who live in glass houses should not throw stones", for that would be merely a gross understatement on my part.

Southern States have no desire or interest in meddling with our local problems of Philadelphia, or with the doings of the sovereign State of Pennsylvania.

Obviously, we should not attempt to meddle with their local doings, particularly when we do not fully understand them or have similar problems here to cope with. However, most Southern states, as well as others, are fully aware of the fact that there is actually more crime committed here in the City of Philadelphia in six weeks time, than there is in any one of them in a period of six months time. This, you doubtless know.

You should better spend more of your time and exert far more constructive effort, by means of your paper, in reporting on and bettering our local problems right here in Philadelphia to the end that a vast number of muggings, rape, thefts, assaults, hold-ups, murders, most of which unfortunately have and are being committed by colored people, may thereby be considerably reduced, for the benefit of us all.

Parents' Surrender

To The News and Courier:

"An integrated school system can operate without any violence if the adults will leave the children alone."

"If the adults will only let the children alone they'll do this thing in a natural, human, democratic way."

"I don't see any need for a flare-up. White children know more about this than we think they do, and perhaps more than we know ourselves."

Thus, within 24 hours after the announcement of Judge Atwell's decision requiring the mixing of white and Negro children in the Dallas schools, the author of these statements, an attorney for the NAACP, as reported in The Dallas News of Sept. 7, insolently advises white parents to surrender all parental control of their children and turn them loose, without restraint, and permit them to solve the problem in a "democratic" way.

If the insolence of this attorney and the NAACP is, as expressed within 24 hours of the integrating order, what may we expect their ultimate insolence to be?

Solid Front

N&C 9-21-57

To The News and Courier:

It seems to be perfectly evident that President Eisenhower and his chief advisers, backed to the Nth degree by the Supreme Court, are determined to destroy the Constitution of the United States, substituting in its stead a reign of despotism fashioned after the Gestapo. It is also evident that unless the people of the entire South can wake up to the dangers which confront them and swear by their lives that they will protect the sovereignty of each state, and all rights guaranteed to them by the Constitution, our way of life will forever be lost.

It is indeed disturbing to know that so many of our Southern congressmen, after a lot of loud noises of objection to the civil rights bill, which they, themselves described as most dangerous and totally unnecessary, should suddenly lay down their arms and accept defeat just because Johnson and Rayburn said they should. Would that we had more Southern statesmen and gentlemen of the courage, character and ability of Sen. Thurmond and Gov. Faubus. Both of these gentlemen gave the South a wonderful opportunity to rally and take a stand for our God-given rights.

If we, the South, will present a solid front, stick our heels in the ground and tell the rest of the country in no uncertain terms that we will be pushed no further, then and then only will we be recognized. They haven't enough jails and facilities to imprison the population of 10 to 15 states.

Wake up, people of the South, before it is too late! Let's show the whites of our eyes, and if our present political leaders lack courage, character or ability, and are reluctant to carry out the will of the people who elected them, then we will have to elect others in their place.

It is very hard to take, when we Southerners see on television our men and women being herded by so-called lawmen, with big sticks in evidence, into police cars and sent away, and then perhaps the same day we read in the paper where the Supreme Court has turned loose a number of Communist spies who threaten the overthrow of our own government.

Just why and when has the South become such a brutal, ignorant and ruthless people that they should be persecuted by the rest of our great country?

Judge Davies Is Wrong

N & C 9-21-57

(From The Indianapolis, Ind. Star)

Federal District Judge Ronald Davies has gone over his depth in summoning the governor of Arkansas to his court. A district court has no jurisdiction over a sovereign state. The Constitution gives sole jurisdiction in legal cases involving a state to the Supreme Court. If the head of a state can be distinguished from the state itself, for purposes of Federal coercion, then the states have no meaning at all. This district judge's summary assumption of the power to hail the head of a state fits the pattern of the times, in which the courts have been expanding their powers simply by virtue of their own bold decrees.

In the Little Rock affair, if Governor Orval Faubus stands his ground, there will be a situation in which an executive official is not willing to let his powers be usurped by the courts. Suppose the United States Supreme Court orders Governor Faubus to take some specific action. Can it compel him to that action by clapping him in jail if he refuses? To do so the court must find some authority which is not granted to it by the Constitution.

Could the President employ the military force of the United States to compel the governor of Arkansas to an action directed by the Supreme Court? He emphatically could not do so in pursuance of his oath to uphold and defend the Constitution. For the Constitution guarantees to every state a republican form of government. The dictation of a governor's actions from Washington would not be republican government.

If the Supreme Court's 1954 school segregation decision stands as the law of the land, then it must ultimately be applied in Arkansas as well as in other states. But the correct constitutional course for application of this decision as law in Arkansas lies not through the Federal courts but through the courts and the other governmental machinery of the state of Arkansas. Schools in Arkansas must be operated according to Arkansas law. The President's duty in this matter is to guarantee to Arkansas the opportunity to operate its schools by its own laws. Every time a Federal court and Federal marshals and other officials interfere with the local operation of a school, they are interfering with the republican government of the state concerned. Every time the President acquiesces in such interference he is failing his sworn duty to uphold the constitutional guarantee of republican government to the state.

If the school law of Arkansas is in conflict with the United States Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court, it is the duty and the province of the courts of Arkansas to declare the law invalid. It then becomes the obligation of executive administration in Arkansas to abandon the use of the invalidated law. To the Arkansas Legislature then falls the responsibility to fill the void with a valid law. This is a slow process. But it is the republican process.

Two things may be said today to the Earl Warrens and Herbert Brownells of this world, and to all their associates in high places.

The first is said in no sense of pleasure at prophecy fulfilled. It is this: We told you so.

And the second is said as no threat of specific ugliness ahead. It is this: The violence of September, 1957, is only the beginning.

Mr. Warren, Mr. Brownell, the Northern liberals of House and Senate, have not understood these things. From the very beginning, they have failed to comprehend the elemental forces that underlie race relations in the American South. The sober warnings of decent men—men who have lived their lives below the Potomac—they brushed aside as not worth hearing. The remonstrances of able lawyers, seeking to explain the reasons that underlie State control of domestic affairs, they dismissed as empty words.

Heedless of consequences, deaf to argument, blind to law, they pushed forward with a plan that could mean to the South nothing less than social revolution. Mr. Nehru would be pleased. Ceylon could be impressed. The Eighteenth District of New York, East Harlem, might be contained. Or give them, if you like, credit for sincerity at least equal to their ignorance: Let it be assumed that Mr. Warren, in his heart, regarded segregation as dead wrong, and that it seemed to him truly more important to follow his conscience than to obey his Constitution.

Whatever the motivations, the deed was done. It seemed so easy then to say, "Desegregate your schools—the court so orders." Oh, they would give lip service to "the wide variety of local conditions." They would agree, for the record, that "these cases present problems of considerable complexity." But the gauzy phrases served only to obscure what emerg the Earth revolves around the Sun, and August comes after July. These are his truths, his way and his life.

It is terrible that a school should be blown up in Nashville. It is a pity that a girl should be spit upon in Charlotte. It is the deepest tragedy that children of both races, in their formative years, should experience so needless—and now, it seems, so unavoidable—an introduction to the passions of mankind.

But this is mankind. The elements the Supreme Court madly chose to tinker with are the elements that make man the fragile vessel that he is: Love and pride and hatred; the procreative force, the getting and having of children, the upbringing of sons, the protection of daughters, the fierce preservation of a society and a civilization. It is pleasant to think of the South in terms of crinoline and debutantes, hunt clubs and college campuses and mill ponds of a sweet serenity. The South is these things, but the South is also a land of scraggly rednecks in greasy jackets and pimply youths who wave Confederate flags. It is a land where the smoldering passions of white and Negro had been restrained by unwritten rules of social conduct. Curtained off, compartmented, peace could be maintained. This was the fabric of the South; the court has torn it to shreds.

The events of September, 1957, we say again, are the faintest rumbles of far-off thunder. The storm is barely gathering. Injunctions, mandates, decrees, sweet homilies from the fifteenth green—these are paper screens to turn a hurricane. The stability of our institutions, it has been said, rests upon fidelity to law. When the Supreme Court in May of 1954 snatched away our law, our institutions shuddered. Now they fall.

We gaze upon the chaos wrought by willful men, and we ask, dear God, to what end, to what good end?

JAMES J. KILPATRICK

Time For South To Defy Warren's False Law

nrc 9-11-57

(From The Richmond News Leader)

Let us talk for a while of defiance.

Throughout the week end, the television channels buzzed with talk of defiance.

One by one network commentators came before the cameras: Men clean-cut, and sober, and handsome. They were garbed in the sincere ties of Madison Avenue; they enunciated their calumnies in perfect pear-shaped tones.

By Sunday night, if a lie could be sold, they had sold it: Governor Faubus of Arkansas, said these professional, positive, rueful men, had "defied" the United States. Something, they said, had to give. They smiled their crinkled, appealing, professional smiles; and they agreed that Faubus the outlaw, Faubus the anarchist, Faubus the exponent of "defiance," would have to go.

It is a feeble thing one attempts in attempting to reply to them. They speak to how many millions, over how many hundred stations? And this is being written on a rainy Sunday night, with the city room dark, and the lie a-building across a once great country.

Yes, let us talk of "defiance!"

ORVAL FAUBUS, Governor of Arkansas, sensed (or thought he sensed, it matters not) an active lawlessness, an incipient violence, in the city of Little Rock. Reports had been brought to him of guns sold, knives sharpened, tempers at the trembling, red - eyed point that comes before explosion. And because he is Governor of a State in the American Union; because there are powers and responsibilities vested in him to keep the peace, he called out the guard. He would have been derelict in his responsibilities had he done otherwise.

Was this in Mr. Faubus "defiance"? The television lads would have it so. Yet on the very day Mr. Faubus called out the guard in Little Rock, integration of the schools proceeded elsewhere in Arkansas. Is this the pattern of "defiance"? Mr. Faubus is condemned before the evidence in his behalf has been presented.

WHO HAS DEFIED what? Whence came the wheel that ground the knives?

If we would talk of defiance, let us talk first of May 17, 1954, when this awfulness began. Let us talk of a Chief Justice, Earl Warren, who wove his spell around the fellow incompetents on his court. Let us talk of Earl Warren and defiance!

On that black date in the history of the Supreme Court of the United States, Earl Warren and his associates took this country's Constitution, twisted it, shaped it, distorted it. They mocked the law of the land. They laughed, and slapped each other's backs, and cried: "We are the Constitution! We are the supreme law of the land! We nine!" And they did an evil, defiant, lawless thing. They corrupted the Constitution; they stole from the people the people's own; they said: "We know that the power to maintain racially separate schools never has been denied to the State by the Constitution, but henceforth we will deny it—we nine!—by the powers we usurp this day."

Was this in Mr. Warren not defiance? It is contempt, we are told, to call it so.

EARL WARREN
He defied the U. S. Constitution

FROM THAT EVIL seed has grown the evil harvest. And law-abiding men, who resist this lawless act, are denounced as law evaders. Men who defend the Constitution are charged with destroying it.

Mr. Faubus, we suppose, will lose in the end: The Federal government the States created has grown to overpowering size. But it may be that the South can gain a victory from his defeat, if the brutal insistence of our Federal masters, demonstrated anew in Arkansas, brings fresh strength to the South's determination to resist.

It is possible, too, that the whole country may gain from this affair. We may assume, hopefully, that many people, indifferent to "integration" as such, will look with suddenly thoughtful eyes upon Federal domination in Little Rock. If the ancient, inherent "police power" can be thus taken from a sovereign State and transferred to Federal judges, a judicial oligarchy will have made the clean sweep. Then, truly, State and local government becomes nullities.

Will a free people stand for it? They cannot, and remain free.

When a sitting Federal judge from North Dakota can impose his will upon the people of Arkansas, overriding the best judgment of the Governor of Arkansas, an alarm bell sounds. If an indolent people ever can be awakened to the theft of their liberties, surely they must awaken now.

WHO RULES? Who is sovereign? The people, in their States? Or appointive Federal judges? To what do we owe obedience—to the fundamental law of this land, as ratified by the States? Or to the lawless usurpation of a few mortal men?

Yes, let us talk of defiance! And if there is to be defiance, let it come now. Let it come bravely. Let it come with a sureness of conviction that the South is right and our oppressors are wrong.

We do not conveive it "defiance" to hold to what is lawfully ours. We count it, rather, loyalty, fealty, obedience to law that was law before Earl Warren was born.

On that certainty, whatever the consequences may be, let us take our stand. And pray God, let us never surrender.

The Storm Ahead

N & C 9-24-57

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK
(From The National Review)

The crisis in Little Rock is a part of the pattern of conflicting rights.

Conceding, for the sake of discussion, that the Negro pupil has these new rights, what of the white community? Has it none?

Demonstrably, the enrollment of Negro pupils in hitherto white schools leads to far more than what the Court once termed mere "disagreement" with legal principles.

Manifestly, race-mixing of certain schools now leads to knifings, dynamitings, and other forms of violence.

And thus far, integration has touched only the outer fringes of the Deep South.

By far the worst is yet to come. The question thus raised so formidably in Little Rock is whether the rights of the nine pupils override the rights of the 1,900 pupils, whether admission to a desegregated school is a right superior to the right of a community to peace and order.

Something, somewhere, has to give. Either the states have broad powers to maintain public order, or they do not; either the people have a right to domestic tranquility, or they do not.

If the federal courts choose summarily to override the police power of the states, there is nothing much the states can do about it; and if the courts insist upon unyielding enforcement of the newly created rights of Negro pupils, the communities of the South may be reduced to chaos and blood may flow ankle-deep in the gutters, but there will be nothing much for the Southerners, white and black, to do but to turn to prayer and private schools.

Mr. Warren sowed the wind; he has not yet reaped the whirlwind. But when Mr. Faubus called out the Guard on September 4, Mr. Warren reaped a cold and ominous breeze carrying a hint of the storm ahead.

mingling in public schools of the Southern states.

The fact is that racial strife is not confined to the South. It would hardly exist if the pattern of separation—evolved through years of usage—had not been distributed by agitators.

We are tired of manufactured nonsense about "propaganda" overseas. The suggestion that American laws and customs are subject to foreign veto makes us sick. Our government should not look over its shoulder to see whether it wins applause or boos from the peanut galleries of the world.

We are reminded of the words of Charles Pinckney of South Carolina, who on June 25, 1787, told the Constitutional Convention:

"We mistake the object of our government if we hope or wish that it is to make us respectable abroad. Conquest or superiority among other Powers is not, or ought not ever to be, the object of republican systems. If they are sufficiently active and energetic to rescue us from contempt, and preserve our domestic happiness and security, it is all we can expect from them — it is more than almost any other government ensures its citizens."

The United States Government is not preserving domestic happiness and security. It is fomenting strife and discord in the states of the South. It is encouraging race crime in the North. Regardless of what the rest of the world may think, internal peace should come first in a republic.

How Can They Sleep At Night?

The nine justices of the Supreme Court are on vacation. Presumably they are restoring tissues and relaxing at resorts or country places, building up strength for the coming session. We hope wherever they are they are staying in close touch with events, that they are receiving newspapers and are finding time to study racial tensions and explosions which are accumulating in the wake of the Court's school integration decision of more than three years ago.

Last Friday's news reports brought many items which show that racial unrest is not confined to the South.

In Manhattan Negroes and Puerto Ricans picketed near City Hall demanding "integration now" in New York City's schools and in privately owned housing.

Another New York dispatch reported that Secretary Dulles had called on the Ambassador to the United Nations from Nepal to apologize for the beating the ambassador suffered while strolling in Central Park. The dignitary from Nepal was set upon, stabbed and robbed by two Negro men. Apparently nobody at U. N. headquarters thought to tell Ambassador Risjikish Shaha that it isn't safe for people to walk in Central Park or Morningside Park or in Harlem after sundown without risking their lives.

From Grand Forks, N. D., came word that Louis (Satchmo) Armstrong, Negro trumpet player, has decided not to go on a government-sponsored tour of Russia because "the way they are treating my people in the South the government can go to hell." Armstrong said President Eisenhower has no guts and that Governor Faubus is an uneducated plowboy. That's strong language.

From Levittown, Pa., came word that the Negro family which recently caused near-riots by moving into an all-white neighborhood is not going to move out despite the strain of nightly harassment. The family appealed for more police protection.

On Okinawa, six Negro Marines were charged with attacking two white American servicemen, killing one. A spokesman said the killing did not involve racial feeling, but a lot of people will think differently.

In a town in Maryland, where integration has been hailed as a great success, a cross was burned in front of a Negro doctor's home.

In New York doctors worked to try to save the eyesight of a 16-year-old boy partially blinded when a 17-year-old Negro threw lye into a Brooklyn classroom. The teacher and 18 other students were burned in the lye-throwing.

No racial incidents were reported in the deep South that day, but on the edges and in areas beyond where the anti-South agitators are agitating away, the ferment was beginning to get out of hand.

We wonder if the nine men who trampled the Constitution in May, 1954, can sleep peacefully at night as they survey the fruits of their reckless action.

'Civil Rights' Bloc Will Keep On Demanding More And More From Ike

Politicians have marveled at the way Dwight Eisenhower manages to survive the blunders of his administration with his personal prestige intact.

If a farm program goes sour, Secretary Benson gets the blame. If a blooper is pitched overseas, Secretary Dulles is the culprit. If race trouble flares, the South is at fault.

But look who is a whipping boy now because he refused to follow an extremist line and bring the State of Arkansas into the integration fold by federal force. Dwight Eisenhower, that's who.

The abuse is coming from people who are alleged to owe Ike the most of all — colored citizens of the United States.

The first stream of abuse was turned on by the Negro trumpet player Louis Armstrong, sometimes called U. S. unofficial ambassador of jazz. Armstrong was scheduled to make a tour of Russia at government expense. Now he isn't going. He is sulking because he says the President has "no guts."

Armstrong has company. It includes Negro baseball player Jackie Robinson. "I congratulate Louie Armstrong," says Jackie Robinson, "This is a feeling that is becoming rampant among Negroes . . . I feel that the President has been lacking in leadership."

Up in Windsor, Ont., Negro singer Eartha Kitt—a native of South Carolina—got into the act. "How can he (Eisenhower) possibly sit and not have any emotion for what is happening right under his nose? He is not even two-faced. He has not even shown us one side of his face."

In Las Vegas, Negro singer Nat King Cole chimed in. It was "shocking" he said, not to hear some comment from President Eisenhower "one way or another."

Nat King Cole, Eartha Kitt, Jackie Robinson and Louis Armstrong are entertainers. White people, unaccustomed to looking for political leadership on the ball diamond or in a night club, may not attach much significance to what they say.

To white politicians seeking the Negro vote such intemperate, ill-mannered remarks have plenty of significance. They will mean something to Mr. Eisenhower, too. They are a warning to him that the "civil rights" bloc expects him to keep on delivering the goods.

Though he signed the force bill a few days ago he hasn't won a permanent place in the hearts of Negroes.

"After all," their leaders are saying, "that was last week. What have you done for us this week?"

Old Southern Custom

N&C 9-21-57

Throwing lye in an enemy's face is a fairly common custom among Southern Negroes, as hospital emergency room records will testify. An enraged 17-year-old high school student in Brooklyn hurled lye into a roomful of classmates, possibly blinding his special target and injuring 13 others. In reading a news dispatch we looked for the identification of the lye-thrower. The Associated Press said he was a Negro. New York newspapers customarily do not publish the race of criminals so readers there may not know the full story. They will begin to recognize, however, some of the reasons why Southerners believe in separate public schools.

Law Of The Land

N&C 9-15-57

Twenty-five years ago the U.S. Supreme Court handed down an opinion in a case involving a dispute between the governor of Texas and the federal government. The court said:

"As the State has no more important interest than the maintenance of law and order, the power it confers upon the Governor as chief executive and commander-in-chief of its military forces to . . . preserve the peace is of the highest consequence . . . (The governor) is appropriately vested with the discretion to determine whether an exigency requiring military aid . . . has arisen . . . HIS DECISION TO THAT EFFECT IS CONCLUSIVE."

The decisions of the Supreme Court are "the law of the land."

Reds Condemn Governor Faubus

The most touching chapter in the Arkansas story has been contributed by the Communist party.

Moved by their intense devotion to the traditional American system of government, the Reds have called for the arrest of Governor Orval Faubus. Not only that, but the President and the Attorney General should crack down in other "offending areas."

The Communists say Faubus should be jailed because he is "an instrument of a conspiracy to nullify the authority and laws of the federal government."

Governor Faubus' crime was in calling out the militia to prevent violence and bloodshed, to protect life and property. These dangers were threatened by a federal court order decreeing compulsory integration in Little Rock schools.

The Communist party's concern for the federal government ought, one might think, shame those of us who had the fantastic idea that the Reds' basic purpose all along has been to overthrow our system. We're still crazy enough to nurse that belief.

In one vital respect the Reds see eye-to-eye with the "liberal" groups and politicians—Democratic and Republican—who want a highly centralized, socialized federal government. So long as the states can hold on to the sovereignty which the Constitution intended to pledge to them, the path of Communism and other radicalism is blocked. Local self-government is anathema to such groups. The South, be it noted, is virtually free of the Communist infiltration that has made such headway in some other parts of the country.

It was only natural that the Communists should have been prominent in the drive to force racial integration upon the South. They want to smash this section's social, economic and political structure. They have helpful allies in other circles, and a number of unwitting tools in still other quarters. The Communists have suffered setbacks in the United States, but they won a major victory when the Supreme Court blue-penciled the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution in ruling against segregated schools.

And of course men like Governor Faubus, who make a stand for the rights of the states and the people thereof, must be disposed of if Communism is to make more headway in the United States.

Faubus In Hostile Hands As South Grapples With Rising Disorder

When Gov. Faubus meets President Eisenhower today in Newport, R. I., he will find himself in hostile territory. Flanking the President will be his two chief aides. They are Sherman Adams, icy former governor of New Hampshire, and Herbert Brownell Jr., oily cog from the Dewey political machine of New York State.

These two are as coldly uncompromising toward the South as the New England abolitionists whose methods of force and hatred they have adopted. Gov. Faubus will get no more sympathy from them than the Kremlin gang would give the spokesman for a conquered satellite. If they grant him a face-saving exit he can count himself lucky.

If the Arkansas National Guard troops are removed at Little Rock, what next for the South?

In many places, police are striving to keep order in a rising tide of resentment. Law-abiding citizens are ringed by court orders, oppressive laws and threats of arrest. Their crime is the protection of their children and the white man's civilization their ancestors built.

Lawless individuals already are taking things into their own hands. In recent days they have mutilated a fellow man in Alabama because his skin was black. They blew up a school house in Nashville. Where they will strike next no man knows.

Even in milk-mild North Carolina, a colored girl who braved the jeers of white pupils has withdrawn from a white school into which race agitators had forced her. She couldn't stand the strain. For her and other victims of the agitators, we feel nothing but pity.

Civilian police in some places may find they can't keep order. The mob spirit is rising. Southerners are neither more brutal nor less law-abiding than people in other regions. They can, however, be pushed beyond the point of endurance. Then they may erupt in civil disorder.

If governors can't use state militia, will there rise a demand for federal troops? If that demand is met, the police state will have taken over our Republic. Then may citizens fashion home-made gasoline bombs to hurl at tanks, as they have done against similar oppression in Europe and Asia.

Oppressed people become desperate. Terrorism is one of their weapons. If they are unable to fight the federal government, Southern white men may turn on Negroes. It is a prospect long dreaded by citizens of good will in both races.

Late as the hour may be, it is never too late to head off strife. South Carolina so far has been spared serious clashes. Much of the credit belongs to the good colored people of our state. They have not as a whole encouraged rabble-rousing leaders to whip up emotions. They have not, since Clarendon County colored parents were hoodwinked into signing one of the original school integration suits, tried to force Negroes into white schools.

In voluntary separation may be a peaceful solution for regional race troubles. Good manners and mutual respect are more powerful than bayonets. We pray that our state, and the South as a whole, may be spared the turmoil for which national policy-makers are asking.

Though our voice does not carry far, we appeal to all who hear us to summon their patience, fortitude and humanity to preserve the peace and dignity of the state.

Negroes Menaced By Red Plot

ONE of the greatest and most alarming hoaxes perpetrated on the American people in the Red campaign to undermine the foundations of the United States is spearheaded by the Communist drive among negroes started in 1920. So cunning and insidious has been (and is) the propaganda pressure of this subversive Red drive that it has fooled millions of respectable, loyal American negroes and deluded thousands of white "intellectuals" including clergymen, professors, teachers, scientists, etc. into following "the Communist line." Moreover, many stupid and/or selfish political leaders have been so misled by this Marxian propaganda that they have come to believe that the socializing of America is inevitable and that they can best secure the votes of "the people" by jumping on the Red bandwagon even to enacting ruinous, un-American legislation formulated by leftwing master-minds.

Negro citizens who in America enjoy more opportunities, privileges and prosperity than in any other country have been duped by the Reds into supporting the Socialist-Communist plot to change our free American system, into a "welfare state" under a dictatorship. The bait held out to negroes is (quoting John T. Flynn, Ref. A, page 102) " . . always to raise the standard of living or education or social justice. But the real purpose always is to line up the negroes on the side of the Communists or their near brothers, the Socialist Planners. They thus invite the sympathy and support of great masses of negroes . . . "

The objectives of the Reds in the South are: (1) To get the vote for the negroes there, and (2) to round up the negro voters under the Red banner of the Socialist Planners," (Ref. A, page 100) " . . . and to stir up strife in churches, schools and communities."

Evidence that unsuspecting negroes are being used as tools by Communist and Socialist negro leaders may be found in the following statement of FACTS carefully checked and documented. We do not wish to see our negro friends deceived into supporting a sugar-coated scheme which will result in depriving them of their earnings and eventually will carry them back into slavery.

I.

Communist Negro Drive: "The Communist negro drive was started in the United States in 1920." (Ref. B, page 90). How to organize the negroes for the revolution in the U. S. was discussed in the official report of the Sixth Congress of the Communist International, held in Moscow in 1928, and Comrade Jones, USA, chairman of the negro delegation from the United States, stated: "The central slogan around which we can rally the negro masses is the slogan of social equality." (Ref. B, pages 90, 91).

II.

NAACP: The National Association for Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) was organized in 1910 to aid negro progress. But in 1925 "the official report of the Communist Party's 4th national convention stated that the Party had penetrated the NAACP . . . " During the 7 years, 1923-30, the NAACP received some $43,000 from the radical Garland Fund among whose directors were Communists Wm. Z. Foster, Eliz. Gurley Flynn and others (Ref. C). Among the organizers of the NAACP was the Communist-front negro leader, Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, (Ref. D). The other four organizers were white radicals, (Ref. E, pages 819-20).

Today the chairman of the NAACP Board of Directors is Channing H. Tobias, listed at least 17 times as having been a member or officer or affiliate of Communist or Communist-front organizations (Ref. F). Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, one of the NAACP founders, was its Director of Research until about 1949 and now is reported to be its "Honorary Chairman." W. E. B. DuBois is listed at least 14 times by the House Un-American Activities Committee and the U. S. Attorney-General as having been a member or officer or affiliate of Communist or Communist-front organizations (Ref. G). With experienced Reds holding key positions in the NAACP it would be possible for the Communists to exert influence on the policies and membership of the NAACP. Among other NAACP officers cited by the House Un-American Committee report of July 21, 1947 are 1. Maxmillian Martin, secretary, (page 92) and Gloster Current, (pages 80-81).

Official records show that the NAACP has been affiliated with Communist and left-wing movements. The NAACP was a member of "American Youth for a Free World," organized in 1942 (Ref. B, page 78). The AYFW is cited by the Federal Government (Ref. H, page 28) as having been a "Communist clearing house," and is listed (Ref. I, page 54) as "heavily infiltrated and effectively dominated by the Communist Party . . . " In 1945 the "World Federation of Democratic Youth" was founded in London by 50 delegates including Gloster Current representing the NAACP (Ref. B, pages 80, 81). The WFDY was cited in 1948 as a "part of the Communist International solar system," (Ref. H, page 123). The National Committee of the Communist Party on Feb. 23, 1946, made plans and issued a call "for the immediate formation of leftwing elements into a third party." The "essential forces" to be thus brought together were certain organizations listed in a report made at a meeting of the Communist Party on July 16, 1946 and including the NAACP which with the others named "participated in the conference held in Chicago at which the Progressive Citizens of America was set up," (Ref. B, pages 150-151). And news dispatches of March 15, 1954, state that three members of the NAACP in South Carolina are members of the Board of the Southern Educational Conference Fund called a Communist-front by the Senate Internal Security Sub-Committee which is investigating this organization now.

A recent scheme with NAACP-leftwing leadership aimed at destroying the "Southern bloc" in Congress and at enacting into law a federal FEPC is the "Leadership Conference for Civil Rights," organized in 1952 with Walter White, late NAACP executive secretary, as its head. It is composed of 52 leftist groups, including the CIO-PAC, ADA, et al. (Ref. J).

III.

Red Organizations: In THE ROAD AHEAD John T. Flynn has a chapter (pages 98-105) entitled "The War on the South." He discloses the program of the Reds for the negroes (see paragraphs 2 and 3 of this Bulletin) and gives a list of 87 Communist or Socialist organizations (from reports of House Un-American Activities Committee) which have been formed "for imposing their ideologies on the negro mind . . ." (page 102): "The (negro) movement organized by Reds and Socialist Planners is supported by large funds, an ocean of propaganda, innumerable weekly and monthly journals, speakers, forums, pamphlets, meetings, demonstrations where advisable. It has been going on for years and drawing respectability and prestige from the names of many white citizens . . . , most of them having little knowledge and no understanding of the purposes back of the whole drive." The so-called liberals and intellectuals who imagine themselves broadminded must make a choice, says Mr. Flynn. Are they going to put their weight "on the side of a revolutionary Red drive to recruit the negro in order to swell the ranks of the army of Socialist voters who will be used to complete the destruction of our political and economic system?" (Page 103). Or shall we decide "that this negro question must be subordinate to the greater one of preserving our political and economic civilization" . . . and "which will end in destroying the liberties of us all—white and black alike?"

IV.

Republican Negroes Boosted by Communist Magazine: In the February, 1954 issue of OUR WORLD, a negro magazine published at 35 West 43rd St., New York, is an article titled "Eisenhower's Black Cabinet," (pages 24-29) which tells of some 15 negroes appointed to key Republican positions. The article says that an increasing number of the persons who determine and carry out federal policies are negroes. However, OUR WORLD is listed by the House Un-American Activities Committee as "among publications which the committee found 'to be Communist-initiated and controlled' . . . " (Ref. H, page 145).

The publisher of OUR WORLD is John P. Davis listed as vice-chairman of the 1938 Communist-front Southern Conference for Human Welfare (Ref. B, pages 137-138). John P. Davis has been executive secretary of the National Negro Congress cited as Communist by Attorney-General Tom Clark. He also was a member of the national committee of the International Labor Defense (Ref. B, page 140) cited as Communist by Attorney General Clark in 1948 and previously termed the "legal arm of the Communist Party" by Attorney-General Francis Biddle Sept. 24, 1942, (Ref. H, page 63). John P. Davis also "was connected with the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties" (Ref. B, page 140) cited as Communist by Attorney-General Clark (Ref. H, page 83). Thus a Communist magazine is seen boasting that the Republican Party is yielding to the demands of Communists and Communist-fronters who are using the drive among U. S. negroes as one prong of the Red attack on our Republic.

Can We Preserve Freedom in America? Every intelligent, loyal American who has read the foregoing factual report on the Red drive among U. S. negroes must be convinced that it is an important part of the Communist-Socialist attack on the very foundations of our American liberty. The Red aim is to weaken and take over the United States by causing (a) social unrest, (b) racial dissension, and (c) disintegration of the American people. The ultimate result of a Red victory over America is forecast by actual conditions in Communist Russia where reliable authorities estimate there are 20 million slaves working for their Soviet masters. General Mark Clark has said that the Communists have many American soldiers held in slavery.

If we would preserve our free American heritage, all true patriots must unite to combat Communism, Socialism and all other isms—except true Americanism!

IS IT TOO LATE?

It is not in the American tradition to submit to tyranny or injustice. So, we Southern patriots some day may have to defy civil rights dictators appointed by the federal government to try to force us to accept racial integration. Or, if the Communists take over our United States, we may have to face the cold, hard fact of compliance and obedience - or DEATH.

Whether you believe it, or not, the real issue before the American people is survival! I do not enjoy coming here to give you such a message, but I must tell you the FACTS derived from painstaking research so that you may realize the deadly threat of the destruction of our splendid American System and free Republic which daily becomes more ominous.

DANGER SIGNALS FOR AMERICA

Jesus told His apostles that certain signs would indicate the end of the material world and foretell His returning to earth in glory. So there are warning danger signals for America which only fools will disregard.

Let us consider some of these signs: Reckless spending, crushing taxes and inflation not only menace our national financial structure but actually are part of the subversive scheme to ruin our American economy and our successful system of free private enterprise. Karl Marx, father of Communism, in 1848 proposed "A heavy progressive or graduated income tax" which eventually would destroy the capitalistic system. Today this Marxian taxation and mad "squanderitis" are perhaps the most potent of the Communist weapons against America, planned, instigated and directed by cunning Reds within our government.

"That is impossible", you say. But do not forget that Henry Morgenthau's Under-Secretary of the Treasury was Harry Dexter White, a Russian Communist spy named Weiss, who induced Secretary Morgenthau during World War II to give Russia the plates, paper and ink used for printing American dollars to pay allied soldiers which the Soviets are believed using now to print U. S. money to promote ruinous inflation in America!

However, the Soviet plotters have other ways of bleeding American taxpayers white. Thus the Kremlin's repeated threats of war give the U.S. bureaucrats an excuse for huge defense expenditures. And, no doubt, Communist agents and dupes encourage the flow of dollars and materials to "foreign aid" projects which often are manned by "international socialists". Sometimes this "foreign aid" falls into Communist hands, as in Yugoslavia.

Speaking from personal experience as a technical member of the Foreign Economic Administration during World War II, I spent more than a year overseas as chief of the American Food Mission to French North Africa. There I saw not only the futility and waste of "foreign aid" but also noted that many of its heads were young "liberals" and playboys, a group of elite, highly-paid spenders with generous living allowances and expense accounts. They loved being American "big shots" in a foreign country and ganged up to make this a permanent racket. I am sure that much of this "foreign aid" expense could be eliminated.

FEDERAL AID MEANS FEDERAL CONTROL

You all read of the many hand-out projects wasting billions of our hard-earned tax money. It is believed that many of these schemes originated with leftwing enemies of our form of government and have an ulterior aim of "conditioning" independent Americans to become dependent on federal aid. Thus 25 years ago there were no more self-reliant citizens than our farmers. Today many of them get much of their income from government hand-outs, and are learning the bitter truth about the iron control which goes with federal aid. The cost of subsidies to farmers for the next fiscal year will total about $5 billion - yet agriculture is in a highly unstable condition.

Fortunately, a few members of Congress seem to realize the danger of government control of public instruction and of forcing racial integration in our schools in the proposed "federal aid to education."

So many of the federal aid projects have such outwardly attractive objectives as bait that citizens fail to see the hidden Red hook. Thus Social Welfare has such a wide appeal that most citizens do not want to face its inevitable results. Britain already has found to her sorrow that, like a drunken spree, welfare spending is fun only while it lasts. According to U.S. NEWS & WORLD REPORT, Britain this year is spending $4 1/3 billion for defense and over $4½ billion for Welfare. As a consequence Britain is in a tailspin and would have collapsed long ago if it were not for nearly $40 billion the U. S. has handed to Great Britain during the past 40 years. In other words, we are subsidizing Socialism in Britain.

U. S. A WELFARE STATE

But what is worse, the United States itself has become infected with the ruinous disease of Socialism, and now is a full-fledged Welfare State.

In 1883 the Fabian (Socialist) Society was formed in England, and within 50 years had captured the Labor Party and virtually wrecked the British Empire. So, in 1905 the Intercollegiate Socialist Society was organized in New York (Felix Frankfurter was associated with this group.) And now, both major political parties are committed to Socialist schemes, and President Eisenhower is advocating unsound leftwing policies such as his astronomical budget, civil rights, and racial integration. After only 180 years of life as a nation we are on our way out - unless by a Divine miracle we are saved.

AMERICA FACING NATIONAL BANKRUPTCY

The critical condition of our American Republic was revealed by the May first speech of that great Southern patriot, Senator Harry Byrd. He stated that the total federal debt is $525 billion. Just the direct federal debt of $275 billion "is equivalent to the full assessed value of all the land, all the buildings, machinery, livestock and everything of tangible value in the United States." Adding state, local and private debts, the grand total of indebtedness is $800 billion - an increase of one third in four years.

We are practically busted, and do not seem to know it. Our dollar is worth only 50 cents, and shrinking. Yet, in spite of this situation, millions of Americans believe we are riding on a wave of prosperity.

The Red bosses of the Kremlin must be smiling as they contemplate these statistics. Already they control one-third of the world's population - 800,000,000 people - and a quarter of the earth's surface. Practically all their remarkable gains have been made without fighting. Their effective weapons are propaganda, infiltration, deceit, corruption and intrigue. They are counting on an American financial panic which will be the signal for their 250,000 Communist agents to lead a Red revolution beginning with paralyzing strikes in communications, transportation and key industries.

Despite this threatening situation and all the evidence of the Communist conspiracy against the U.S., many members of Congress not only remain apathetic but actually vote for Red-inspired schemes, and encourage their constituents to accept federal hand-outs in order to gain the citizens' gratitude - and votes. Significantly, Congress has enacted into federal law over one-third of the Communist Party program of 1928!

POLICE STATE NEXT STEP

Do not forget that the Welfare State is followed inevitably by the Police State. The economic planners (many of whom are Red agents or their dupes) can get their collectivist schemes carried out only by forcing independent citizens to comply - or else. Some of the compulsory measures now being enforced include: farm controls, wage fixing, confiscatory taxation, control of radio and TV stations, virtual nationalization of atomic energy industry, compulsory social security, peace-time military service, forced racial integration, etc. All these moves are gradually whittling away our constitutional liberties.

Meanwhile Americans are being brainwashed for the change-over from self-reliant citizens of a free republic to supine, compliant, dependent serfs of a Soviet state. The files and public records of the House Un-American Activities Committee and the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, and the published warnings of the F. B. I. disclose the alarming extent to which most of our basic American institutions have been infiltrated by the Reds and their Marxian accomplices.

CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS RED-INFILTRATED

Their number one target is the Christian Church. Thirty per cent of the Protestant theological seminaries have been Red-infiltrated and nearly 8,500 Protestant clergymen have public records of association with leftwing and/or subversive movements hostile to Christianity and to our American form of government. Recent pronouncements by some of our national religious institutions favoring socialistic U.S. policies, opposing racial separation, and advocating closer relationships with anti-Christian, pro-Communist organizations like United Nations and countries like Soviet Russia and her satellites reveal the effective undermining of our basic Americanism.

Our educational system has been so thoroughly honeycombed with Marxian Socialism ideology over a period of nearly a half century that many of our public officials, religious, educational, scientific and civic leaders, and writers have become ardent advocates of "social change" - only a step away from Communism.

Starting with the organization of chapters of the Intercollegiate Socialist Society in colleges and universities, this movement spread through the formation of the Progressive Education Association by Prof. John Dewey, and was embraced by the National Education Association. Soon the pattern became clear. Educators calling themselves "frontier thinkers" and "social engineers" conceived a plan whereby their select group working through the schools and colleges would become the dictators of "social reconstruction" in America. Text books were written and re-written, slyly slanted to indoctrinate students with propaganda for a "new collectivist order."

(A number of negro schools and colleges with Red presidents and faculty members have graduated Marxist-indoctrinated, smart young negro-white mongrels who now are active radical anti-American leaders and trouble-makers - ideal Communist tools.)

With the advent of the New Deal, the Socialists were joined by hard-core Communists to infiltrate and control the U. S. Government. The extent to which they have been successful is shown by the change in our United States from a free Republic to a Welfare State.

LABOR UNIONS ENEMIES OF SOUTH

During the past 20 years the Reds have rapidly extended their infiltration and influence to the labor unions (said by Victor Riesel to be practically all infiltrated.) The AFL-CIO leader, Walter Reuther, spent about 18 months in Russia receiving Red revolutionary training, and is suspected of being a secret Communist. A pamphlet titled "Souls Don't Have Color", issued by the AFL-CIO, with a foreword by Walter Reuther, calls for racial integration. A similar booklet has been published by the United Rubber Workers. Another significant document is a "true copy" of a Communist Party directive to the Labor Youth League (a Communist front) entitled "Operation Constitutional Rights." "The objective of this OPERATION is to mobilize every single member ... to bring maximum pressure on President Eisenhower and the Federal Government to ... intervene against the Dixiecrat terror in the South."

You should fully understand that the main aim of the labor-Communist pro-negro drive is the destruction of the South's white civilization. The Reds well know that the South is the last stronghold of fundamental Americanism in the United States.

Any worth-while organization is in danger of insidious Red infiltration. Recent reports indicate penetration of the National P. T. A., the American Red Cross, and the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Recently negro ex-Communists in sworn testimony before the Louisiana Joint Legislative Committee confirmed that Communists have penetrated the NAACP. Altogether there are over 30 organizations engaged in pro-negro activities, most of them Communist-front or subversive groups.

RED INFLUENCE IN FEDERAL AGENCIES

Red infiltration of federal agencies is evidenced by their policies and acts. When unprincipled political leaders are determined to win reelection and continued power by moves injurious to the Nation and to a large majority of the American people, they do not hesitate to follow the Red line. The outstanding example of such traitorous action is the drive by the Administration to maintain its hold on the negro vote regardless of the effects on the present and future welfare of the United States. Thus, the integration of negroes with whites in the Armed Forces undoubtedly has lowered the morale, and effectiveness of our Army and Navy.

Employment of negroes in key government positions with authority over white employees must be a source of irritation and decreased efficiency. The pictures in the April WHITE SENTINEL showing presidential assistant, negro Frederic Morrow, formerly of the NAACP, arrogantly lording it over white secretaries and a white committee, illustrate the danger threatening America's white civilization. Eisenhower should be ashamed to lend himself to such a crude political move so pleasing to the Reds. But perhaps Ike does not know what it is all about. One wonders sometimes whether he actually ever wrote a speech or understands any of the details of his monumental budget.

Moreover, the Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling was a most flagrant flouting of the Constitution, based as it was on the "sociological" propaganda of leftwingers and subversives. It seems clear that Red influence and cold-blooded political expediency were strong factors in this decision. If not, why was a subservient politician with no judicial experience selected for Chief Justice? This man is described in THE AMERICAN MERCURY of May, 1957, as "pliable" to the blandishments of Justice Frankfurter whom some believe to be a secret Communist because of his long activity in behalf of leftwing radical causes (from "Know Your Enemy" by Robert H. Williams, page 39, published 1950).

PRO-NEGRO DRIVE PART OF COMMUNIST CONSPIRACY

The brazen attempt of the Administration to curry favor with negroes apparently disregards the fact that the pro-negro drive is a major segment of the Communist conspiracy against America. This drive was started by the Reds in 1920, and photo-reproductions of Communist Party programs dating back to 1928 prove its Red inception. Its main aims are (1) to stir up dissension between the races and in churches, schools, and communities; to create intersectional strife: (2) to promote racial mixing to mongrelize the white race and weaken the United States.

The pro-negro drive includes the proposed hypocritical "civil rights" legislation which would deprive white citizens of their civil rights and use federal courts and force to attain Communist objectives ruinous to America.

REDS WINNING "COLD WAR" AGAINST U. S.

Patriotic citizens should fully realize that federal departments are Red-infiltrated. Congressman Walter Judd on May 30, 1956, testified to Red infiltration of the State Department. This may account for our loss of the Korean War and our support of Egypt in the Suez Canal crisis, and explain why the State Department recently has sent negro jazz bands to tour Africa, the Near East and Latin America.

It is strange that federal agencies like the House Un-American Activities Committee and the F.B.I. should warn of the frightening progress made by the Communists in their "cold" revolution against the U. S., while members of Congress and department heads show little apprehension over the fact "that our Christian Civilization is right now going down the drain and that not more than a handful of people are ... concerned about it."

Do not forget that while the Administration is spending huge sums of our tax money for "defense" against possible nuclear or other military attacks on America, it apparently is neglecting to effectively combat the insidious, undermining, daily and hourly assaults by the Reds to destroy the foundations of America by propaganda, infiltration and other activities of Red agents. Why is the Supreme Court so lenient to Communist termites? Why do Administration officials apparently disregard the presence and influence of Red spies and their dupes in Government departments?

FRIGHTENING FACTS

May I summarize for you several startling disclosures in the October 23, 1956, Charleston, S.C., address* by Hon. Richard Arens, Director, House Un-American Activities Committee:

(1) On U. S. air fields in France, forty per cent of the personnel are Communist saboteurs.

(2) In Africa the Communists during the past ten years have carried thousands of witch doctors to Soviet Russia to indoctrinate them with Red ideology, and sent them back to Africa!

(3) The Communists are spending three billion dollars a year on foreign propaganda.

(4) The communications lines of our Defense Department, supposedly secret, and the North Atlantic cable are being serviced by agents of the Kremlin.

(5) Hundreds of Communists agents are coming into the U. S. every month via the diplomatic-channel route, while thousands of illegal immigrants, many of them subversive and otherwise undesirable, constantly are swarming into America.

(6) The U.S.A. is the only nation in the world able to stem the Red tide.

*This speech was tape-recorded and has been condensed to a 30-minute program record, obtainable from the Grass Roots League, Inc.

WILL YOU FIGHT?

Do these authentic facts mean anything to you? Do you believe we are losing the "cold war" being waged against us by the Communists? Do you remember what happened to the businessmen when the Reds took over Czecho-Slovakia - that their shops and businesses were confiscated and the owners shot or sent to concentration camps? Do you realize that this may happen to you here, if we fail to stop the Reds?

Now let me ask you: Will you fight to preserve your freedom, your family, your business, your religion, and your country? Will loyal American citizens continue to "enjoy life" while their country goes to Hell?

I want to say that you will have to start fighting now, or be crushed.

If you could obtain an insurance policy that would guarantee you against such a disaster, what premium would you be willing to pay for it?

Your best insurance now is to join a patriotic organization dedicated to this fight, and get others to join. If you cannot spare the time to fight, then contribute money generously so that the fighters may fight. And you can write to your congressman, distribute literature, and tell these facts to everyone you meet.

Do not forget that our enemies are abundantly financed! The NAACP has over a million a year; the National Urban League about 2½ million; the Southern Regional Council receives $200 - 300 thousand annually, mostly from The Fund for the Republic which has several millions to finance anti-American activities. The Commies are spending millions to destroy us!

We need citizens with the patriotic fervor of the minute-men who fought at Lexington, Bunker Hill, Cowpens and Yorktown to win the American Revolution.

Today let us remember three enemies of our American civilization:

First, we fought the Redskins,
Second, we fought the Redcoats, and NOW, we must fight the Reds!

"DEDICATED to the maintenance of peace, good order and domestic tranquility in our community and in our State, and to the preservation of our States' Rights." On this magnificent motto stands the Association of Citizens' Councils of Mississippi.

What makes one Jew a better Jew than another Jew? Is a rich Jew a "better" Jew than a poor one? Is a Republican Jew a better Jew than a Democratic Jew? Is a Northern Jew a better Jew than a Southern one—or an Eastern Jew better than a Western one? Is an American Jew a better Jew than a French, or English, or Polish, or Russian Jew? Is a Jew who advocates integregation better than one who favors segregation? Or vice versa?

We Jews are so subject to the hurts and humiliations of the generalties uttered as truths or facts by the non-Jews that it is unthinkable that we should be willing to generalize about each other. What Jew living anywhere, anytime in the more than 5000 years of our history has not smarted under such as this: "Jews are lucky." "All Jews stick together." "All Jews are rich." The expression "Jew him down" is understood and used from one end of this country to another. Yet, every Jew knows he is an individual. Not richer or poorer or luckier or unluckier or greedier or more open-handed because he is a Jew, but because of the sort of an individual he, personally, is. The sort of individual he is depends in large measure on his background, his family, his culture, his education, his social and economic status, the community in which he lives and other environmental considerations.

I, personally, am a "Jewish Southerner," not a Southern Jew. I am also a "Jewish American," not an American Jew. I was born and reared in Mississippi, educated here and in the neighboring State of Alabama. Lest you be tempted to indulge in a "generalization" at this point on Mississippians and their total ignorance and lack of education, let me make a statement of statistical fact. THERE ARE MORE COLLEGE GRADUATES PER CAPITA AMONG THE WHITE POPULATION OF MISSISSIPPI THAN IN ANY OTHER STATE IN THE UNION. In case you are interested in another less vital fact, there are also more Cadillacs per capita in Mississippi than in any other State. I do not happen to own one. Many negro citizens in Mississippi do.

As a Jewish Southerner, I objected, and still do object, to the stand taken by national (?) Jewish organizations, and most particularly B'nai B'rith and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, in connection with the segregation decision. I accord every person in America, Jew or non-Jew, colored or white, the right to form an opinion on this controversial subject and to express it. That is the American way. While I may disagree violently with your opinion, I will defend your right to express it—as an individual. But, with an organization, especially a national organization, there is a difference.

National Jewish organizations such as B'nai B'rith and the American Jewish Congress, and others, each purport to speak for all American Jewry. Each is constantly striving to give the impression that that particular organization speaks for all Jews in the United States, regardless of locality. Nothing—nothing could be further from the truth. Most of these so-called National Jewish organizations have no Southern Jewish membership whatsoever. I doubt whether the strongest of these groups from the standpoint of Southern membership, the B'nai B'rith, can lay valid claim to having in membership a majority of Southern Jews.

When the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith took the position it did in filing a brief as a friend of the court, urging that segregation in public schools be ruled unconstitutional, the organization did so in the name of American Jewry, including Southerners. I find it hard, if not impossible, to believe that 100 per cent. of these Southerners, just because they are Jews, subscribed to or in any way encouraged or even condoned the stand taken by B'nai B'rith on the segregation issue.

The same thing happened to Southern Christians—both Catholic and Protestant. They, too, are refusing to "go along" with what they consider unrepresentative national action by their church groups.

The thinking of the leaders of Jewish organizations is fairly clear to me. They surely feel that since Jews have always and will always be a "minority" group, we must be vocal in the fight by another "minority" group in its efforts to achieve "status." And as far as that thinking goes—north of the Mason-Dixon Line—it may be accurate. The negro may be a minority group in the North. In many sections of the South the white people are the minority group.

As a case in point, take my own State, County and Town. Statistics show that 45 per cent. of Mississippi's population is negro. But that does not give an accurate picture of the distribution of this negro population. There are many of the "hill" counties with little or no negro population. Yet in my own county, there are about 20,000 white people and 40,000 negroes. In this county, there are 4,000 white children of educable age—6 through 21—and 8,722 colored children of the same ages. In my own town, there are 500 white children in the white consolidated 12-grade school. There are over 1,000 colored children in the colored consolidated 12-grade school.

Should integration come (personally, I don't think it ever will), there would be two colored children to every white child in every grade in school. My own 10-year-old daughter, who is in the upper section of her class, will be in the 5th grade this year. In that 5th grade, in an integrated school, the class would be something like this (assuming half boys and half girls): 5 white girls, 5 white boys, 10 colored girls, 10 colored boys. The white boys and girls would be all 10 or 11 years old. But what of the colored boys and girls? Our records show that the rate of failures among the primary students is very, very high. The colored boys and girls in that 5th grade room would range in age from 12 to 15. Given the same economic, social, moral and financial backgrounds, it would still be considered unwise in many educational circles to mix such a varied age group. But when you add to the variance in ages 10 to 15—the difference in cultural, moral, economic and educational backgrounds, I find it impossible to see this as the way to assure the advancement of Mississippi's negro boys and girls.

The one thing which General Nathan Twining found most distressing and disturbing on his recent visit to Russia was the fact that they are going to win the "classroom" war in the race to produce more and better scientists in the coming generation. This fact has long been known to professional educators and lay leaders who have concerned themselves with schools and their problems. Now the military has caught on. In the interests of national defense, isn't this a very poor idea to undertake an integration program which would inevitably result in fewer and less adequate scientists when the crying need is for more and better trained people? If you think I'm "just whistlin' Dixie", to use a Southern expression, I advise you to study the facts and figures which have been brought out in the investigation of the deterioration of the public schools in Washington, D. C., the nation's capitol, as a direct result of their hasty and ill-considered determination to make the Washington system a model of integration for others to follow. This investigation should be doubly interesting to American Jewry, or Jewish Americans, as you prefer, in view of the fact that the attorney heading the investigating committee is Mr. Will Gerber, of Memphis. Mr. Gerber is a Jewish Southerner.

I am wholeheartedly in favor of the advancement of the colored people of the State of Mississippi, the South and the nation. I am wholeheartedly opposed to the thinking of those who claim it can be achieved by integration.

Where then can I go to implement my sincere desire to help the negro advance, as they desire to do, yet not at my expense and at the expense of my children? In other words, how can I help them to help themselves educationally, economically, culturally at their own rate and at the pace best suited to their capacities. It can only be done through continued segregated facilities. By expense, as used above, I do not refer to financial expense. This I gladly assume. The expense I referred to was moral, educational, cultural. What group could I join that would speak out for the preservation of segregation and at the same time lend the Mississippi negro a hand in advancing? There was such a group and I joined it. The Citizens' Council—dedicated to the preservation of segregation, but not "against" the negro. Not opposed to his achievement or advancement. Just dedicated to the proposition that that achievement and advancement could best come about through continued segregation.

But, some have said, the Citizens' Council is a renewal of the KKK. Nothing could be further from the truth as regards Mississippi Councils. Any community anywhere, large or small, which has a so-called Citizens' Council that is accused of emulating KKK tactics, has only itself and its so-called "best citizens" to blame. Where community leaders have assumed their rightful responsibilities of leadership and where the lawyers, doctors, business leaders and educators have organized Councils, there you have peaceful, harmonious relations with no remote resemblance to the KKK. While Klansmen hide their faces, members of the Citizens' Council proudly proclaim their membership.

But, some have said, the Citizens' Councils are anti-Semitic. Nothing of the sort. Where prominent Jewish leaders have enrolled as members and taken an active part in the duties of the Council, there is no chance of anti-Semitism creeping in. There are communities where Jewish leaders have flatly refused to join, although in these same communities prominent Catholic and Protestant men have joined, despite the stands taken on segregation nationally by their church groups. Who can blame them for feeling a bit bitter against white Southerners who try to stay "neutral" on such an issue? The white person who lives and works in the South has got to realize, from first-hand knowledge of the situation, what integration would mean, and he can do one of three things: He can realize it, and do all in his power to keep it from happening. He can realize it, and still feel that it is the thing to do and therefore be in favor of it. He can realize it, and desire earnestly to be "neutral" and let happen what will—but his will be a false neutrality in the eyes of his neighbors who will figure that "silence gives consent," because if everybody decided to be "neutral" the silence would be pure and simple consent. So the Jew who attempts to be neutral is much like the ostrich. And he has no right to be surprised or amazed when the target he so readily presents is fired upon.

Because I have always manifested such respect for my own religion, my fellow-members of my local Citizens' Council would not for one moment entertain thoughts of turning the Council's activities into anti-Semitic channels. This pattern is, I am confident, being repeated in all the towns and cities where respected and self-respecting Jewish Southerners have felt as I feel—that segregation must be maintained and that membership in the Citizens' Council will help to maintain it. I speak from first-hand knowledge when I say that there are many Jewish members of Citizens' Councils both here and in Alabama. They realize, as I do, that any white Southerner, Christian or Jew, must do all he can to help maintain segregation. When integration comes to the South, the white Southerner will have to leave.

In many parts of the country, organizations are springing up which have adopted the obvious, famous and popular name "Citizens' Council." Some are well led and have the support of the finest elements in their community. Some may not be. In a movement of this magnitude it is natural that some of these organizations would not be well led and that opportunists would seek to take advantage of the chaos and confusion caused by the "Black Monday" decision of the Supreme Court.

Each Citizens' Council and its leaders will have to be judged according to their actions and deeds. Each Council in Mississippi and in most other States is a separate, independent, autonomous group which elects its own officers and maintains its own treasury. They are not responsible to nor for any other group or individual. The fact that the movement has grown spontaneously under these conditions proves the righteousness of our cause, brought about by popular resistance of good citizens to the obviously political "Black Monday" decision of the Supreme Court. Since this movement is based on public opinion, it is hoped that public opinion will eliminate unworthy, self-seeking rabble rousers who attempt to acquire personal publicity and who mistake notoriety for support.

Here in the South, particularly in smaller cities and towns, we cannot give lip service to integration as is done in the North and avoid having it by zoning laws, restricted neighborhoods, and such subterfuges. In the hundreds of small towns which comprise these Southern States, there is no such thing as zoning. Two or three schools will serve the whole town and those families living within a radius of 15 to 20 miles outside of the towns. Colored and white people live on "both sides of the tracks." Colored farmers live side by side with white farmers. No, the only way we can have segregation is to say so openly and frankly and let everybody know where we stand — and where he stands.

The NAACP would have the world believe that the million negroes in Mississippi and the millions of others in other Southern States are solidly united in their burning desire for advancement. Statistics on school attendance tell a different tale. Nationally, about 50 per cent. of the boys and girls who enroll in the first grade complete the full 12 grades and graduate from high school. In Mississippi, among the white students, the State average is 33 per cent. Among the negro students, this average is 3 per cent. In our home county, the average among the white students is 20 per cent. and among the negro students is 2 per cent. It would seem to be that the larger the negro population in a town or county, the fewer complete their high school education. This is true despite the fact that in some sections of the State, notably in the rich Delta country, colored students are enjoying a full nine months of school, in newly built, modern buildings that are far better staffed, offer a longer school term and more varied curriculum than many white students enjoy in poorer sections of the State.

Yet, we venture the opinion that the negro in the South in general, and Mississippi in particular, has done more "advancing" than those in the so-called integrated States. We have today in Mississippi 14 negro college presidents. We have 191 negro college professors. There are 1531 negro men and 841 negro women working in the negro colleges of the State of Mississippi. There are 2889 negro teachers holding Bachelors degrees or Masters degrees in the State of Mississippi. These teachers hold either the A or AA certificate. We have 7030 negro teachers in the State of Mississippi. How many negro college presidents do you find in New York State? In Illinois? In Michigan? How many college professors? How many negro classroom teachers?

I have a strong feeling that the people of B'nai B'rith who spoke so boldly and so loudly for integration are the people farthest removed from the problem not only here in the South but in their own back yards. They are, by virtue of education, profession, financial status and the rest of the factors involved, the least in position to be faced with the problems of integration affecting them directly. So they fall into the category of the "Let's you do it" integrationists. I wonder how many negroes live in the neighborhood of the presidents of so-called National Jewish organizations? How many belong to their Kiwanis, Lions, Rotary or Exchange clubs? How many belong to their Synagogues? How many will be found in the schools attended by their sons or daughters, grandsons or granddaughters, nieces or nephews? Ask these same questions with regard to the other leaders in Jewish organizations. Then ask yourself what about the stand of the less fortunate Northern Jew who finds himself in an economic status that throws him into the integrated neighborhoods and schools. Did he encourage the B'nai B'rith to take the stand it did? Somehow, I don't think so.

If Southern Jewry were of a mind to indulge in a little "finger pointing" we could sit here in the ivory tower of our isolation from the large and terrible problems of the labor unions, labor racketeers, Communists in organized labor and the like which fill the papers daily. We could recoil in horror from the thought that a Jew could be a member of such groups, could condone the thing done to so fine a man as Victor Reisel. We could urge Northern Jewry to break away from affiliation with such undesirable groups and elements. We could piously point out that the good which would result from such an upheaval would surely make it up to them for their loss of life, limb and property. However, we realize that we are somewhat removed from the scene. So in a spirit of tolerance and sympathy, we leave the Northern public, including Northern Jewry, to settle their own labor problems, dishonesty, racketeering, communism, bossism, graft, corruption and the rest.

Is it too much to ask that they leave us to the solution of our own problems? Any jackass can be a Monday morning quarterback, an armchair general. Any idiot can successfully rear the other fellow's children or make a go of his marriage or solve his financial difficulties. But it is the smart man who knows that each person has not only the right but the obligation to settle his own problems to the best of his ability.

I am engaged, through the Citizens' Council, in attempting to solve the negro problem in a way that will be to the benefit of all Southerners, colored and white, and will not be to the detriment or determent of any. The way to do this is through continued segregation. Any Mississippi negro who wants to advance can do so. He can have the best advantages of a good grammar school, high school and college education. He can return to his home as a doctor, lawyer, teacher or minister and make good. If he is really interested in the advancement of his people, he can help them enjoy the same advantages that he enjoyed. The negro cannot be advanced by legislation. He cannot have advancement poured on him from the outside. He has got to have an inner desire to be advanced before he can be helped to advance.

Much criticism was leveled against the Citizens' Council in their early days of organization because it was rumored that they advocated and used economic pressure. Recent events have proven that the only organized economic pressure which has been applied has been by negro groups. These boycotts have solved nothing, have bred ill will and bad feelings. They have cost jobs and large sums of money. They have deprived many citizens, both white and colored, of public conveyances which they could ill afford to lose. Where is the criticism of economic boycott when employed by a negro group or labor unions? The Federal Government uses economic pressure to enforce race-mixing in all phases of Government endeavor. Is economic pressure only to be criticized when white Southerners employ it?

"Dedicated to the maintenance of peace, good order and domestic tranquility in our community and in our State and to the preservation of our States' Rights"—something worth working for—worth fighting for through the real Citizens' Council.

October 26, 1956

Dear Mr. Cohen:

Thank you for your letter of October 12th. I wish I could enlighten you as to the absence of any spiritual blessing at the opening of the Freedom House Dinner, but I can't. I followed the routine laid down by the officials of Freedom House and confess that I did not, myself, notice the omission. Your question intrigues me so much that I am asking George Field of Freedom House whether he can shed any light on this subject.

Your query about my opening remarks embarrasses me more than somewhat, because I can't honestly remember what I said. To the best of my recollection, I said something to the effect that the function of a Toastmaster was merely to maintain order and attract attention to those speakers who had something worthwhile to say.

In an effort to acquire that basket of apples, to be sent to my home at 580 Park Avenue, New York City, I have recalled one incident I heard in London which might prove useful to you on some occasion. It went like this: The speaker who was talking to no purpose was interrupted by a man in the rear of the hall who shouted, "I cannot hear a single word this speaker is saying." To which the Toastmaster, sitting alongside the speaker, replied, "I should be delighted to change places with you!"

Dear Edward R. Murrow:

Sunday evening I enjoyed the Freedom House dinner for the third consecutive year and I am very curious about one particular thing.

I notice that the dinner starts without invocation or spiritual blessing of any kind and I wonder if there was some reason back of it. Could you enlighten me?

Among the other things I liked was your opening remark where you said "Being toastmaster give you certain privileges, etc., etc., etc." I would love to use that sometimes, and if you can give me the approximate wording, I would appreciate it, and so helpme, I will send you a basket of the best eating apples every grown (better send me your home address).

Again assuring you of my appreciation of a very fine evening, I remain,

I have talked with Janet about the Museum of Modern Art and for once she was a wise girl and declined to do anything else in addition to her present activities.

However, she did say that her membership on the Board of Trustees of Mount Holyoke ends in a year or so and if there is still any interest, she will be delighted to lend a hand.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

My personal apology is extended to you because of the cancellation of your flight at Shannon.

While mechanical delays of this kind are exceptional, they are none the less disturbing to all concerned. I am sorry no alternate aircraft was immediately available to expedite your journey to destination.

Thank you for using our flights and for your friendly cooperation throughout this trying experience. We will be glad to welcome you aboard at anytime under more pleasant circumstances.

Thanks for the note. I am confident the Company will survive my departure. There was no hidden ball involved, I just don't believe people should sit on the Board when their own contract is under consideration.

Sorry you missed the Suez piece. The next effort is on November 18th, 5:00 to 6:00 pm which will be a try at explaining what the new navy is all about.

Dear Ed:

The news of your resignation made the front pages of the Los Angeles papers. This may not come to you as any particularly charming piece of news since it is well known that the front pages of Los Angeles papers are generally reserved for Nixon (Dick to some of us). Eisenhower can usually count on page two while Stevenson is lucky to make the funnies.

The advantage of your making the front page is that in this way I got to learn of the news while walking past a newsstand. I know you must have your reasons but do you realize the role that befalls Stromeyer in the new balance of power? And I still have some stock.

I missed the Suez program I am sorry to say --- what do we look forward to next? My very best to Fred. Is he voting the straight Prohibitionist ticket along with the rest of us this year?

Many thanks for your kind letter of October 3rd and for sending me contact sheets.

I doubly appreciate the warmth with which you speak of my mother. I think that normally such an interview would have been something of an ordeal for her, but I am sure that your great friendliness and sympathy made this particular occasion a rather pleasant one.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

I was on the point of putting these contact sheets away in my files when it occurred to me that you might like to have them.

I'm TIME INC stringer in this area and thus recently had the pleasure of taking with, and learning to know, your dear mother. She was requested to re-live your childhood and schoolboyhood for background on the TIME cover, and did so with such charm and poise, such thoroughness and tenderness, that I count this interview the most pleasant I've known in some 25 years of asking questions.

She was dubious over posing for pictures - to her a trying procedure with flashbulbs and arduous posing - but was unaware of the available-light technique with fast film. Thus I exposed two rolls of film as she talked without losing a single picture to self-consciousness. Later, I gained her permission to make photographs. Without it, I would not have sent this film in to TIME.

If she ever has occasion to mention to you the part she played in preparation of the article, will you tell her that she is greatly admired?

With all best wishes,

Dolly Connelly

Dear Bob:

Many many thanks for your thoughtful letter. I will do as you suggest; however, I am not sure the move will be in the interest of my personal vanity. The last time I shot targets with Casey was just before I went off to the small war in Israel. He was shooting his 22 Kit gun and I was trying to handle the Colt 45 that I have had for twenty five years, and which I shot expert in the Army, he beat me and it hurt! However, I will try him with his left hand and we will see what happens. As a matter of fact, he is pretty well ambidextrous, and when I start him on a shotgun in the fall we will try the left shoulder too.

Thanks again for writing as you did. I am inclined to agree with Lord Chesterfield who said that almost the only thing a father can teach his son is to ride, shoot, fish, and try to tell the truth.

Dear Ed. :

Fairly recently I saw a picture of son Casey and you on your pistol range,with'casey at the bat'so to speak or behind the gun. Since I am a former "T"Man and had trouble with my gun I can not help writing you this letter. As you can see by my letter head I am teaching now.

I could not help noticing that Casey was using his right hand to hold the pistol,but he was holding it across his body in order to see his sights with his left eye. That is my old stance, as I use my left eye also.

This is a suggestion,but try putting the gun in his left hand and see if his shooting does not improve. That makes it possible for him to shoot in a relaxed position rather than in a strain as his picture depicted.

I learned that the hard way while in Treasury service. I had just had a hard time trying to classify with a 60,allowable, with my right hand. I had just exactly six shots left over after qualifying. I asked my instructor if I might change to the left hand and try those remaing cartridges. He assented. I took the 38 in my left hand and shot a straight 90 with it. He changed me to left hand shooting. A left forefinger can be trained as a trigger finger just as well as a right. I shoot a shoulder gun from my left shoulder.

Pardon the'butt insky',Ed. but I guess that is the teacher cropping out in me. You have a cute youngster. I should like to see him in person. I know you are crazy about him.

Pardon the informality,also,but I feel as if I knew you, as we have listened to you for years in your broadcast.

Yours very sincerely,

Dear Ed:

There I was, hacking my way through the jungles of Honduras, racked with fever, dripping with little rivulets of sweat -- dead beat but still dead game.

I looked up, and there in a little clearing was a mud hut picturesquely shaded with a thatched roof. An Indian woman sat stolidly in the doorway, a brood of half-naked youngsters playing in the dust at her feet. So she sat yesterday and four hundred years ago when Pizarro's cutthroats passed by. It was a timeless moment.

But, brother, YOU WERE THERE. I can SEE IT NOW!

Dear Geoffrey:

It was grand to see you again, and your colleagues even made the cameras less frightening than usual.

You raise a very difficult point regarding the matter of policy controlling news commentaries. I am enclosing the language that we hammered out several years ago on this question. You will recognize it as a statement of objectives rather than a strictly enforceable statement of policy. It has, I think, worked fairly well, although from time to time those of us who are supposed to follow it wander somewhat afield.

An alternative policy followed in this country is that of the American Broadcasting Company, who contend that they choose commentators representing the whole political spectrum from right to left and then give them the go ahead to say exactly what they want to say; a system which, in my opinion, produces advocacy rather than illumination, and results in the commentator, after a bit, talking only to the already persuaded.

I think it is high time you came over and had a close look at this jungle in which we operate. If I can be of any help in furthering such a project, do let me know.

My dear Ed,

It was a great pleasure to have you on the programme the other night and I do want to express to you my gratitude for coming and giving us the benefit both of your appearance and of your comments. We were greatly encouraged by your remarks about the quality of the bulletin, as we have had to pioneer our own way in this new commercial field, since there has been no pathfinding by commercial radio.

One point which interested me particularly when we were talking after your broadcast was the definition of what degree of comment is allowed in your own commentaries. Would it be possible to let me have, on a personal and confidential basis, the rules which you have drawn up governing impartiality in news bulletins and the limits of comment in commentaries? This is very much new ground in this country and it would be of the greatest assistance to me in establishing our own code of conduct if I could cast my eye over your rules.

Once again, very many thanks and very best wishes,

Yours,

Geoffrey

Dear Ed:

Since I showed you that film, I have expanded my idea into something that Bob Considine seems to feel rather important. (Please see attached column of this date). As a matter of fact, everything that has ever happened since the beginning of time is recorded in THE MAGIC ROOM.

Hope I can discuss it with you sometime soon just for the Hell of it.

Hope this finds you and your dear family well and happy. Extra congratulations on the fine job on the Israeli situation you did recently.

On the Line:

Adventure in Reading

By BOB CONSIDINE

AS I opened the front door of our apartment the other day, full of flour after long hours of breadwinning, the mournful bay of a crying child struck me with such force that patches of the flour were transformed into fog. Through the mist my wife's voice was heard.

"He's being punished for being a very bad boy," she announced, pointing to a closed door.

"Wudges do, nail him to a wall?" I asked, with Old World courtliness.

"No," she said. "I told him he had to read a chapter out of one of your books."

It was inhuman treatment, the child tearfully acknowledged, and pledged never to do it again. Never to read a book again, he probably meant.

Getting Kids to Read

The heavy-domed magazines have been filled with dour warnings lately to the effect that our kids won't read. It is estimated that 11,000,000 American school children never crack any book beyond their textbooks. But I know of at least one organization and an individual deeply involved in trying to Do Something.

The organization is the Library Club of America, sponsored by the Book Manufacturers' Institute. The individual is my friend Marc Cramer. The LCA turns reading into a contest, working through local schools and libraries. Read four books and you get an LCA membership button. Consume six more and you get an Honor Pin. Get through eight more and you're a Life Member who is entitled to sit with the local library advisory committee.

Life members also pledge that they'll read at least two books a month after reaching that plateau, but the promoters feel that this will be no hardship—the addiction having set in pretty severely by that time.

In New York City a test is under way at three lower East Side schools. Last October they were supplied with 50-volume libraries by the Book Manufacturers' Institute. Some 450 fifth-grade pupils in 14 such grades have been exposed to this learning and entertainment. The test "took" like a good vaccination, the people in charge say.

Plans 'The Magic Room'

The idea has spread overseas to army and air force bases which operate Dependents Schools. Early next month the most omnivorous readers at the three local lower East Side schools will be taken to Washington on a sightseeing trip sponsored by the LCA and Cong. G. Klein, who attended one of the schools.

As for Marc Cramer, he has devoted much of his life to work among the younger. He has a yet-to-be-produced TV show which I'm sure would be that medium's finest contribution to more and better reading by children at their most impressionable age. It is called "The Magic Room."

The viewer is invited to step into a library filled with books of adventure, humor, mystery, fiction, poetry and the classics. A voice describes a book, reads from it, stops at difficult words and looks them up in the dictionary. There are illustrations by the masters when available, and quick-sketch explanations by Abner Dean or McGowan Miller. And good and carefully identified music. "The Magic Room" would use a voice instead of a visible narrator so that the child will not identify another person with learning habits. In other words, the library or den in anyone's home can be "The Magic Room." This could be an ideal way for a network to reach children without means of a gun or lunacy.

To George Crandall

From Edward R. Murrow

Station

July 26, 1956

It has been called to my attention by two or three people that there is an anonymous "chain postcard" campaign underway in which people are urged to write to Harry Truman supporting Adlai Stevenson's candidacy and to send such communications in care of me to CBS, Chicago. These communications are unsigned. Nothing can be done about this, but I thought you ought to know about it. Obviously I know nothing about it, and that the whole thing is being done without my knowledge or consent.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow, Vice-Pres.
Columbia Broadcasting Company
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I have listened to you for many hours chatting to me on TV in my living room and it doesn't seem right to put into a letter what I have to say to you. Enclosed are two discs on which my voice is sort of carrying on the other end of what has been a one way conversation for too long a period.

I am sure your organization must have an Edison Voice-writer which can be used to afford you an opportunity to listen to these records should you be interested. Please listen to the B side of record #2 so that you do not waste a lot of time listening to the rest of the conversation unless the B side of record #2 whets the appetite of your interest.

This letter and the dictation of the records are a result of my listening to your wonderful program on the two billion dollar postal deficit. It was so refreshing to hear you bringing out the truth about one segment of the government. During the last several days there have been a lot of headlines about the threat of the Russian sattelite to world peace so it was very enlightening to hear ex-secretary of defense, Wilson, on a television interview the other night, give assurances that any straight thinking person could figure out for themselves, that no threat was a reality as a result of the launching of the Russian satellite.

As you will note in my dictation I state that you have an opportunity to perhaps go down in history as a man who was instrumental in changing the attitude of fear in the world today to an attitude of confidence in peace. All that is necessary for you and sincere publishers of magazines and newspapers to do is to start a propaganda program for a demand for the truth about some of the realities of the world today.

Hoping my "talking back at you" is of interest, I am,

Sincerely yours,

A. Forbes Crawford

Dear Mr. Murrow:

The Crusade for Freedom has rented Madison Square Garden for the night of February 24th, 1958 for the purpose of putting on a gigantic benefit. The present plans call for Oscar Hammerstein to act as Master of Ceremonies and for many of the top stars in the entertainment world to contribute their services. Network television coverage on all three major networks is also being arranged.

The proposed format for this project calls for a panel of the top newsmen in America to sit in panel discussion with guests who would ask them questions regarding the operation of Radio Free Europe, which questions would be answered by the members of the panel. We take great pleasure in asking you to participate as one of the panel members on this night. The proposed time of the show would be approximately 8.30 P.M. to 11 P.M. and according to our present thinking it would not be necessary for you to be there for the entire two and a half hours. The exact times would be given to you when the show is more definitely routined.

At this moment, however, we would appreciate word from you as to whether or not you would be available to participate in this event.

Most sincerely,

Murray Burnett es.

Dear Charlie:

Many thanks for your note of November 6th and for sending me a copy of your wire to Sig Mickelson. Frankly, I think this event is more suitable for television than it is for radio, and I don't think I can use it on my radio show. I am grateful to you for bringing it to my attention.

Kind regards.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Ed:

After dictating the attached wire to Sig, it occurred to me that you may be interested in some of this for your 7:45 PM radio show.

If you are or think you may be, please let me know and I can probably arrange a two-way question-and-answer session with you and the other two gentlemen - or perhaps even pre-tape the thing for you.

Please advise.

Kindest personal regards.

Sincerely,

Charlie

URGENT MONITOR

11-6-57

Have just learned of event here on Wednesday November 27th which will probably be of interest to CBS Radio and TV News.

For the first time in history, the Republican and Democratic keynote speakers will appear together on same platform at a dinner which will be attended by 500 of Charlotte's leading citizens. Since Langlie and Clement are quite colorful and since it is rumored that both have similar political objectives in mind, I am confident this meeting will be of national interest. If we can help in taping or filming any or all of this event, we will be delighted to do so. Please advise.

Thanks for the kind words about the Egypt-Israel show. It was, odds away, the toughest one we have ever tried, but the reaction has been magnificent.

Dear Ed,

I thought perhaps you would be interested in the attached wire I just sent Frank Stanton.

Incidentally, we are getting plaudits from all over this section, and as soon as the excitement settles down, I'll bundle up all the comments and send them directly to you.

I think Mrs. Murrow and I are all squared away on the sheets and pillowcases and towels and stuff.

She wrote me a real nice note - - but among other things, suggested that the sheets be double size but 128-inches long. I checked Elliott Springs on this and he says there just ain't no such sheet, that the longest made by anybody is 108. I wired your wife yesterday to re-check this item - - and this morning I received the following which gave me quite a chuckle. Please don't tell her I repeated this wire to you, but here is exactly what she said - -

My apologies for my mistake. 108 inches is perfect.

Signed - Janet Murrow

Dear Charlie:

Thanks for yours of the 17th. I think it was New York where the aircraft landed, but I'm not sure. It was a strenuous but heart-warming experience and I enjoyed every minute of it.

I will consult with Janet about sheets and towels and let you know. There will be some delay because we are both off to Israel and Egypt tomorrow.

I thought the newspaper boys were more than generous, and I am glad I didn't damage your stature in the community which is obviously very high. Let me know when next you are in town.

The Man, The Expert

FIRST AFTERNOON EDITION
CHARLOTTE NEWS

Charlotte Looks At Edward R. Murrow

Edward R. Murrow is a tall man with a long cigarette and a heart full of America.

He came back home yesterday, a sort of local-boy-makes-good return to a native North Carolina.

He came home as a CBS radio and television celebrity, broadcast from WBT, held a press conference and spoke to an overflow crowd of 800 at the Charlotte Executives Club meeting at Hotel Charlotte.

And when he left, Charlotteans knew Murrow the man (poker, vintage profanity, scotch without ice) and Murrow the expert — for in eight hours he bared himself before the inquisitors.

Murrow looked at the 10 years since the end of World War II with an optimistic eye. We have reason, he said, for "pride and gratification" in the record, for we stopped aggression in Korea, we saved Western Europe from Communism and we have maintained a stable economy.

However, our present position in the world is slightly different.

Geneva, he pointed out, found the powers of the world agreeing that a thermo-nuclear war would offer no profit, no survival for anyone. Therefore, we have a new tactic by the Soviet Union, that of trading with considerable skill.

An example was the arms deal with Egypt, and another important step was the goodwill tour of India. It is not inconceivable, he said, that in 20 years there will be three great powers in the world, the United States, the Soviet Union and Red China.

In Europe the picture is simply this, he said: "Nothing happens without Germany."

The drive will be reunification. There is more explosive potential in Germany, he said, than anywhere else in Europe. Russia says "reunification is with us" and traded prisoners of war for diplomatic recognition.

Russia, Murrow added, is "moving today with confidence and assurance they didn't have a year ago."

Murrow looked hard at this country and said, "We must rethink our position . . . Our example is more important than our dollars."

What we require, he said, is a "continuing faith in the processes of law, the refusal to be suspicious and to denounce our neighbor."

A reporter opening yesetrday's press conference with the CBS analyst asked if Murrow didn't find it taxing to be a news maker as well as a news reporter. He got a one word answer, "Yes."

And then Murrow proceeded to give some newsworthy remarks in answer to questions.

Secretary of State Dulles' statements that he had carried the nation to the "brink of war" has done the country "as much damage as any public utterance in many months," Murrow said.

"Even if that is true," he said, "I see no virtue in advertising the fact. There are already indications it has damaged our relations with our allies and Russia is already making great propaganda use of it. . .It would be very difficult to recover the ground lost by the remark."

As for Secretary Dulles himself, "He is a man who spent his life preparing for this job . .but he has demonstrated a certain fondness for, well, slogans."

On segregation, Murrow said he doubts that the rest of the country understands the South's dilemma, "because it does not have the South's experience."

Somebody asked about Pres. Eisenhower's political future. "If he can withstand the pressures of the next four weeks," Murrow answered, "he may be able to withstand the pressure of the next four years." But in subsequent questioning he indicated a suspicion that the President will not run again.

"And if he doesn't," he predicted, "We are going to have some fabulous political conventions."

Aid To Schools

Thomas L. Stokes reports on 2B that the prospect of federal aid to education in the various states has brightened considerably.

Good Samaritan Again Lands In Hot Water

Last Saturday morning I was parked in front of the Selwyn Hardware Store watching the world go by—I started to say blondes—when I heard somebody sobbing.

I looked to the right and spied a little boy about eight years old pushing a bicycle toward the hardware store. The front wheel was wobbling and he was letting out a wail with each wobble.

About that time Wallace Humphrey, who lives over on Park Road, walked out of a grocery store next to the hardware store, noticed the little boy crying and asked him what was the matter.

"I can't get anybody to fix my bike," sobbed the little boy. "There's a nut off the front wheel bolt."

"Don't cry, sonny," grinned Wallace. "I'll fix it in a second."

He propped his bag of groceries up against the hardware store, went in and finally came out with a handful of nuts.

After trying a half dozen he said, "Dab frabz it, none of 'em a fit!"

He stalked back into the hardware store, came out again with another handful of nuts and began trying once more.

This time he found a nut the right size and you'd have thought he'd just gotten a raise at the office.

"Eureka!" he whooped. "It fits!"

"BUT YOU CAN'T screw it on with your hand," observed the little boy. "You gotta go back in the store and borrow a pair of pliers."

"Gol blam it!" erupted Wallace. "How'd you expect to get your bike fixed if you didn't bring any pliers?"

He stalked into the hardware store again, came out with a pair of pliers and began tightening the nut. Apparently the nut wouldn't tighten.

"I SEE WHAT'S the matter," said the little boy. "The bolt is turning with the nut. You gotta get another pair of pliers and hold the nut on the other side while you're tightening the nut on this side."

"Splatz cram whab it!" stormed Wallace. "I can't stay here all day messing with this dab blasted nut!"

At that the little boy started wailing again and Wallace stalked back into the store for the third time, coming out again with an extra pair of pliers.

This time, between grunting and cussing, he got the nuts tight on both sides and had just started to return the pliers when the little boy let out the loudest wail yet.

"Aw, you forgot to put the braces for the basket under the nuts!" he cried. "Now you gotta unscrew the nuts and do it all over again!"

"Fram blurtz the con slabbed drabble!" screeched Wallace. "I'll be wham blammed if I'll do it!"

He snatched up his groceries and headed for his car.

"Wow! Wow! Wow!" shrieked the little boy, pointing a finger at him. "He broke my bicycle!"

"The rascal!" exclaimed a woman who'd just come out of the grocery store. "Him trying to ride a bicycle at his age! Somebody oughta call the police!"

I WAS HOPING somebody would so I could really get a bang-up column. But nobody did.

Where I missed the boat was in not hiding Wallace's bag of groceries while he was going nutty over the nut.

On second thought, though, he might have shot himself.

And, honestly, I don't want any of my columns to end up that bad.

Murrow Says 'Brink Of War' Statement Hurt U. S. Abroad

By KAYS GARY
Observer Staff Writer

Secretary Dulles' notorious 'brink of war' statement, in the opinion of CBS news ace Edward R. Murrow "has caused as much damage abroad as any public statement in recent months."

Murrow, who on Monday night addressed an Executives Club gathering of 800 persons, used the words at an afternoon press conference for 30 visiting newsmen at host station WBT-WBTV.

He views the statement as it was published in Life magazine as furnishing Russia with a propaganda weapon wiping out Eisenhower's Geneva Conference victory on selling the United States as "a peace-loving nation."

Dulles has since backed up the statement that America avoided war by walking along its edges.

"I do not have the feeling," said Murrow, "that the statement merits defense by the administration. . . . If it were true, I see no virtue in advertising the fact."

For Murrow, son of a Guilford County farmer who moved to Washington state when the boy was 6, it was a sort of homecoming.

Service stations of the company sponsoring one of his programs flew "Welcome Home" banners. In hotel lobbies, people waited to gawk at the Tar Heel who became the Hemingway-Hellinger-Churchill of the air.

Murrow's Executives Club speech swept the last 10 years of international history, playing on the strong points and weaknesses of the United States in world affairs.

He emphasized implied weaknesses with:

"Our example is more important than our dollars . . .

"What we do domestically in the realm of supporting human dignity is important . . .

"A balanced budget can be our enemy . . . A nation can afford anything required for its survival.

"When we abstain in the United Nations from voting on issues arising from colonialism of allies, we forget our Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence and the things of which our country was born . . .

"We have tied economic aid to military pacts while Russia has exploited this with goodwill tours . . .

"The USSR alone can talk reunification with Germany, promising markets for German industry. When Adenauer dies, it is not inconceivable that Germany will deal with Russia again . . ."

Murrow also said the Marshall Plan saved Europe from communism, that NATO built the first cohesive fighting group since the Crusades, that nations in unity blocked aggression in Korea and that this country has built a stable economy upon which the free world depends.

"The most profoundly important thing in the past 10 years is the success of capitalism itself refuting the Marxist doctrine that capitalist bosses never share the profits."

And finally, "If we hang on to the things that made this nation great, our allies will hang on to us . . . We can only do this effectively if the mirror which others hold behind us reflects a society and climate of opinion others would emulate."

Murrow once said: "I try to be a reporter instead of a com-

It's Been A Mite Dry, And We Really Need Rain

A mid-winter drouth is beginning to be felt in Mecklenburg County, with wells going dry, winter grain crops in trouble, and the danger of forest fires growing greater day by dry day.

That's what Farm Agent George Hobson says.

The unusually cold weather wasn't helping any, either.

In case you haven't noticed, rainfall has been pretty consistently on the downgrade since last July 27. As of that day, the weatherman said, Charlotte and Mecklenburg were running about an inch of rain above average.

Since then there has been a deficiency except in October. The count was down an inch in September, lost another .28 of an inch in November, and hit the dry jackpot in December and thus far in January.

Decembers usually produce about 3.79 inches of rainfall. Last month brought a measly .44 of an inch.

By now in the ordinary January, 1.85 inches have fallen. Thus far in this January there's been the magnificent total of .02 of an inch, and all of that fell on Jan. 11. Monday's trace didn't faze the raindrop counter.

And the drouth is beginning to make itself known.

Farm Agent Hobson says that winter kill is hitting small grain hard in the last few weeks. It works like this: freeze and thaw almost nightly pushes the planted grain up out of the ground, where the next night's freeze hits the seed, kills it.

A good soaking rain would help that situation, firming up the ground and helping push the grain under. Since such a downpour is taking its time getting here, he suggests that farmers use a cultipacker (that's a hobnailed heavy roller to you city slickers) to firm the ground.

Up until three or four weeks ago, says Hobson, the dry spell was lucky for cattle growers. They could let the bovines meander around the meadow without bogging down, could save on bought feed.

But now it's past pasturin' time, and the drought is hurting the planted grain.

Danger of forest fires is great and growing greater by each Sahara-like day, says Hobson.

Reports are coming in of a lot of wells drying up. This will get serious in a hurry, says the farm agent, and even with a couple of real cloud-busters will take several weeks to cure — because it takes that long for the sub-surface water level to build back its strength.

In Charlotte, the dry spell isn't noticeable. Water consumption is up some three per cent, says assistant water superintendent R.S. Phillips. But that's just keeping up with the growth in population.

Except for the souring breath of Sugaw Creek, which needs to be flushed by a good gully-washer, the Queen City is unhurt as yet by dry weather.

IMPOSES $5,000 FINE

Judge's 'Deal' Has 'Legger Sweating

A confessed liquor runner was sweating out a $5,000 fine in Mecklenburg County jail Monday night.

And somewhere in Charlotte, his employer in the illicit whisky trade was doing some perspiring of his own.

It all started Monday morning in Criminal Superior Court when Presiding Judge J. C. Rudisill made a shrewd deal with 30-year-old Matthew J. Barrino.

Barrino, who lives at 618 E. Second St., was picked up on the night of Nov. 29 by ABC enforcement officers H. W. Auten and Jack Hunter.

His arrest followed a hare and hounds chase from the Lincoln County line to Cornelius where Barrino's bootleg car struck a utility pole.

Inside the car, the officers foun 119 gallons of homemade hooch.

They booked Barrino for viola tion of liquor laws, no driver's l cense, reckless driving, speedin and failing to heed a siren.

He was convicted in County Re corder's Court Dec. 5 and drew 18 months on the roads. From the lower court, Barrino appealed to Superior Court where he ran into the canny jurist from Newton.

As the case was called, Barrino pleaded no defense.

Officer Auten took the stand and told Judge Rudisill the defendant had been seen in the company of a high powered bootlegger here both before and after his arrest.

Atttorney Ray Farris, who represented Barrino, added he had counseled his client to tell the court for whom his whisky haul was destined.

"In my opinion," Farris added, "he's afraid to tell because he doesn't think he'll get out of the courthouse alive."

Judge Rudisill, renowned for his dislike of thieves and liars, was perceptibly annoyed.

"Is this true," he asked Barrino.

The defendant indicated it was.

Rudisill wanted to know if Barrino thought the man he was shielding would pay his fine.

"I don't know," Barrino said. "But I think he will."

All right, the judge said, he would make a deal.

"If he doesn't pay your fine, will you tell me who he is?" Rudisill asked.

Barrino said he would.

Rudisill assessed one of the biggest cash fines handed out in the history of criminal court — $5,0000 and costs.

"If you tell me," the stern jurist asserted, "'I'll have that man before the grand jury so fast he won't be able to hurt you or anyone."

Monday night, Barrino sat in County Jail, sweating it out.

Somewhere in the city, a kingpin bootlegger had a big decision to make.

Integration Plan Clears Last Hurdle

The final hurdle along the path toward an interracial ministerial association here was cleared Monday.

Without a dissenting vote, members of the Interdenominational Ministers' Alliance of Charlotte and Mecklenburg adopted its interracial committee's report calling for a merger of the alliance with the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Ministers' Association.

The Alliance, an association of Negro ministers accepted the constitution and by-laws of the merged association as approved Jan. 9 by the all-white ministers' association.

The two groups come together for their first meeting as the Meckburg Christian Ministers Association on Feb 14.

Exact time and place for the meeting has not been set. Details will be worked out in a meeting of the two steering committees.

Dr. Lawrence I. Stell, chairman of the committee representing the white ministers, Monday night said the planning bodies will get together "either this week or the next."

In addition to setting time and place of meetings, the steering committees also will prepare a slate of officers to be nominated and make program suggestions.

Action by the alliance followed a concrete vote in favor of a merger by the Ministers' Association a week ago. The white ministers, who have led in the integration move, favored the merger by 47 to 17.

Similar interracial mergers already been effected by ministerial groups in Greensboro, Wilmington and Asheville.

County Road Jobs Slated

Contracts may be let in March for improvement of Highway 16 and Old Sardis road, Division Highway Commissioner James A. Hardison announced Monday.

Contacted by telephone at his home in Wadesboro, Hardison said both projects have been tentatively scheduled for letting in that month.

He said $220,000 has been set aside for the Old Sardis widening and $692,000 has been allocated for relocation of Highway 16.

The allocations are expected to cover construction costs and the city will not have to make contributions.

But the city will be expected to provide some right-of-way in the Old Sardis project.

At one point, Old Sardis will be relocated to eliminate four sharp curves.

The Highway 16 job will extend from the western edge of the city limits to the Catawba River.

Husband Is Charged

Samuel Bailey of 415 N. Myers St. was arrested Monday by City police who charged him with assault on his wife, Annie. The latter was treated at Good Samaritan Hospital for cuts in the right leg, chest, and on the forehead.

Flamingo Club Robbed

The Flamingo Club, 2621 S. Tryon St., was hit Sunday night for $25 out of the piccolo and a bottle of Scotch out of a member's locker.

A New Low, Even Fo

"As safe as a church," will not apply to First Baptist. Sunday night thieves took $800 in collections from the church strong box after breaking into the office of the financial secretary.

It was uncertain how the burglars got into the building. They may have entered while the outer doors were unlocked early in the night for services and hidden until everyone had left.

Once the building was deserted the thieves went to work methodically. They broke the glass in the door of the financial secretary's office and forced an entrance.

Then they made their way to the educational secretary's office where the keys are kept.

With the keys they returned to the finance department, and tried one after another on the combination record file and strong box.

When this was unlocked, the burglars helped themselves to the church funds. Many envelopes had been piled in a collection plate and placed in the safe.

These were collections from the Sunday night services, collections from one or two chapels which had been brought in, study course collections, and other revenue.

Mrs. J. E. Price, financial secretary, Monday night still was running down the exact amount that is missing. She said that preliminary findings place the loss at between $750 and $800.

mentator because a commentator is a kind of oracle and I am never so sure I am right . . ."

But, cooperating with the press conference questions spraying the field of current news, he was forced into the commentating field.

On the farm problem: "The President has moved in the right direction in proposal of a dollar limit on subsidies . . . There is a curious dichotomy here since (Benson) does not seem to agree. The 160-220 acre farm may be uneconomical and inefficient but there is here a dignity and independence and the business of raising kids whch may be more important than a little more efficiency.

"Subsidy (as it has been handled) is a handicap to the small farmer . . . I think support on the basis of the bushel or pound must come for the small farmer to survive. On the acreage cutback basis, production increases and I have known farmers who received as much as $160,000 in subsidies . . ."

On Eisenhower's future: "If he can stand the pressure of the next few weeks (being brought by newsmen and party leaders) he can stand the pressure of the next four years. On his intentions? I am completely in the dark.

On Averill Harriman: ". . . the most active inactive candidate I have ever seen. If Stevenson does something to beat (himself), Harriman will be a formidable candidate."

On Ohio Gov. Lausche: ". . . Another formidable candidate if a stalemate occurs at the top . . . Catholicism might be a campaign handicap but not to the extent it handicapped Al Smith."

On Westbrook Pegler attacks against Murrow: "I see no point of arguing in public with persons for whose opinions I have no respect."

On McCarthyism: While he may not now be in the limelight, "such tactics have not necessarily disappeared from the scene. . . . While Americans are an impatient people, he (McCarthy) overlooked what Justice Stone described as "a tradition of the American people to take a second, long, sober look . . . and for that reason we are not long terrified by any individual or political concept."

On changing his name from Egbert to Edward: "I did that when I was 13 or 14 years old and firing a donkey engine in timber territory . . . I thought Egbert was hardly the name for the job."

The chain-smoking Murrow (in five hours two packages of a North Carolina cigarette) in an informal interview confessed he still gets "a watermelon in my stomach before every broadcast."

Murrow became the first official world-wide ambassador of good-will for North Carolina when Sen. Luther Barnhardt of Concord presented a document in behalf of Gov. Hodges.

And when Mayor Phil Van Every presented a copy of The Mecklenburg Declaration, Murrow replied: "The eloquence of the ancients would be required to thank you adequately. If I leave my 10-year-old son nothing else . . . this is priceless."

Intense, a worrier, fearful of the tumbling of time, Murrow says he has "often had the feeling that I was washed up. I had it last in Korea."

But he was bright and animated when John Parris of Sylva, a World War II AP correspondent and crony in London, came for a visit and a spot on his network show which originated here at 6:45 p.m.

There was another lift when Mrs. Robert R. Dobson called. It was her son, Maj. Robert Dobson, who flew Murrow on his tour of Korea in 1952. He is now stationed in Japan.

Accompanying Murrow was another Tar Heel, Tom Aldridge, who once pumped gasoline in Durham and six years ago was division manager of the American Oil Co. in Charlotte. Now, he's vice president in charge of marketing for the company which sponsors Murrow.

Hospital Women Meet Tomorrow

The Presbyterian Hospital Auxiliary will meet in the hospital auditorium Wednesday at 10:30 p. m.

The Rev. James E. Fogartie, pastor of Myers Park Presbyterian Church, will lead the devotional.

A report on the institute for hospital volunteer workers will be given by Mrs. C. C. Duncan and Mrs. Thomas Mulcahy. They attended the national meeting in Chicago January 4-6.

NCCJ Will Meet

The board of directors of the Mecklenburg chapter of the National Conference of Christians and Jews will meet at 12:30 p.m. Wednesday at the YWCA.

IN MENTAL HOSPITAL

Bid Made To Free Shelby Patient

A battery of lawyers filed a habeus corpus writ here Monday in an effort to free a prominent Shelby optometrist whom they said was "hijacked" into a private mental hospital.

A three-hour hearing before Judge J. C. Rudisill produced hot debate among opposing lawyers and a hint that $19,000 in government bonds is missing in the case.

At the end, Judge Rudisill ordered the hearing continued until next Monday at 2 p.m. and directed the hospital at Asheville to halt electric shock treatments on the patient, Dr. Robert L. Wilson.

Attorneys explained Wilson entered Appalachian Hall, a mental institution at Asheville last Dec. 6. He was formally committed Dec. 15 by the Buncombe County Clerk of Court on a petition signed by his wife and three physicians.

Judge Rudisill recessed Criminal Court at 3 p.m. to hear the plea for Dr. Wilson's release.

His lawyers, led by C. C. Horn of Shelby, Henry L. Strickland of Charlotte and Basil Whitener of Gastonia, contend in the writ that Dr. Wilson is mentally competent and is being held illegally.

Whitener drew a heated objection from A. A. Powell of Shelby, attorney for the hospital, and Mrs. Wilson, when he told the court:

"This unfortunate man has been hijacked into the institution."

Wilson's lawyers placed a string of 15 witnesses on the stand to testify that Wilson was, in their opinion, normal shortly before he entered the hospital.

Among these who testified were Shelby Police Chief Knox Hardin, Postmaster Roger Lockridge, Cleveland County Sheriff Haywood Allen, former Sheriff I. M. Allen, Union Trust Company President Jessie Bridges, and Dr. D. M. Morrison, a Shelby optometrist.

Earlier, Whitener told the court Dr. Morrison had said "he would be happy to bring him (Dr. Wilson) to his home, keep him there and put up a bond to satisfy the court Dr. Wilson would be all right."

Another witness, Shelby businessman Paul Webb testified under cross examination by Powell that he often kept valuables in his safe for Wilson.

Powell queried: "Have you looked in your safe to see if you could find $19,000 in war bonds of Dr. Wilson's that seem to be missing?"

Webb replied that Mrs. Wilson had searched his safe for the bonds and was unable to find them.

"Did you know the Perceptual Science Foundation had been getting money from him (Dr. Wilson)?" Powell continued.

Webb said he had no information on that matter.

Powell put the same question to several witnesses, and asked if Dr. Wilson had ever discussed Perceptual Science with them. All said he had not.

(Perceptual Science is a school which believes certain eye ailments are caused by emotional distrubances).

As the hearing ended, Attorney Strickland testified he had talked with Wilson after his confinement at the Asheville hospital. He said that, in his opinion, Wilson is sane.

On cross examination, Powell suddenly tossed out the question:

"The fact is that you've conspired with Virginia Wilson (the doctor's sister-in-law) and these other people from Boston (The science foundation) to get Dr. Wilson's money, haven't you?"

Strickland flushed with anger and replied, "Are you accusing me?"

Powell said, "I'm just asking you."

"I say definitely no," Strickland asserted.

Judge Rudisill indicated he would question Dr. Wilson, himself, when the hearing reconvenes Monday.

J. G. Foushee Resigns Post With County

John G. Foushee, sanitation official, resigned from the County Health Department Monday.

City-County Health Officer M.B. Bethel announced the resignation, effective Feb. 1.

Foushee has served in the local health departments for eight years. He has been director of sanitation for the county agency for about five years.

He resigned to accept a post with the private firm of Charles T. Main, Inc., consulting engineers. His office will be at 317 S. Tryon St.

Dr. Bethel said he would immediately begin the quest for a successor.

Jonas Gives 'War Brink' Interpretation

Secretary of State Dulles' "brink of war" statements reported in a national magazine were, in the opinion of Congressman Charles Raper Jonas, "misinterpreted."

Speaking to the Men's Brotherhood at First Baptist Church Monday night, Jonas said that he did not doubt that in these "touch and go" times that the U.S. had been near war on several occasions.

"I wouldn't be surprised if the three incidents that Dulles referred to couldn't be added to," he said, adding that the key to the interpretation of the statement was "just how close to the brink" the country approached.

"But Dulles did not mean that he had brought this country to the brink but that the country had been near the brink and that war was averted by a policy of firmness," said the Congressman.

Jonas decided against making a prepared speech to the Brotherhood. Instead, he conducted a brief question and answer period.

In answer to another question he said, "We may become involved in serious trouble in the Middle East. Whether we can avoid armed conflict there will depend upon the strength of the actions of our representatives in the United Nations."

Asked if it's possible for Christianity to "fully permeate" politics, Jonas said it could be done provided Christians use the "full power" at their disposal.

He called upon people "who are professing Christians" to use as much initiative and resourcefulness as other groups do in promoting their desires.

He also suggested that Christians turn their attention to the curbing of juvenile delinquency which he described as "the most serious domestic issue" today.

Credit Firm Names Heads

Consolidated Credit Corporation, a three-state credit concern re-elected A. T. Swisher of Charlotte president of the annual meeting Monday.

C. W. Shoaf of Charlotte was advanced from assistant secretary-treasurer to secretary-treasurer.

Trustees elected for the year 1956 are J. Chadbourn Bates, Charlotte; James G. Cannon, Charlotte; W. Gibson Harris, Richmond, Va.; Joseph W. Lineberger, Belmont; Philip H. Strubing, Philadelphia, Pa.; and Swisher.

The company, which has 37 offices in the two Carolinas and Georgia, did over $5 million in business in 1955, officers reported.

Dear Tom:

Again I'm caught flat-footed! Why in the world I waited this long to thank you for all you and Ed Murrow did for Charlotte and for me personally, I'll never know!

I'm terribly embarrassed that you beat me to the draw!

You're the guy we are all grateful to, Tom - - and it would really do your heart good if you could be on the receiving end of all the plaudits which keep pouring in regarding Ed's visit. Our Promotion and Publicity Department is accumulating all the pictures and newspaper clippings, and as soon as I have the package ready, I'll send it up to you.

I hope some day, somewhere along the line I'll have a chance to show my appreciation in a material sort of way; but in the meantime, just want you to know how very grateful I am.

Kindest personal regards.

Sincerely,

Dear Dort:

Please forgive the delay in answering your letter. It arrived after I had left New York to go to the Conventions and then to take a vacation.

Concerning the project you mention, the most useful suggestion I can make is that you write to Fred W. Friendly about it including what documentation you can on the subject. He will then have a member of his reportorial staff go into the matter rather thoroughly and see what the possibilities are for doing such a program on SEE IT NOW.

I think it is only fair to warn you that there is very little likelihood of such a program being presented in the next few months. We are doing only ten SEE IT NOW shows during the current season (each one on the first Sunday of each month) and SEE IT NOW crews have been busy for several months shooting sequences for the series, which, as you may know, in its present format is planned very far ahead of time.

However, if there is no room for it this season, it might well be that the Medical Research story would have its turn next year.

I hope you had a very pleasant vacation and that I shall see you again soon sometime when I am in Wilton.

Best regards to you and Bob.

Dear Kay –

Bob and I attended a meeting on Sunday of people interested in the New England Institute for Medical Research, Ridgefield, Conn. Without going into detail about the work of this institute, it is primarily concerned with basic research. One of the points discussed to assist was the possibility of having the work of this institute shown on Ed Murrow's program See It Now.

I'm writing to you to find out if you could advise us on the best procedure in order to accomplish this, i. e. getting E. M. interested. Depending upon your advice, others more qualified than I could describe the work. And that is the reason I'm not elaborating. We are very interested and thought of you first of all as the person who could guide us best.

We are off to Point O' Woods for 5 weeks, but Bob will collect our mail.

Best to you from both of us –

Custer, Ben

April 15, 1957

Dear Ben:

Belated thanks for yours of March 21st. I am just back from shooting some film in Puerto Rico which we will do the first Sunday in May, and for which I have considerable hope.

I wish we had some people about now that could write like Gibbon, and it is a melancholy thought that no one paid much attention to him at the time he was writing.

As ever yours,

Dear Ed,

For several nights I've been worrying over the sounds you were making (as well as over the "sense" you were making) and last night I learned that you were away with your bad throat. I do hope that you will take it easy and not go rushing back to work before you are recovered. Tell Janet that I appeal to her to take good care of you - you belong to all of us. Belonging to no man you are the property of Everyman: our critic and our conscience.

Your broadcasts analyzing our dulles-made difficulties in the Middle-East have shown wisdom and prescience. Without your constant criticism of our faults and our stupidities many of us would dispair of the Republic.

Recently I've been rereading Mr. Gibbon's DECLINE & FALL and his philosophic observations of men and nations, their morals and their actions, have helped me to be a little bit more forgiving toward some of our own people. (Though I'd rather suffer more knaves and fewer fools in high place - if I had my druthers!).

Here are a couple of Gibbon's quotes which entertained me:

"The pulpit, that safe and sacred organ of sedition, resounded with the names of Pharaoh and Holofernes; the public discontent was inflamed by the hope or promise of a glorious deliverance; and the seditious saints were tempted to promote the accomplishment of their own predictions."... "But the cruel and absurd enterprise of subduing the minds of a whole people was undertaken by the Vandals alone"....

"The Gothic arms were less fatal to the schools of Athens than the establishment of a new religion, whose ministers superseded the exercise of reason, resolved every question by an article of faith, and condemned the infidel or sceptic to eternal flame. In many a volume of laborious controversy they exposed the weakness of the understanding and the corruption of the heart, insulted human nature in the sages of antiquity, and proscribed the spirit of philosophical inquiry, so repugnant to the doctrine, or at least to the temper, of a humble believer".....

"Justinian resolved to deliver or revenge his friend, Gelimer [the Arian] to maintain his usurpation; and the war was preceded, according to the practice of civilised nations, by the most solemn protestations that each party was sincerely desirous of peace.

The report of an African war was grateful only to the vain and idle populace of Constantinople, whose poverty exempted them from tribute, and whose cowardice was seldom exposed to military service. But the wiser citizens, who judged of the future by the past, revolved in their memory the immense loss, both of men and money, which the empire had sustained in the expedition of Basiliscus. The troops, which after five laborious campaigns, had been recalled from the Persian frontier, dreaded the sea, the climate, and the arms of an unknown enemy.".....

With my affectionate esteem and good wishes to you all,

Faithfully,

Ben Carter

Dear Ben:

Many thanks for your letter of February 15th.

You need feel no trepidation that we explore the situation as it exists in the Salk Vaccine program.

As you know, Jonas Salk is an old friend of ours and we were, in fact, working closely with him just about a year ago.

We would love to do a program such as you suggest, but will not be able to tackle it this season since we are already fully committed.

15 February 1956

Dear Ed,

You undoubtedly have thousands of people writing you letters saying "Why don't you do a program on the whichness of what?" or some allied subject. So it is with considerable trepidation that I suggest the present insufferable mess in the Salk Vaccine Program would be a fit subject for you and your associates to explore.

The situation in New Jersey may not be typical, but it is indicative of the complete lack of direction that has been given the distribution of the vaccine and it has led many of us to believe that it is the result of conspiracy on the part of the AMA to gouge the public.

My ~~The~~ Navy office and I worked for weeks in order to get a little of the free Salk vaccine with which to innoculate the Navy children of NROTC staff members here at Princeton. Before I could get over the low and high hurdles of local Bureaucracy, however, some of the officers and CPO's had lost heart and taken their children to their local doctors where innoculations were made at $5 per shot per child. (While pursuing every avenue to get the free vaccine I was frequently given the standard "treatment" prescribed by the AMA: "You and your people are a bunch of medical indigents and that is the only way you are entitled to free vaccine.").

Now the second series of shots for the twenty eight children of the Navy staff is due and I am told by the Borough administrators and those in Trenton that there is no vaccine and they don't know when there will be any. One administrator, civilian not medical, stated that he believed there was plenty of vaccine being received and that somebody, perhaps the doctors, were creating an artificial shortage. Thus when hot weather comes the medicos can frighten everybody into paying for the shots, thereby completely ending this "threat of socialized medicine", which the doctors appear to believe was inherent in the original promise of free vaccine for school children.

The public is, I know, slow to anger and generally helpless unless some fearless guy like you is ready to lead us. But it does seem to me if the AMA were trying to establish a system of public medicine in the United States, their present tactics in the Salk Vaccine Program would be most likely to bring it about.

We are all well and flourishing and hope that it has been a good winter for Janet, Casey and you. Our older boy, a sophomore at Harvard, says he wants to spend next year studying in France and Germany. Betts and I have about decided it is an excellent plan; he is only 18 and is presently taking the accelerated course in History and Literature of France, England and Russia. A year abroad should therefore give him the opportunity to develop real fluency in French and German.

I am allowed to "graduate" from the Navy this summer, but the Bureau of Naval Personnel wants me to stay on for another year at Princeton. Although it is a tempting offer to live in this pleasant community, there is no prospect here for me of college teaching or administration. (I have had a flattering proposal from a company in the Middle West; we are acclimated to being west of the Hudson River and are loathe to be separated from Manhattan by the Allegheny Mountains!).

Your programs continue to be a source of strength and illumination for all of us for which, if for no other reason, you have our deep and abiding gratitude.

Dear Ed:

Sarah and I appreciate very much your proposing us for membership in Quaker Hill, and we are both looking forward to being with you and Janet this coming Saturday for lunch and golf. I am not sure you know what you are getting into as far as the Danzigs and golf are concerned! But, we do love good company and fresh air. Nobody ever won a Calcutta betting on us!

The attached application form asks for full suplementary data. I don't know to what depth this extends, but I can give you a few brief highlights that might fulfill the request. We are a family of four - Sarah, her daughter and my step-daughter Diana Cooke, 13 1/2, and the little guy Jerome Palfrey Danzig, 3 1/2, who won't be involved with the Club for some time. Our summer place is on Lost Lake at Brewster, New York, not too far from your area.

Professionally, I am Director of Program Planning and Development for NBC Owned Stations and NBC Spot Sales Division - a title that takes me one day a week to remember. Prior to NBC, I was with CBS Television Network as producer, color supervisor and Associate Director of Network Programs. Prior to that, radio and newspaper work. College - Dartmouth - if anyone wants to go back that far.

Sarah is a transplanted Bostonian. Her tennis record, including two National Singles titles, you are familiar with, I am sure. Recently she has been writing for Sports Illustrated, made occasional appearances on NBC's HOME show, and has done work for the Junior League and the Community Service Society.

Again our thanks, and looking forward to seeing you,

Dear Ed:

As you may know, the Optimist Clubs affiliated with Optimist International have as their slogan, "Friend of the Boy," and as their main preoccupation the sponsorship and direction of constructive youth activities. It so happens that I did considerable work with the Optimist Club during my years with Glenn L. Martin in Baltimore so I am personally familiar with the effective job they do in providing wholesome activities, both athletic and non-athletic, for boys.

Every year the Optimist Clubs focus special attention on this youth work activity through an Optimist Week for which arrangements and programs are developed locally by each Club. Each year Optimist International makes available to the Clubs a recording including a number of messages which are authorized for use on a public service basis for their local radio stations, or occasionally, by television stations.

These messages are usually from well-known Americans who have the capacity to interest and provide leadership stimulation for youngsters.

Because of my previous association with the activity, Optimist International has asked me to make contact with you to see if you would be willing to record a message along the general lines of the rough draft enclosed. If you are willing to do this, arrangements will be made through the Custom Record Division of RCA to set up the required recording session to get your message on tape from which it can be transferred to records.

Will you please let me know whether you could do this work as a "friend of the boy?"

I hope this letter finds you well. All best regards.

To be broadcast during Optimist Week - November 11-17, 1956.

ED MURROW: This is Edward R. Murrow from New York. Juvenile crimes are in the news. The exploits of young vandals and hoodlums make the headlines and are announced on radio and television. But the Optimists remind you that these attention-getters are only a small fraction of the teen-age population. Most kids are doing a wonderful job of growing up to be a credit to their parents and country. Last year the Optimists helped more than a million boys in summer camps, Boy Scout troops, athletic activities, hobby and handicraft groups and Junior Optimist Clubs. All these projects are founded on a belief in boys. Now during Optimist Week, we recall the theme of Optimism: "Every Boy Needs A Man's Helping Hand." Remember that it's usually boys who can't win our attention any other way who try smashing windows and stealing cars. Dear Mr. ~~Murrow~~, Ed,

I have ventured to give a Monsieur A. Papier of the S.A. Free World Publishing Company, Noorderlaan 18, Antwerp, Belgium, who is shortly to be in the United States for an extended tour, a letter of introduction to you. I enclose herein a memorandum briefly explaining the relationship between the S.A. Free World Publishing Company and the Congress of European American Associations, giving some additional details about the project which brings Monsieur Papier to the United States, the production of the first issue of a new publication to be entitled "The Free World Review".

Monsieur Papier has been the moving spirit in the past few years in a publishing enterprise in the Netherlands which produced a series of handsome volumes about N.A.T.O. and its various member countries. I have asked Monsieur Papier to let you have direct a copy of one of these previous publications with which he was connected, and also a memorandum giving additional details about "The Free World Review". I very much hope that the project will be one which will commend itself to you and that if so perhaps you may feel able to find time to meet Monsieur Papier when he is in your City, and to give him some advice.

May I add, both as Chairman of the Board of the Congress of European American Associations and as Director-General of its U.K. Member Association, the English-Speaking Union of the Commonwealth, a word of most grateful thanks to you for your invaluable work in the cause of transatlantic friendship. Your very many friends over here are keenly looking forward to your next visit.

2. The C.E.A.A. is now under the honorary Presidency of His Royal Highness Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands. Its other principal officers are Chairman of the Board, Mr. Frank Darvall, C.B.E., Director-General of the English-Speaking Union of the Commonwealth, London, England; Vice-Chairman of the Board, H.I.H. Princess Kira of Prussia, President of the German-American Club, Bremen, Germany; Hon. Treasurer, Mr. John Greaves, of Messrs. Cooper Brothers, Brussels, Belgium; Secretary-General, Dr. Jan van Heurck, Antwerp lawyer of Tabakvest 1, Antwerp, Belgium.

3. The C.E.A.A. includes Member Associations from Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey and the United Kingdom, a number of which have links with opposite number bodies in North America.

4. Best known of the activities of the C.E.A.A. are its Annual Conventions. These have been held in London (1951), Oslo (1952), Athens (1953), Luxembourg (1954), Rome (1955) and Vienna (1956), and have been addressed by exceedingly eminent American and European personalities. The 1957 Convention of the C.E.A.A. will be held in Cannes from the 7th to 10th June.

5. The Member Associations of the C.E.A.A. are wellknown to the American Embassies, Legations and Information Agencies in the countries concerned. The C.E.A.A. itself is also wellknown to the State Department and the U.S. Information Agency, who have for the past three years assigned a special Liaison Officer to the C.E.A.A., who attends all Board and Assembly meetings and the Annual Conventions. The first holder of this post was Mr. Leigh Brady, then Counsellor for Public Affairs at the American Embassy to the French Republic. The present holder of this post is Mr. John Hamilton, Counsellor, United States Mission to N.A.T.O. and European Regional Organisations

6. The contract between the C.E.A.A. and the S.A. Free World Publishing Company, in respect of "The Free World Review" calls for the S.A. Free World Publishing Company to take complete financial and organisational responsibility for the production of each issue of "The Free World Review." The content of each issue will however be under the control of an Editorial Board to consist of four members, two nominated by the C.E.A.A., of whom one will be the Secretary-General, and two nominated by the S.A. Free World Publishing Company, and decisions of the Editorial Board can be made only by a majority vote.

In respect of its participation in this enterprise, the C.E.A.A. will receive from the S.A. Free World Publishing Company

(a) A down payment of Belgian Francs 100,000, which has already been received by the Treasurer of the C.E.A.A.

(b) If the joint enterprise is not abandoned on the 1st June, 1957, when the arrangements between the C.E.A.A. and the S.A. Free World Publishing Company falls to be confirmed or abandoned, the C.E.A.A. is further guaranteed a mimimum sum of B.Fcs. 1,000,000, to include the B.Fcs. 100,000 already paid, the balance then due of B.Fcs. 900,000 minimum, to be paid by the S.A. Free World Publishing Company to the Treasurer of the C.E.A.A., as to B.Fcs. 450,000 in three equal instalments in October, November and December 1957 and as to the remaining B.Fcs. 450,000 of the guarantee, at the time of the publication of the first issue of "The Free World Review."

(c) Should the gross advertisement revenue and the other income produced by the first issue of "The Free World Review" exceed the sum of B.Fcs. 10,000,000, then 10% of the excess shall also be paid by the S.A. Free World Publishing Company to the C.E.A.A.

7. In the event of the first issue of "The Free World Review" being financially and otherwise a success, and it being desired by the C.E.A.A. and the S.A. Free World Publishing Company, to produce further issues on an annual or other basis, then the C.E.A.A. will be entitled in respect of each subsequent issue either to the same financial terms as apply to the first issue, or alternatively to 15% of the gross advertisement revenue and other income produced by the publication, but without any minimum or bank guarantee.

8. The interest of the C.E.A.A. in "The Free World Review" is, however, not wholly or even decisively because of the profit which this enterprise offers to the C.E.A.A., and which will be used for the general activities of this European-American movement.

Judging by the quality of the publications produced in connection with N.A.T.O. and its member countries by Monsieur A. Papier's former company, and from the plans for "The Free World Review" already agreed tentatively between the C.E.A.A. and the S.A. Free World Publishing Company, "The Free World Review" should be in its own right and quite apart from the profit which it may yield to the C.E.A.A. and to the S.A. Free World Publishing Company, a worthwhile enterprise. A really high quality publication periodically reviewing the affairs of the whole free world with special reference to those free countries which are situated in North American and in Europe should do much to contribute to the mutual understanding between the free countries which is so imperative to the freedom, prosperity and peace of the whole world.

9. If the enterprise is to succeed in all respects, it will be essential that Monsieur A. Papier should obtain when in the United States and Canada during 1957

(a) Advice regarding Canadian and American personalities who should be invited to write articles for the first issue of "The Free World Review", and help in securing such editorial contributions.

(b) Advice and help in securing from Canadian and United States fir ms, orders for advertising space in "The Free World Review", since the practicability of the enterprise depends wholly upon all costs being covered by advertisement revenue.

10. The initial print order of 10,000 de luxe copies of the first issue of "The Free World Review" will be almost wholly used for the free distribution of copies to educational and other institutions, and "opinion-forming" individuals in the various free countries. The C.E.A.A. will assume responsibility for the distribution of 8,000 of the 10,000 copies of the first printing.

11. A brief biographical note about Monsieur A. Papier, together with the names and addresses of certain individuals and firms etc. in the United States, whose names and addresses Monsieur Papier has given as U.S. references, are attached.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue, Room 1701
New York City, N.Y.

My dear Mr. Murrow:

I would greatly appreciate the opportunity of being with you for a few minutes for the purpose of discussing something which is of importance and in which I believe you will find considerable interest. If this can be arranged, I would appreciate you having your secretary call mine to inform me when I might be able to come to your office for such a conference.

I am usually on the Bench from ten until four but I could arrange, if it met your convenience, to take a little time off in the morning or possibly leave the Courtroom a little earlier in the afternoon.

Trusting that this can be arranged, I am,

Sincerely yours,

Irwin D. Davidson

Dear Eric:

I am just back from a quick trip to London and find your letter of February 23rd which was forwarded by my London office. I wish I had known that you were in Calcutta when I came through there on my way from Burma in mid-December.

Delighted to know about your place near the Wildernesse. We must arrange to meet there. I have become a farmer; a Holstein herd and 280 acres about 75 miles north of New York City, a delightful place with a trout stream which unfortunately I seldom see.

Casey shapes like a normal little boy who fortunately likes to shoot and fish.

I shall convey your regards to Janet, who manages to keep busy with a multitude of things having to do with the world of education.

As ever yours,

Mr. Eric Davies

February 23rd.

Dear Ed,

Cast your mind back to 1942 - 43. The Wildernesse, Seal, and a surgeon about your age who was in charge of the hospital. Also left handed.

And odd Sundays in London before your broadcasts — Kay Francis in the studio with us, with a most frightful cold.

There was no Busey Jr. then; he must be ten now, because my eldest is nearly eleven, too. How is Janet?

A lot of things have happened since then, but you still haven't bought your paper in Washington State — or taken Bonant's place at Harvard, as I thought you would. I was nine years in Abadan, and left on the last plane. Now I'm out here, doing quite nicely, in a group of four English doctors, + still only doing surgery.

My wife was also at the Wilderness — in the Operating Theatre.

And last year, when we were home, I bought a small house — right next-door to the Wilderness, which is now a Blind School. They're built a fine new club house, nearly opposite our house.

Pamela is at home — the two boys at prep. school. She has just written to say she'd seen you on Television.

The house isn't all fixed up yet, but has oil-fired central heating, so it's warm, anyway. If you want to go down to see that golf course, and see what it is all like fifteen years after — ring Pam up at Sevenoaks 61507. She might even put you up.

But all this is for private, and not public consumption, remember.

My love to Janet.

Eric Davies.

Dear Dr + Mrs Murrow,

Owing to sickness in our family I am writing only to-day to thank you for the very generous present you left behind, Dr. Murrow, and those wonderful T-shirts that Mrs Murrow sent to Danny. As to the former, it went far beyond "spending a nice evening out" but as yet we have not quite decided how best to use it. We feel that it should be invested into one of those "special" things one always dreams of getting and somehow never gets to.

As to the shirts, they are really exceptionally nice (I always had a soft spot for "Lord and Taylor") and although now on the large side, Danny has insisted on putting at least the striped one into immediate use, agreeing to wait with the other till the spring, at least.

So, for both wonderful presents, my best thanks. I do hope that on the occasion of your next visit to Israel I shall be able to meet you and present to you the rest of the family — children, dog, turkeys, chickens, etc. Sincerely

Bill Davis

Dear Edward,

Your gift to us was truly a magnanimous one. I still have your sincere and kind offer to us ringing through my head and it is good to know that we have such a good friend in you. I hope you were satisfied with your visit here. I am sending by separate cover straight from Gaza some first day covers form Casey. I hope he collects stamps. But things are getting normal down that way now and the post office opens soon down there. I don't know how long we shall have jurisdiction over the strip so these covers may prove unique.

I hope you and Mrs Murrow are well,

All the best from us here,

Yours sincerely,

P.S. The watch is keeping very good time.

Dear Mr. Dean:

When I filled in the check list you sent me in order to help in evaluating THE WORLD BOOK ENCYCLOPEDIA's list of radio and television commentators, I did not undertake to revise or rewrite any article that might be written on the subject.

I am far too busy to indulge in extra-curricular work of this kind and I am therefore returning the material to you.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

As you may recall, we received your cooperation in evaluating THE WORLD BOOK ENCYCLOPEDIA's list of radio and television commentators several months ago. Your reactions were extremely helpful to us in selecting individuals who merited biographical treatment in THE WORLD BOOK ENCYCLOPEDIA.

Since THE WORLD BOOK ENCYCLOPEDIA was first published, we have kept abreast of developments in all fields of knowledge by adding new articles as they are needed and by revising or rewriting articles already in the encyclopedia. We want to be sure that our article on "Radio" is as comprehensive and as informative as it can be, both from the text and illustration standpoint. For this reason, we would like to invite you to critically review and revise our present article on "Radio."

For your information, we are enclosing tear sheets of the article as it now appears in THE WORLD BOOK. For your guidance in preparing the revised article, we have prepared specifications based on surveys we have undertaken as to the educational and reference needs of young people of various age levels.

We are enclosing an Agreement Card. This card indicates the deadline we would like you to meet. It also indicates the honorarium proposed for the work involved. If this meets with your approval, please sign the original and return it along with the filled-in Contributor Card in the small envelope enclosed. The duplicate is for your own records. It is important that the information on the Contributor Card be accurate and complete, so that your name will be correctly listed with the other contributors at the beginning of Volume A of THE WORLD BOOK. Should there be anything that is not completely clear to you, please do not hesitate to get in touch with us.

We believe you will find this a challenging assignment, and we feel strongly that you could make a fine contribution to the education of the millions of young people who depend on THE WORLD BOOK ENCYCLOPEDIA as a reference source. We hope that you will accept our invitation, and that we may hear favorably from you.

Very sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I enclose a Circular Letter that is being sent to all signers of the Declaration of Atlantic Unity and a copy of the covering letter that is being sent (with some individual variations) to the U.S. signers - of which you are one.

It seems to us that at the present time NATO is in the dangerous position of being on dead center and that if we cannot push it forward it will inevitably tend to slip backward.

Constructive thinking in Europe is now centered on Euratom, and the Common Market, while attention on this side of the water is focused on disarmament, Russia and the Near East. Meanwhile the Atlantic gap widens slowly, almost imperceptibly, but ominously.

Under these circumstances there is a great need to dramatize NATO and the Atlantic Community and I think you could help very greatly to do it. I have some ideas on this subject which I would like very much to discuss with you.

I will be available any time at your convenience until August 19 when I leave for three months in Europe.

May I hear from you about this?

Faithfully yours,

Walden Moore

4th draft Covering Letter to accompany Circular Letter
(for U.S. signers - to be sent on Declaration stationary & varied to suit individual recipients)

Dear ----------:

I enclose herewith a Circular Letter which is being sent to all 271 signers of the Declaration in eleven NATO countries.

It seems to the American Sponsors of the Declaration that unless our governments act now to carry out more fully the pledges which they made when they signed the North Atlantic Treaty in 1949 and adopted the Report of the Committee of Three in 1956, the threat to the lives and welfare of all of us, which continued disunity represents, will grow. That so little has been accomplished in building up NATO on the non-military side is to some extent the responsibility of all the governments concerned, but primarily of the major NATO powers.

These circumstances place an obligation for leadership on those of us who signed the Declaration of Atlantic Unity. We hope that you, as a leader of opinion in this country, will accept this obligation.

In particular, will you, - as an individual or member of a delegation - urge implementation of the recommendations of the Committee of Three and point up the urgency of strengthening both military and non-military aspects of NATO among the following groups:

1. the Administration
2. Congress
3. your political party

May we further ask you to report to us about anything you may be able to do in this direction. This will help the Sponsors in various countries to coordinate activities.

NATO was born of the will of the west for survival in freedom. Its vigor can be restored if leaders in NATO countries will take the initiative in awakening fellow citizens to the perils of postponing support for NATO's growth.

We will look forward to hearing from you. With appreciation for your understanding and cooperation, in the past, as now, I am,

Yours very sincerely,

Lithgow Osborne
For the American Sponsors of the Declaration of Atlantic Unity

Enc: Circular Letter

P.S. I am sending you under separate cover a copy of the Report of the Committee of Three.

Circular Letter

June, 1957

To the Signers of The Declaration of Atlantic Unity:

You will recall the enclosed Declaration which you and 243 other leaders of nine NATO nations signed in 1954. Since that time leaders from Germany and Iceland have added their signatures and we hope soon to include the four other NATO members -- Greece, Turkey, Portugal and Luxembourg.

Since 1954 the signers and supporters of the Declaration both inside and outside their governments, have done much to implement its principles. A summary of developments in which they have played a significant role is attached as an appendix to this letter.

The recommendations of the Committee of Three (Foreign Ministers Lange, Martino and Pearson) were approved by the North Atlantic Ministerial Council on December 13, 1956, which called it "a major forward step in the development of NATO in the non-military field."

We concur in this view provided the report is implemented by our governments. We endorse the recommendations of the Committee of Three and urge our co-signers to the Declaration of Atlantic Unity to join us in giving them their active support with their respective governments and legislatures.

At the same time we call your attention to the following extracts from the introductory chapter of the Committee of Three Report: "North Atlantic political and economic cooperation, however, let alone unity, will not be brought about in a day or by a declaration, but by creating over the years and through a whole series of national acts and policies, the habits and traditions and precedents for such co-operation and unity .... This will not be the case, however, unless the member governments -- especially the more powerful ones -- are willing to work, to a much greater extent than hitherto, with and through NATO for more than purposes of collective military defense .... NATO must be used by its members, far more than it has been used, for sincere and genuine consultation and co-operation on questions of common concern. For this purpose, resolution is more important than resolutions; will than words .... It has not been difficult to make these recommendations. It will be far more difficult for the member governments to carry them into effect. This will require, on their part, the firm conviction that the transformation of the Atlantic Community into a vital and vigorous political reality is as important as any purely national purpose. It will require, above all, the will to carry this conviction into the realm of practical governmental policy."

It seems to us that we, the signers of the Declaration, are well fitted to initiate this task with our governments and legislators in our respective countries.

The rifts in the Atlantic Community during the past two years are too familiar to you all to require description here. Disputes between some members have embittered relations between them and paralyzed their will to cooperation. Some of these disputes have been taken outside NATO for settlement. Certain influential sections of opinion in several countries have expressed the desire to side-step their share in the burden of common defense and to trust in the dangerous idea of neutralism. Some member governments have declined to give adequate consideration to what their allies regard as their vital interests of national security or have taken sudden initiatives, affecting the whole alliance, without prior consultation.

Yet we agree profoundly with the Committee of Three that "No state however powerful, can guarantee its security and its welfare by national action alone," and we call upon all member governments to make NATO the center where Western policy as a whole is hammered out and globally implemented.

A great task of statesmanship is to rebuild the alliance on firmer foundations. There is no substitute.

In these dangerous times we call upon our fellow signers of the Declaration to support vigorously the recommendations of the Committee of Three including:

a) "The discussion of problems collectively, in the early stages of policy formation, and before national positions become fixed."

b) "Collective decisions" by the North Atlantic Council "on matters of common interest affecting the Alliance."

c) The submission of disputes between NATO members "to good office procedures within the NATO framework before resorting to any other international agency."

d) Continuous consultation on economic questions to insure "the greatest possible freedom in trade and payments and in the movement of manpower and long term capital."

e) Improvement in the procedures of the North Atlantic Council and more responsible representation on the Permanent Council.

f) Increased powers and responsibilities to the NATO Secretary General.

g) Closer cooperation between NATO members in the cultural and information fields.

We also suggest your consideration of certain measures beyond the recommendations.

Included among these are:

1) Wholehearted support by governments for the NATO Parliamentary Conference to the end that it become an effective continuing body for NATO support by the elected representatives of the Atlantic peoples.

2) The proposal of some legislators from Canada, France and the United States for the calling of a conference of leading NATO citizens to explore all means of obtaining closer unity.

We agree with the Committee of Three that "The moves toward Atlantic cooperation and European unity should be parallel and complementary, not competitive or conflicting." At the same time we suggest that present dangers should make Atlantic Unity the highest priority with all our governments.

It is our profound conviction that along this path lies the welfare and safety of us all. We therefore ask that you, our co-signers of the Declaration, give these proposals your thoughtful consideration and, in so far as you agree with them, your active support.

Developments to which the Declaration Sponsors have contributed

NATO Parliamentary Conference

In July 1955 a Conference of 200 members of Parliament from all 15 NATO countries met in Paris and decided to form a permanent organization with a Standing Committee and a Secretariat and to meet annually. At its conclusion NATO Secretary General Lord Ismay, who had been familiar with its background, wrote the Declaration Sponsors as follows: "The July meeting of NATO Parliamentarians was an unqualified success and I feel great credit is due to you -- for the contribution you made towards it."

In 1956 the United States Congress passed legislation (Public Law 689) making the Congress a Permanent member of the NATO Parliamentary Conference. When the second conference met in November 1956 the United States delegation of 18 members included the Majority Leader in the Senate and the Chairmen of the Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees. Equally distinguished legislators attended from other countries including the leader of the Opposition in the British House of Commons. This Conference proved far more effective than the first one. With its theme "Towards an Atlantic Community" the delegates considered methods of improving political consultation and military, economic and cultural cooperation among the Atlantic allies. The Conference adopted resolutions on all these subjects and instructed its Standing Committee to report to the Third Conference, in September 1957, on "whether the Conference should seek advisory or consultative status."

North Atlantic Council

In December 1954 the Declaration was formally presented to the North Atlantic Ministerial Council by a distinguished international delegation.

In December 1955 the NATO Ministerial Council instructed the Permanent Council to study methods for increasing cooperative non-military action by NATO members. This resolution was introduced by two signers of the Declaration, Foreign Minister Gaetano Martino of Italy and Defense Minister Pierre Billotte of France.

Pursuant to this idea Secretary Dulles, on April 23, 1956, called for an exploration to "advance NATO from its initial phase into the totality of its meaning." On May 23 the NATO Ministerial Council appointed a Committee of Three Foreign Ministers "to advise the Council on ways and means to improve and extend NATO cooperation in non-military fields and to develop greater unity within the Atlantic Community."

The Sponsors of the Declaration then drew up a memoradum for the specific implementation of its five points. This memorandum was presented to the Committee of Three on September 18, 1956, by an international delegation representing the signers of the Declaration under the Chairmanship of General Billotte, the French Sponsor.

Of the twenty specific proposals in this memorandum, thirteen were recommended in whole or in part by the Committee of Three. A fourteenth is now being studied by the Standing Committee of the NATO Parliamentary Conference.

Declaration of Atlantic Unity

We 271 citizens of Canada, the United States, Great Britain, France, the Netherlands, Belgium, Norway, Denmark, Iceland and Germany, address this APPEAL FOR ATLANTIC UNITY to our fellow citizens and to our governments which are represented on the Council of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

President Eisenhower has warned that "unity among free nations is our only hope of survival" and has declared that "NATO symbolizes the unity of free men in an age of peril." This is our conviction also. We must never forget that we are all bound together by our common belief in freedom under law.

The fourteen members of NATO have mutually guaranteed each other against armed aggression and merged under one command parts of their land, sea and air forces to make their pledge effective. NATO has succeeded in vastly reducing the danger of direct military attack in Europe. This success has caused the enemies of freedom to divert their military aggression to other areas and to concentrate on diplomatic manoeuvres to disrupt the unity of the NATO nations. Their efforts have been aided by voices of isolationism in each of our countries and by mutual recrimination. Thus, our peril from disunity has increased.

This is no time for half-hearted measures. While welcoming the progress made towards European union, we believe that nothing less than an effectively integrated Atlantic Community, which would include German defense forces, will in the end adequately meet the challenge of the times. Defense in today's terms extends beyond military requirements and into the political, economic and cultural aspects of our lives.

Yet NATO is still basically a military alliance. It is as long ago as 25 April, 1953, that the NATO Council of Ministers stated in their communique: "Convinced that in unity lies their greatest strength, they are resolved to broaden cooperation in every field, economic, political and social, as well as military, and so make the Atlantic Community a lasting reality." But little has since been done.

We call upon our governments to proceed now to redeem that pledge by initiating the following measures for which there is already authority under the North Atlantic Treaty:

1. The development of NATO as a central agency to coordinate the political, trade and defense policies of the member nations.
2. The elaboration, pursuant to Article II of the North Atlantic Treaty, of a comprehensive mutual program for lowering tariffs, freeing currencies and eliminating trade restrictions so that there may be established an adequate economic basis for the Atlantic Community and associated nations. Common economic action will give us not only better defense at less cost, but also the benefits of an expanding and thriving economy, thus raising the standards of living for the Atlantic Community and the whole free world.
3. The establishment by each of our legislatures of a parliamentary committee or association for NATO to further understanding in each member country of its progress and potentialities.
4. The creation of an advisory Atlantic Assembly, representative of the legislatures of the member nations, which would meet periodically to discuss matters of common concern. Observers could be invited from associated states.
5. The establishment by NATO of an Economic Advisory Council comprising representatives of employers and employees to advise the Council and other NATO bodies on the effect of their policies on the standard of living in the NATO countries, especially upon the working population.

We endorse the words of the Rt. Hon. Louis St. Laurent, Prime Minister of Canada, spoken at Bonn on February 10, 1954:

> "Perhaps the time has now come to consider whether some of the steps toward closer integration which we must take if our concept of civilization is not to perish, should be taken within the larger framework of the North Atlantic Community . . . many of us believe the peoples living about the great basin of the Atlantic Ocean might well seek the solution of their problems of economic betterment, political stability and self-defense in this closer integration of their national resources and of their machinery of government."

We remind our governments that NATO, in the words of its Secretary-General, "is something new and exciting and revolutionary, the most challenging and constructive experiment in international relations ever attempted."

We ask our fellow citizens to urge our respective governments to make this experiment succeed. We are convinced that in our ability to do so lies the well-being of us all.

Dear Ed:

Arthur Menken came by and we had a very nice chat. I've set up a couple of dates for him in areas something might develop, if not now at least possibly in some future adventure.

After our talk, I mentioned to Sarah Churchill that you'd be looking forward to saying hello when she passes thru New York en route home. She will ring up hoping to find you in for a few moments.

I also explained to Sarah that you had a new project in mind drawn from "As Others See Us", but that I knew you'd be a most receptive audience to her thoughts for "Outside USA". She tells me she had abandoned the pilot film made with Randolph but would go ahead with her project once again if you found it of interest.

Many thanks for your kind thoughts via phone;- and blessings to you and yours. Casey must be so big by now he should be sent here soon for some early training; I offer both my dubious services and the companionship of my daughter Margaret aged five, also known to us as "Eloise".

Best wishes,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

The cities lying at the eastern edge of the Rocky Mountains enjoy a salubrious climate. Part of the price of this climatological blessing is a semi-arid landscape which places a very high premium on a normally commonplace commodity- water.

This is the reason why western cities and farmers must extend themselves to conserve moisture in every form. In addition to the vast reservoir systems which serve the larger cities, there is the commendable soil conservation program which has as its purpose soil-saving practises and impoundment of water for beneficial use.

The drama of conservation would be admirably present in the story of the Cherry Creek Soil Conservation District which is an integral part of Denver's own far-flung system of reservoirs and canals.

We join with others in Colorado who are concerned with the necessity and advantages of a good conservation program. We extend our facilities to you with the hope that we may aid you in telling this interesting story of water conservation.

Very sincerely,

Dear Ed:

Since last September I have been on a public relations assignment for the Licensed Beverage Industries, Inc., and on May 1 this assignment will be concluded.

While on this current job it has been possible for me to do free-lance sports assignments, such as the Masters on CBS Radio a few weeks ago, and I hope to line up a new connection that will permit the same privilege.

Meanwhile, I am back on the job hunting routine and inquiring of those who might be expected to say a kind word in my behalf to be alerted to my plans, hopes and desires. In the event that you hear of some one who could use the services in which I deal, the favor of letting them know of my availability and/or me know of their need will be most appreciated

My busted back (from last Nov) has prevented me going on to the golf course for even one swing so far, thus you will be spared all lies about how well I'm shooting. Come hot weather, though, and I hope the back pains ease up enough to let me try my new Wilson woods.

Dropped by to tell you that we shot the Pilot Film of GOLF CHALLENGE at Pine Valley on that wonderfully sunny day yesterday. Shot it in 16 mm Color, with Doug Ford playing Lew Worsham.

Didn't make the deal with Wrather, as the guy running his Golf Show end of the business turned out to be a rascal. But Trent Jones and I managed to scrape up the pilot money and get rolling.

When we get the color print back in about a month, think you would enjoy seeing the show and PINE VALLEY in Color.

Dear Mr. Murrow

I have been severely scolded by Pierre Lazareff, who apart from being my boss is a very old friend of mine, for not having sent to you earlier this letter of introduction from Charles Gombault, and for not having come to see you after we met at the Finletter's. I apologize for not delivering this introductory note before, but I first had to open an office in Washington, which kept me away from New York, then was submerged by the Suez and Hungarian trouble, and by the election campaign.

I would very much like to see you again. I will be in New York next week and would be delighted if you could have lunch with me either on January 14th, 15th or 17th, at your convenience.

Dear Ed:

Thanks a lot for your letter, even though you can't give us any immediate help.

For your consideration in putting us down on the list for the future: if our Discharge Petition goes over this time, there will be a referendum one year later to let the people decide if they do want it. Then the question "Do we think Democracy is a good idea" gets right down to a unit level. If on the other hand we don't succeed, we'll be right in there still plugging to get Congress to do right by our fair city.

Either way, we think the idea is worth developing, democracy still being weighed in the capital of the greatest --- etc. And there's enough material, amusing and sordid, to build it up.

Glad you both had such a good trip. Wallie says to say Hello for him.

I found your letter of January 30th awaiting me on my return from Israel.

We would like very much to do a program on Home Rule as you suggest, but although we will consider it, I see very little possibility of doing it in the near future, since we are fully committed on SEE IT NOW for the remainder of the year and even beyond.

Janet did indeed go with me to Israel, and we both found the trip fascinating if somewhat hectic.

January 30, 1956

Dear Ed:

Tried to get you on the phone last time you were down but you were flying too fast to even get the messages I left. I wanted to add my word to the letter Mrs. Harriman sent you recently urging you to consider Home Rule for one of your terrific telecasts.

I know everyone and his brother is trying to get into the act, but here's the reason -- or rather reasons-- why I think we should prove an interesting subject. Right now we are getting off to a big start on a Discharge Petition - trying to really enforce democracy even in the House of Representatives. It's the only way left to us to see that the majority of the House have their say even if the minority is stubbornly holding out. The House District Committee has held our bill up for ten years, during which time the Senate has passed it three times. There are very few Discharge Petitions -- and only one has finally turned into a law. We have real hopes that ours is going to be the second.

The country as a whole doesn't realize that we can't run our local government. Some know vaguely that we don't vote for President. Few know how much time their congressman has to spend on silly things like the cost of a dog license in the District -- or the size of fish to be extracted from the Potomac.

Frankly I don't care if they waste time on us or golf -- but ever since Germany I've felt pretty fanatic on the subject of the superior values of democracy. With all the evidence in the world, that we should have to argue about it in the capital seems absurd. 'Taxation without representation ' is still a vital issue here.

We're convinced if lots of people knew about this they would agree with us on it. It could do us a terrific amount of good to have your thrash the matter out on your program.

We've got quite a lot of material on the absurdities of Congress as a City Council. In case there is a chance of your being able to do something about it, be sure to let us help.

I understand you are about to leave the country for a while. You are heading into a nice time of year out there. I've remembered the wild flowers in Lebanon for thirty years. Hope Janet is going with you. Wallie has been cavorting around in airplanes for about four months - while I was stuck here. He got back last Wednesday and, we hope, is going to stick around a while.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

You have done a remarkable picture about Israel. I am personally grateful to you, in addition, because your film gave me the idea for another picture in which I would like to interest you.

I intend to make a film about the Arabs in Israel. The aim of the film is essentially twofold: To let the Arab peoples speak for themselves in the midst of their work and life in Israel; and to tell the world the story of how they are becoming integrated, productive citizens in the new State.

The style and "feel" of the film would be strictly informal and personal. Not unlike your "See It Now" program, it will involve unrehearsed visits and talks with Arabs in every walk of life in Israel; a farmer, a fisherman in Acre, a Moslem judge, a Christian minister, a policeman, a housewife, a nurse, a medical student at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem, a schoolteacher, a member of the Knesseth.

Through the format of these interviews, the film will concretely present the important, general categories of Arab life in Israel: labour, health, rural life, social welfare, religion, education and culture, government and administration.

Since 1948, the question of Arab refugees and minorities inside Israel has been a thorn in the side of her relations with the rest of the civilized world. Israel itself has not yet presented a comprehensive, systematic picture about the situation. But more important is the fact that no one has ever gone directly to Arab peoples themselves inside Israel to get and present in a film the full, truthful story of their lives and problems.

Such film would clarify many misunderstandings, and in doing this, it could, I believe, make some contribution towards the establishment of peace in the Middle East.

It is necessary for this film to have, as the central figure, a personality with a national reputation for objectivity and integrity. I cannot think of anybody else but you, whose participation in the film as reporter and "fact finder" would give it the kind of depth and dimension needed to make it an historic document.

Does this project interest you sufficiently to warrant your consideration?

The optimum time lengh in which the material can best be covered is fifty-five minutes. Actual photography would take up to five weeks. But the interviews, if well-prepared and organized, could be covered in seven to nine days.

Whatever your reaction to this proposal may be, I would be most grateful to you if you would agree to meet with me. I know that your advice would be invaluable, and I am willing to come out to see you any time and anywhere at your convenience. Unfortunately, I have to return to Israel in two weeks, and I am very sorry to impose this on you during your vacation.

Awaiting your reply with eagerness, I am,

Yours very sincerely,

Dear John:

Thanks very much for yours of October 9th.

I am glad to be able to tell you that before your letter arrived, the company had decided to repeat our report on the Post Office.

It will be presented again from 5:00 to 6:00 PM New York time on the 20th.

I hope you will have a chance to see it.

Dear Ed:

I happened to participate in the dedication of a cable service between the mainland and Hawaii with the Postmaster General, Arthur Summerfield.

Apparently he was quite delighted with your program last Sunday. Unfortunately I did not have the opportunity to see it so I questioned him as to whether or not it met with his approval. He indicated that it was very good and that he was more than satisfied with your presentation. He wanted to know whether or not this would be repeated at any time. I indicated that I did not know but if he felt that not a sufficient number of people heard it because of the diversions of last Sunday it may be in the public interest to attempt a repeat.

I am not too familiar with the policy of the networks with respect to repeating programs. However, a matter of this kind which touches practically every person in the United States certainly should receive the most serious consideration. Drop me a line regarding the pros and cons as to the possibility of a repeat.

Kindest personal regards,

Sincerely yours,

Dear Claude:

Please forgive the delay in answering your letter of March 20th.

As you are probably aware, I am called upon to do some rather extensive traveling these days with the result that my personal mail is often neglected for too long a time.

I appreciate your problem and wish very much that I could offer you some helpful suggestions. I know of no opening at this time with CBS whether in New York or Washington but you may be sure that if some should come up I will send you a signal.

Dear Ed:

I am encouraged in a roundabout way to inquire again about the possibility of a news staff opening at CBS. The encouragement comes by way of a United Press friend who recently shared a speaking platform with Ted Koop during the Southwestern Journalism Congress at Southern Methodist University. He tells me Koop was wooing journalism graduates for DBS.

If you should hear of any opportunities in Washington or New York -- or any place else in the system for that matter -- I would greatly appreciate consideration.

This operation has fallen apart with even greater speed and completeness than I had feared. My news staff has been cut in half. And about the same thing is happening to my salary as the station loses listeners and business under the new management. The sense of public service and integrity of operation which Arthur Church built into this station has gone by the boards.

We have gained one thing -- a vice-president who believes and repeatedly tells me that the way to do a successful TV newscast is to include pictures of an animal, a baby and a pretty girl in each show. The news doesn't matter. Sex is the thing, he says.

After 15 years with Church and the CBS affiliation, these are difficult things to swallow. And I'm faced with the necessity of doing something, in order to maintain some measure of self respect if for no other reason. If nothing turns up in news, I am seriously considering an effort at lining up an information service job with the State Department or the United Nations.

If you can spare a moment, any words of advice would be appreciated.

With best regards,

Claude

Dear Mrs. Downey:

I seize this first opportunity after returning from London to say my best thanks for your courtesy and hospitality when we "invaded" your lovely retreat. I hope it was only the first of many visits that Mrs. Murrow and I will be able to make.

You will be interested to know, I am sure, that the film with Mr. Truman was of excellent quality and we have high hopes for it.

I shall be sending along to you in a few days some still pictures that we took. You and your entire staff made us feel completely at home and we are much in your debt.

Our check to your account is enclosed. It seems to me very modest indeed, and if you have overlooked any items, do let us know.

I have been advised to send this direct to you.

After watching the C.B.S telecast Saturday afternoon August 11th I feel that your broad-casters should be informed that Mr Truman is still not President Truman, I am happy to say. Mr. Cronkite was the only one who did not make the mistake.

Very many thanks for your cordial letter of October 18.

It was kind of fun talking to the AAA convention and I am glad you approved of my remarks.

I particularly appreciate your comments on the Suez show. As you know, it was a tough one to handle, and it has been gratifying to hear from so many people that they thought we had presented a clear picture of the issues.

I am looking forward to reading the book you were kind enough to send me as soon as I get a rather large mass of paper work cleared off my desk.

My friend and colleague, "Smiling" Ed Sullivan, tells me that you have been good enough to arrange for shipment of certain gear to my farm at Pawling, New York. I am indeed grateful.

One day when you are re-visiting West Point, I hope you will stop by and see the place. Aside from a D-4 Cat, the farm is pretty well stocked with Ford equipment. The annual deficit doesn't stem from inadequate equipment, but rather the fact that my cows have over-developed appetites.

The following from Ed Sullivan:

Dear Ed: All of the farm equipment has been ordered and should be arriving at your place shortly. You are getting the dealers price on all of this equipment. For instance, the list price of the six-foot combine operated from a power take-off is $1,892. The price to you is $1,113.75 plus the assembly charge which the dealer must absorbe. The list price of the corn picker is $1,026.10. The price to you is $770.95 plus the cost of assembling it. Because of your graciousness to our show, I am presenting the six-foot combine to you and have told them to bill that item, $1,113.75, to me. The rest of it will be billed to you. If you have any questions about anything, just call me at PLaza 9-2628.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Attached is a copy of the "BORBA" which just arrived from Belgrade. I thought you might be interested to see for yourself what kind of coverage the Yugoslav's gave to your visit and what impact the interview caused. Never has a westerner received such front page, banner headlined coverage expept high level visits -Stevenson and Mrs. Roosevelt. You are traveling in great company. As you can see they published the whole review.

The reaction was very surprising. Of course the Yugoslavs are as excited as can be - no one has done ANY work before or since the interview. Everyone is in the 'clipping service.'

As for my opinion I can only say that I am extremely pleased, pleased because these past years have been difficult in staving off the numerous requests for interviews. There is a satisfaction that you were first, that you demanded such respect a 'deuniforming' took place, that you were able to extract such spontaniety from the Boss, that Mme. Broz was also at your disposal-- all in all the whole atmosphere is a new and healthy one.

However, I am disappointed for not having written to the Secy. of State on choice of interpreter. I didn't think they would use such bad judment. The one I had in mind has the quality desired and I've worked with him here in N.Y. But---

One of the saddest things is the timing. How much more effective the impact would have been if they had listened to US last year! Last night when I spoke with Ambassador Mates he, too, was mostpleased. He had me send one copy of the interview with panel discussion directly to the big boy. I assured him copies already went out but he wanted to be sure a copy reached Belgrade immediately. This is just an indication how much they are concerned and satisfied with the whole situation. You have broken the barrier. They are completely impressed with the dignity of the program. In summation the effort started a new outlook - perhaps a historic one- because the big wheels are taking a novel attitude - novel for those whose diet consists mainly of Marx soup! The excitement is still present. It is great! Luce they refer to as 'drugarica' (Comrade) Clara.

Yesterday Kevin McClory and I had quite a discussion on his project which includes Yugoslavia. He was so pleased you got the interview. He wanted me to extend his regards.

Again, I must say how thankful we are for the fine job you have done.

(On Sunday, June 30th in an exclusive CBS television network presentation of a special "SEE IT NOW" program, Edward R. Murrow interviewed President Tito on Brioni Island in Yugoslavia.)

Edward R. Murrow Interviews President Tito

The program, on film, was unrehearsed and no questions were submitted to President Tito prior to the interview. Although President Tito understands English well he spoke for this program through an interpreter. We bring you excerpts of the questions asked and the answers given during the program.

In answer to Mr. Murrow's questions on the basic difference between communism in Yugoslavia and in the Soviet Union, President Tito said that some differences do exist. Nevertheless he stressed the fact that both countries have the same aim, that is, the building of socialism. The methods of achieving this aim do differ since Yugoslavia has already introduced wide decentralization not only of the government in the economic field but also in the administration as well. He also stated that the most pronounced characteristic of Yugoslavia's system was the turning over the factories to the workers' self-government and the establishment of communes. It is his belief that these stemmed out of Yugoslavia's specific conditions and circumstances differing from those of the Soviet Union.

On the question of foreign policy President Tito replied that Yugoslavia belongs to no blocs, that she stands firmly on the principle of peaceful coexistence and that Yugoslav foreign policy is similar to the non-alignment policy of Prime Minister Nehru of India and U Nu of Burma.

When Mr. Murrow confronted President Tito with the Bulganin and Khrushchev statements about communism inheriting the earth and its eventual triumph over capitalism and of Khrushchev's prediction that "your grandchildren in America would live under socialism" President Tito replied that he wouldn't state quite so categorically that American grandson's would live under Socialism because it would be up to the American people to decide what system of society they wished to develop or prefer. However he did feel that based on experience, human society requires new forms. He said that in capitalist countries there exist many differences as is also true of Socialist countries and that there are and will be many differences in their development because he feels it is impossible to create a certain pattern and expect the whole world to follow it.

In answer to Mr. Murrow's question regarding views expressed by Mao Tse-tung that there can develop differences between the leadership and the people in a Communist state, President Tito replied that Yugoslav views do not contradict those expressed by

President Tito, Edward R. Murrow and M. S. Prica

(CBS-photo)

President Tito and Mme. Jovanka Broz at Brioni during Murrow interview

(CBS-photo)

Mao Tse-tung, as a matter of fact they are quite similar. He also believes that Mao Tse-tung's recent speech did much to calm down the fear of communism which has existed in the West.

In regard to a view that Communism might take a more divergent character, as, for example, in Poland, Mr. Murrow asked if President Tito believed the central control of Communism from Moscow would be less in Southeast Europe as well.

President Tito replied that it was true that a development towards socialism and Communism could not go along one path in the whole world as this development in different countries depended upon certain specific or different conditions. He said he thought the Polish example of striving to go their own way, that is, of resisting the Stalinist policy would no doubt have a positive influence on the developments in other neighboring countries. However, he thinks it is wrong for the West to expect a restoration of an old regime whenever some new changes or developments occur and what is worse, in his opinion, is the attempt to impose some influence from abroad—from the west, for instance, through the medium of propaganda, etc. These interferences can only make developments more difficult.

In reference to the events in Hungary, Mr. Murrow asked if President Tito feared lest the Hungarians got too much freedom and independence and that perhaps it would have become contagious and affect Yugoslavia.

President Tito said that it was never a question of too much freedom nor any fear from freedom radiation. However it was true that fear existed because the events could have led to a new world war. He thought that perhaps in the West people were not sufficiently cognizant of the potential danger that existed. Also it was quite ironical that Yugoslavia was criticized by both East and West. In the United States for instance Yugoslavia was criticized for saying the first intervention was wrong and that the second was unavoidable. It was unavoidable because otherwise it would have resulted in very grave consequences for all of Europe.

There was a fear that the tendency of the reactionary elements, in getting the upper hand, might bring about a situation which could be used by some from the outside to interfere in the affairs which would then provoke a general clash because it was known that Soviet troops were stationed there according to the Warsaw Pact and they indubitably would never permit the restoration of the old regime.

He said that some leaders and many persons in Western countries do not appraise correctly or realistically the situations in the East European countries so that these mistakes in understanding a given situation, result in more harm than good for the West.

Mr. Murrow asked President Tito for his views on German reunification. The President said he thought the problem of reunification of Germany to be a long, tedious process, particularly if one takes into consideration the fact that not only do two Germanies exist, East and West, but also two different systems. To bring about reunification by force would have unforeseeable consequences. It is equally wrong, he feels, to avoid contacts between these two since there should be cooperation on those things at least for which there is a possibility of mutual agreement. He said that any armaments race, including Western Germany whose role would be a big one, could only push back further the possibilities for the gradual solving of the reunification question.

If, however, reunification is permitted to be solved gradually step by step then there exist no reasons for the continuation of any armaments race in Europe with the aim that solution to that problem could be reached by force. This as well as other problems is actually an internal problem of a country. The President also said that if all those responsible for international affairs agree to the practice of solving problems peacefully through negotiation and agreement, there would then be no reason for the armaments race. He believes that the responsible statesmen have already reached this conclusion and are aware that continuation of the armaments race would only lead to the possibility of igniting a new world tragedy.

Mr. Murrow asked President Tito if he cared to comment on the Middle East situation to which he answered that one could say many things about the situation. However, he continued that the main concern is that the situation over there has become much worse than it was about two years ago. Although even then one couldn't say conditions were ideal but at least there were some elements which pointed toward some possibility of solution. Then came the first big blow to this situation inflicted by the attack on Egypt. President Tito commented further by saying he believes that ever since the aggression, during which the United Nations Organization played a big role, a correct way to ease tension there has not been found and that this situation is more worrying now than at any time before. He also felt the Baghdad Pact to be a mistake because it helped create a step towards disunity among the Arab states, which since the aggression in Egypt, has become more pronounced. He also feels it was an unfortunate way to bring about the Doctrine which called for filling the vacuum in the Arab World because even though it may have certain positive elements, some bad consequences are already showing up. For instance, earlier there was strife and conflict between Israel and the Arab countries. Now the situation has broadened to such an extent that there is strife and conflict among Arab countries too. And he said that to speak of the danger of ideological influence in that area is quite absurd, for some Arab countries still live under feudalism and how could Communism infiltrate these countries? President Tito believes that it would have been much more useful if, following the aggression, a move had been made to help Arab countries economically so that they could build themselves up. This course would have had much more influence than some abstract ideas about Communist danger. Perhaps one day it will become obvious to every one that this policy can no longer be pursued lest this part remains a hot bed of danger.

President Tito suggested that the best solution and policy to pursue is that of co-existence, not a passive one, to live side by side, but an active co-existence which should strive toward a peaceful solution through negotiation and agreement to all problems. Here he referred to the two systems—Capitalist and Socialist and what is to be done; whether to allow the two systems to fight each other with all the means at their disposal, including arms, or to have co-existence, to live in co-existence, to cooperate with each other and try to solve the existing problems in a peaceful way.

Mr. Murrow asked if the President meant to cooperate and compete, to which he replied affirmatively and added that they should exchange experiences. The positive ones. He continued that he could not agree with the theory on an ideological struggle, for instance, in the West where any progressive movement is immediately labeled Communist. This sort of ideological struggle or use of force can only result in the same bad consequences which already exist in some parts of the world.

And again referring to the two systems, President Tito asked if one should destroy or annihilate the other or should we live in peace? He said he believes that there is but one alternative and that is for both systems to cooperate, co-exist and develop.

"But," he concluded, "we should abandon the idea of intervening, of mixing in the internal affairs of each other. The internal development of any country is a question for the people of that country to decide. If a majority of the people of a country decide to have a Socialist system, then nobody has the right to try and impose another system on that people. For instance, if a majority of the American people wish to have the system as they have, no one has the right to impose something else on them. I think that in this present difficult situation in the world, it is necessary to try and find as many elements as posisble which bring us together rather than those which separate us."

Declaration of the People's Assembly of Yugoslavia on Suspension of Nuclear Weapon Test Explosions

After a discussion on the question of nuclear weapon test explosion, the People's Assembly of the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia unanimously expressed justified anxiety over the steadily growing number of these explosions. The desire of the people of Yugoslavia for the suspension of nuclear weapon tests and for prohibition of their production and use has been expressed in a series of documents submitted by our social and political organizations and in the statement of the President of the Republic.

Anxiety about setting off nuclear weapon test explosions comes from the wish of the people of Yugoslavia, in accord with the longing of all peoples of the world, to preserve peace among nations. Hence the widest and direct interest of the people of Yugoslavia in the whole of the disarmament problem which in the present circumstances occupies the central place in international relations. In this respect the People's Assembly of the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia states its conviction that a reduction of armaments, armed forces, military expenditures and, in this framework, the prohibition of nuclear weapons and of all weapons of mass destruction, the suspension of the production of fissionable materials for military purposes and the destruction of the stockpiles of nuclear weapons, would enormously contribute to the creation of a favorable atmosphere for the solution of the unsolved international problems, for lasting and stable peace in the world and for progress on the basis of broad and equal cooperation among nations.

The People's Assembly of the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia stresses that the present international situation, as it has been pointed out several times and proposed by the representatives of the Yugoslav and a number of other governments, imperatively requires the conclusion of such initial agreements in the field of disarmament as would—even partial and limited in content—make it possible to set in motion a continuous process of disarmament, increase mutual confidence in the world and serve as a transition to comprehensive and all-inclusive agreements on disarmament.

The People's Assembly of the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia welcomes all the sincere efforts recently made in this sense and expresses the hope that the current disarmament talks will bring about this result. The peoples of the world place great trust in the United Nations and expect from its organs a prompt solution of urgent problems, above all of the problem of suspension of nuclear test explosions. Procrastination in the solution of urgent problems would lead to the weakening of this trust, which would have a negative effect on international relations in general.

The constantly repeated test explosions of nuclear weapons are in general conflict with the positive evolution of international relations in all fields. These tests create fear, suspition and mutual distrust, all of which adversely affects the international atmosphere and seriously impedes the reaching of agreed solutions in the fields of disarmament and in other controversial international questions.

The People's Assembly of the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia unanimously takes notice of the fact that these explosions, even in the degree so far publicized, caused very grave perils for the entire population of the world. There exist inequivocal and undoubtedly objective and honest testimonies of a very great number of competent experts, including scientists and experts of our country, as well as of whole groups and associations of scientists in all countries, about these perils and the fact that there is no possibility of limiting either their territorial spread or their duration.

The People's Assembly of the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia wholeheartedly welcomes the initiative of the responsible representative bodies, governments and individual statesmen of numerous countries, inspired by the desire to achieve the suspension of the harmful and dangerous test explosions of nuclear weapons.

The People's Assembly of the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia especially expresses its recognition and moral support to the numerous prominent scientists who by coming out in favor of the suspension of test explosions of nuclear weapons demonstrated an exalted conception of their obligations as scientists and of their responsibility for the future of humanity.

On the ground of all this, and particularly in accord with the intense desire of the Yugoslav people for the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia to offer, in this situation its own contribution by pointing to the possible roads toward the solution of the problem of the suspension of nuclear test explosions,

THE PEOPLE'S ASSEMBLY OF THE FEDERAL PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF YUGOSLAVIA,

1) Points to the great special responsibility before the public opinion of the entire world and before history, of the Powers now conducting test explosions of nuclear weapons for the catastrophic consequences, those already caused and especially those possible in the future, unless these explosions are immediately halted;

2) Expects every one of these Powers to show readiness to contribute in the largest possible measure to the solution of the problem of test explosions of nuclear arms and, thus, to the creation of a better atmosphere in the world and to the easier making of further solutions of the problems of disarmament;

3) On the basis of the recent positive development in the Sub-Committee of the U.N. Commission for Disarmament, calls upon the members of the Sub-Committee to put into effect without delay an agreement on the suspension of test explosions of nuclear weapons; if it should not be possible to reach a lasting agreement, it is indispensable to arrive at an agreement on at least a temporary suspension for a specified term; it would be useful and necessary to supplement this agreement with a declaration of each member country of the Sub-Committee that assumes the obligation not to make further explosions even after the expiration of the specified term, if no other power should make such tests;

It would be useful if the Powers now conducting nuclear weapon test explosions gave such declarations even before the conclusion of agreements on the suspension of test explosions, because this would greatly facilitate the making of such agreements;

4) Directs the Federal Executive Council, and especially the Secretariat of State for Foreign Affairs, to continue the study of this question for the purpose of eventual preparation of further practical proposals of the Yugoslav Government, should the situation so require;

5) Calls upon the representative bodies of all states, on the governments and the responsible statesmen of all countries, and on the political and other organizations, experts in the field of nuclear science, scientists and scientists' associations, as well as on all people of good will, and especially on the parliaments and peoples of the countries conducting test explosions of nuclear weapons, in the interest of peace and security in the world and the consolidation and strengthening of mutual trust and international cooperation, to make every effort to arrive as soon as possible at a solution of the problem of suspending nuclear weapon test explosions and thus also to fulfill a primary condition for the ultimate prohibition of the manufacture of nuclear weapons and for the destruction, or rather conversion to peaceful use, of all the existing stockpiles of these weapons.

Yugoslav-Norvegian Talks

Following the visit of the Yugoslav Secretary of State Koča Popović to Norway and his talks to the Norwegian Foreign Minister, Mr. Halvard Lange, the following joint communique was issued in Oslo:

At the invitation of the Norwegian Government the Yugoslav State Secretary for Foreign Affairs, Koča Popović paid an official visit to Oslo from the 3rd to the 5th of June, returning the visit of the Norwegian Minister for Foreign Affairs, Halvard Lange, to Yugoslavia last year. The chief aim of this visit was to consolidate relations between the statesmen of the two countries and to expand cooperation between Norway and Yugoslavia.

In the course of the visit to Oslo, the two Ministers had talks on problems of interest to the two countries. In addition to Koča Popović these talks were attended on behalf of Yugoslavia by the Yugoslav Ambassador to Norway, Vladimir Rolović, the Minister in the State Secretariat for Foreign Affairs, Dr. Sergije Makiedo, and the Chief of the State Secretary's cabinet, Momčilo Peles and on the Norwegian side by the State Undersecretary in the Foreign Ministry, Dag Brin, the Chief of the Political Department, Fritjof Jacobsen and the Counsellors in the Foreign Ministry, Einer Anstensen and Ole Olgord. The two Ministers concluded with satisfaction that relations between their two countries were favorably developing and that they sincerely wished to continue expanding these relations in all spheres of interest to the two countries. Among other things, the two Ministers reviewed the program of cultural exchanges between the two countries next year, as determined by the cultural convention concluded by Yugoslavia and Norway last year.

Since both Norway and Yugoslavia had contributed contingents to the United Nations Emergency Force in the Middle East, questions concerning this Force were also considered. The two Ministers exchanged opinions about the general international situation, and they concluded that there was a high degree of unanimity between their views. They emphasized that it was necessary to exert new efforts in solving outstanding international problems by peaceful means. Norway and Yugoslavia attached great importance to the role of the United Nations in World politics, and both countries would continue to give their full support to the Organization. The two Ministers particularly emphasized the importance of the efforts exerted by the United Nations in the field of disarmament, and they expressed their conviction that some progress in disarmament would be of great value for a general relaxation of tension in the world and for peace. The two countries hoped that the efforts of the United Nations Disarmament Sub-Committee would produce positive results and lead to the conclusion of at least initial agreements, with appropriate measures of international control.

The exchange of views of the two Ministers took place in an atmosphere of cordiality and sincerity, and it was concluded with satisfaction that the visit of Koča Popović had contributed to the strengthening of cooperation and friendship between Norway and Yugoslavia. Both ministers considered that this exchange of views had produced useful results and they agreed that similar contacts should be renewed whenever they might prove necessary in the future.

The First Congress of Workers' Councils

(President Tito made the opening address before a large audience attending the First Congress of the Workers' Councils held in the new Trade Union Hall, Marx's Engels Square in Belgrade on June 25th, 1957)

Today I am very happy to be able to greet the participants of this First Congress of Workers' Councils and to wish you much success in your work, in your discussions and passing of decisions beneficial to the further development of production to the producers themselves and to our entire socialist community.

It is just seven years since the Law was adopted, turning over management of the factories and enterprises to the producers, the workers of our country. It was one of the most important and historic acts in the development of our socialist order, an act dictated by public needs at a given stage, that is to say, the need of democratization in the economy, the establishment of new, socialist relations in production, based on wide participation of workers not only in management of production but also in the further development of production and distribution. The objective of this act was to enable the workers to develop to the maximum their creative abilities and initiative which were increasingly hampered by centralized management.

At that time there was still incredulity that our young working class, pouring into cities and factories from the villages, together with the intensive industrialization would be capable of assuming such a complicated role as management of factories and enterprises. We, however, had no doubts about our working class when we enacted that Law. Because, even then we were convinced and confident of its creative abilities. Yes, we knew that most of our working class was young, as young as the achievement of our revolution—new Yugoslavia. The old, undeveloped Yugoslavia left us only a small number of skilled and able cadres, and, in addition, the War of Liberation and the People's Revolution, exacted particularly heavy casualties among the ablest cadres of our small working class. But we saw that our younger workers developed amazing enthusiasm and ability in mastering techniques of production of various complicated machinery, and particularly in production of high quality products and technical facilities, including various equipment for new factories and electric power stations. The problem of rearing and educating new capable personnel, increasingly demanded by our rapid industrialization, could be solved precisely by giving the factories and enterprises for management to the working collectives, which, as it turned out, achieved in this respect brilliant results.

Could we then dare, waver, and doubt that our workers, who in the course of production developed such creative abilities, would not be ready to manage production? No! We believed that they would overcome this, although we were conscious of various difficulties and obstacles in the way of development of social management of which you, who are here today, are best aware.

You will dwell on these various weaknesses on this occasion because it is necessary to point them out in order to overcome them as soon as possible, particularly those of a subjective character. There are difficulties and weaknesses of an objective character and there are some subjective ones which can be more easily eliminated or avoided. This depends on you. On objective difficulties and obstacles in the way of a rapid and regular development of our workers' self-government we, who are responsible for socialist development in our country, must speak up. We cannot and dare not deny our responsibility for the slow rate of eliminating certain obsolete regulations and instruments which became obstacles in achieving greater and accelerating more rapid momentum in production while at the same time prevented a more rapid increase in raising the living standard of our workers. Inasmuch as there were some difficulties of an objective character and of a material nature, we were not responsible for them, because it was beyond our power to remove them. But it happens that the difficulties of an objective character become subjective and then we who are in the leadership must do everything to remove such weaknesses, because responsibility rests on us. For example, in the case of the system of wages and salaries, the solution has been dragging on for a long time, yet it is on this that the productivity of labor depends to a large extent.

While on the subject of negative things which occured in some working collectives, permit me to mention the most pronounced ones which, if not removed, could have very unfavorable consequences for the development of our monolithic socialist community. In the first place, regional or district selfish motives and inconsideration are placed above the interests of the community as a whole. Such local particularism occurs in various forms and is incompatible with proper interpretation of socialist relations in our community. It must not be forgotten that our socialist society is a huge collective in which the interests of individuals must be compatible with the interests of the entire community. It is exceedingly detrimental to a community if true socialist relations do not exist among enterprises. Unfair competition and establishment of several enterprises of the same kind only for the sake of competing with the already existing enterprises, are very harmful, because superfluous investments are made which could be used much more advantageously for other purposes. In the same way the fact that individual enterprises try to avoid cooperation is also harmful because cooperation facilitates a cheaper production of a product. We must do away with such and similar weaknesses otherwise it becomes a disadvantage not only to the workers themselves but also to the entire community.

While speaking of our difficulties and shortcomings in workers' self-government, we must compare these with the immense positive results achieved during this short period of seven years. This is a subject of which we must speak at this Congress in order to see how brilliantly our workers have stood the test in this great work of socialist development. This period was a gigantic school where one-third of the employed workers participated in the management, or over 600,000 workers and office employees. This was the most difficult period for our country because we had to struggle against almost insurmountable difficulties, particularly of an economic character, which placed the principal burden on the shoulders of our working class. Creating better economic conditions, it had to renounce many things at the expense of its living standard and in favor of our industrialization, in favor of transformation of our country. Today, if we cast a glance at our country, we will see numerous factories and enterprises with modern equipment which have turned the once backward country of Yugoslavia into an industrially developed one. It is during this most difficut period that the creative power of our working people came to the fullest expression. Confident in their ability, our workers developed an amazing initiative in all fields and enabled us to overcome economic difficulties in our development which at first seemed insurmountable. We can boldly state that the role of our working class in workers' self-government has contributed most to enable us to emerge from this most difficult position. They have proven its full effectiveness and value through practice. The results speak for themselves.

Of course, we have no intention to force our system upon anyone. However, we are bound in duty to defend it against those who are deaf and blind to facts and who refuse to face reality in our country. I think that our practice is the best proof of the correctness of our system by its positive results. Those results are seen not only by the direct participants in the production but also by the whole of our people in the same way as they are known far beyond our borders.

Neither do we intend to compete as to whose system is better and more democratic, because the producers themselves can be the best judges in this respect. Our workers have come to the conviction that their management of factories and enterprises is a great achievement showing them the best perspectives for the realization of a happier life and prosperity. When our working people are satisfied with such a system of management, as I am deeply convinced they are, and that they are always prepared to stake their life in defense of this great achievement, then it is difficult to understand why some people outside our country bother about whether or not it is a good system, this system of workers' self-government. I must remark that some critics beyond our border very often pass judgement as to whether or not a thing is good even though many have no qualifications to pass on such things. I would like to take this opportunity to recommend to those who do not believe in the results achieved by workers' management of enterprises to come to Yugoslavia and see for themselves.

Speaking of foreign criticism of our internal development, we must state, on the strength of the experience gained so far, that it cannot be said that such criticism is constructive or objective but most often captious. If they were to admit our positive results, which leave in the shadow certain weaknesses occurring in the past period of seven years which we ourselves speak about, it would then be more difficult for them to criticize. Others have difficulties and weaknesses. We know they have many of them, but this is not reason for rejoicing. There should be mutual support and not destructive criticism. I am convinced that in such a case it would be easy to maintain not only normal but also good friendly relations with all countries.

Good relations must be based on sincerity, confidence, and on something real. We cannot be deluded by flourishes of words which differ from practice. Where would we get if we were to start enumerating and criticizing everything that is bad in some countries or what we dislike in them? Yes, there are things that should be criticized, but it is not difficult to distinguish between constructive and destructive criticism. We are not indifferent to the light in which Yugoslavia is shown, in the countries of people's democracy or in the international labor movement in general. We demand that the truth be written and spoken about us, and not only for positive reality to be taciturnly passed over, while the negative cases, in a distorted form, are publicized. I think this is the least we can ask of people in different countries. When there is mutual understanding of these relations, I am convinced they will not only be positive but also lasting and beneficial to all.

I cannot help but mention the criticism passed against our entire social system to which many Western critics dispute a democratic character. It would be necessary for them to come to our factories and talk with our workers and try to understand our system, where the producers themselves manage the means of production and where the broadest masses of people are in a position to participate in the management in both economy and in all other fields of public life. We have no complaints if the people in the West are satisfied with several or many parties—that is their own business. But we have succeeded in creating something new—the Socialist Alliance of the Working People around a program for which the great majority of our people have rallied. This Alliance also includes those who belonged to various parties but who are now convinced that that brought no good to our country. These are builders of socialism today who know what they want. This is an immense organization embracing the League of Communists of Yugoslavia where there is free discussion and, as far as possible, where the best deci-

VISIT YUGOS

Each year Yugoslavia puts more efforts toward having tourism placed at an international level, so that she may be able to keep in step with the rest of the world and promote better relations and understanding among people.

Statesmen sometimes have difficulties in deciding world problems but tourists have no such hardship. For them there is no limit because there exists no animosity. On the contrary, there is understanding and a desire to help each other, regardless of religion, nationality, color or country.

If statesmen could solve their problems as easily as tourists there would be more peace in the world, more travel, and more understanding of each others way of life.

One of the European authors of this century once wrote:

"If all the people on this earth would at the same time kick it with their feet, this would be a stronger roar than all past earthquakes together, or if they would all blow at once, this would be a bigger storm than all past storms put together."

Another said that all tourists are the "Ambassadors of Good Will."

People should travel, get acquainted with each other, become friends and build one big strong world of brotherhood and friendship, where everybody would become an "Ambassador of Good Will," and where good will and understanding would rule the world for the benefit and well-being of all people.

We asked Mr. Sčepan Matijasevič, the Yugoslav State Tourist Office director in New York, what questions were most frequently asked by those people with whom he had contact in the past two years. He made a compilation of the following questions:

Q: Can one go to Yugoslavia and is there any risk?

A: The frontiers of Yugoslavia are open to all foreign tourists. Foreign tourists or whoever has been to Yugoslavia will confirm that Yugoslavs regard foreign visitors almost as their personal guests.

St. Stephan

In 1955, more than half a million tourists visited Yugoslavia, of which number 22,000 were Americans and Canadians. In 1956 about 26,000 American and Canadian tourists came to Yugoslavia. This year we are anticipating a yearly increase of tourists of even greater numbers from everywhere, especially the United States.

Q: What makes Yugoslavia interesting?

A: The contrasting scenic beauty of the country and the warmth and friendliness shown by the Yugoslav people.

From the shimmering Alpine peaks of Slovenia, over the luscious Croatian and Serbian highlands, the even endlessness of the Vojvodina plains, the mighty Danube and the fertile river valleys, the rugged Macedonian mountains and magnificent lakes, the deep and somber forests of Bosnia, the arid and majestic Karst with its foaming waterfalls and underground rivers and mysterious caverns, the enormous and naked crags of Montenegro, frozen in fantastic postures, to the more than one thousand sunny islands and the bare white rocks of Dalmatia thrusting out of the blue Adriatic straight toward the sky—extends a land unforgettable to any who have visited it.

The traveler may unexpectedly pass an old Roman bath, or a Moslem mosque; admire the ruins of a Greek temple, or medieval frescoes in Serbian and Macedonian churches. Excavated ancient theaters lie not far from aristocratic palaces in Dubrovnik, and crumbling feudal castles still crouch like eagles on hilltops near modern city skyscrapers.

This is the corner of Europe which has been the meeting place and the no-man's-land between east and west; the bridge and the wall between continents and civilizations.

The people of Yugoslavia have two main characteristics: hospitality and love of independence. In western countries, a guest is welcomed, but is expected to conform to the rules of the house; in Yugoslavia, the rules of the house are suspended to accomodate every wish of the guest. The indomitable spirit of independence has so often been shown that one can very well apply to all of Yugoslavia what the national poet once sang about tiny Montenegro: "No other than God could subdue it, and who knows but God himself would tire of the enterprise."

The foreign visitor will also be struck by the extraordinary folk art of the people of Yugoslavia: strangely melodic folk songs, folk dances of astonishing vigor and rhythm, and national costumes of exquisite imagination in embroidery and color combinations.

Q: Is it difficult to get to Yugoslavia?

A: Not at all. From the United States or Canada one can go to Yugoslavia by ship via France or Italy or direct. By plane one can arrive to Ljubljana, Zagreb or Belgrade within one day, from any part of Europe. There are excellent connections by train, road, ship or plane.

Q: Considering that Yugoslav hotels were badly damaged during the war, have they been renovated and have any new ones been built?

A: All hotels, not completely destroyed during the war, have been renovated. In addition, more than 100 new hotels, with more than 8,000 beds, have been constructed. Every year Yugoslavia is building several new hotels, and we can say that several of the most interesting spots now have first-class hotels, properly equipped for American and Canadian tourists.

Q: Are there sufficient and proper transportation means in Yugoslavia?

A: Of course. For longer flights the Yugoslav Aerotransport operates Convair planes, and DC3s for shorter ones. The Iljusin 14 plane is also used for these trips. Plans are now being studied for the construction of an international airport in Belgrade capable of trafficking jet planes.

The Adriatic Line, in addition to the two existing modern ships, PARTIZANKA and PROLETERKA, has received two more ships for coastal, Adriatic and Mediterranean cruises—JUGOSLAVIJA and JADRAN—and soon will receive a third, JEDINSTVO. These ships have been categorized as Class A (first class).

We ourselves manufacture railroad cars of European standard for express and Diesel trains, as well as tourist buses of which there is a larger supply every year.

Q: We hear that your roads are bad. We would particularly like to know about car traveling.

A: In the North-Western part of Yugoslavia, toward Austria and Italy, the roads are in very good condition. Coming from any Western European country, one can drive to Zagreb and on to Belgrade along asphalt highways in excellent condition.

Certain sections of the highway along the Adriatic Coast are under construction. All construction should be finished in two years. Sections of this highway are already open to traffic.

The highway from Belgrade to Greece is also under construction, and the asphalted sections of this highway, too, are open to traffic. Actually, both highways are passable all the way even now, and every year almost 100,000 vehicles traverse them.

We have gasoline in sufficient quantities. Service stations are spaced on the average of every 100 miles.

During each of the last few years, between 50,000 and 60,000 foreign motorists traveled in Yugoslavia.

Q: Is a visa necessary to enter Yugoslavia, and if so, does one have to wait long to obtain it?

A: A visa is necessary, but it is issued very quickly, as a rule within one day. In the United States and Canada Yugoslav visas are issued by the Yugoslav Consulates and Embassies in these countries.

Q: Why do you require visas from American citizens when some other countries don't?

A: Well, some other countries, for instance Turkey, do demand visas from American and Canadian citizens. We, too, believe that when other countries demand visas from our citizens we also must demand visas from their citizens. Naturally, we would like nothing better than for the time to come when our Government will successfully solve this question with other countries by mutually abolishing travel visas.

Ancient City of Stobi

Q: Is Yugoslavia expensive, compared to other European countries?

A: For the foreign traveler, no. Yugoslavia is one of the cheapest countries in Europe.

Q: With reference to religion, can a foreign tourist attend church services in Yugoslavia?

Pula-Arena

A: The Director of an American Tourist Agency answered this question thusly:

"There is full freedom of profession of religion, and I was able to attend everywhere freely, like the Yugoslav citizens, religious rites and services."

Q: Would Yugoslavia be of interest to those who tour Europe studying certain specific subjects?

A: I think that Yugoslavia should not be left out of any special subject tour of Europe. For instance, groups or individuals studying painting, architecture, history, culture, folklore, etc., surely will come across things in Yugoslavia which they cannot see in other countries.

Students of economics, law, agriculture, social questions, ways of living, etc., also will find in Yugoslavia something that does not exist in other European countries.

Industrial production rise

According to statistical data, Yugoslav industrial production rose by another 12 per cent in April.

The movement finds the electrotechnical industry in first place with the ferrous metallurgy holding second place with a production increase of 31 per cent.

The rubber industry is third (30%) followed by chemical (23%), petroleum (23%), electric power (20%), (timber 19%), non-metals (19%), paper (18%), textiles (15%) and coal production increased by .3%.

Swiss scientific workers appeal to president of Association of International Law

A group of university professors and scientific workers of Switzerland have addressed an appeal to Professor Milan Bartoš in his capacity as president of the International Law Association. In this appeal they ask that the Association call an international congress devoted to the examination of harmful influences of nuclear test explosions in the biological and physical-geographical connection.

"Jadran" gets highest classification

Lloyds Register and Jugoregistar have awarded a "100 A-1" classification to Yugoslavia's most recently built ship "Jadran."

This vessel built at the SPLIT Shipyards was given the award because she qualifies as a most seaworthy craft.

Built to specification of all international conventions on safety, "Jadran" is equipped with the most up-to-date nautical instruments.

"Jadran" is capable of sailing the high seas in accordance with the existing naval regulations and can develop a maximum speed of 20 nautical miles per hour.

Cultural convention with Japan in preparation

Japan and Yugoslavia will start negotiations in the hopes of concluding a convention on cultural cooperation.

These negotiations, to be undertaken on the initiative of the Japanese Government, will probably start in October.

State Secretariat gains new responsibilities

Changes to be made in the law governing the work and organization of the Federal Executive Council will take place. When these changes occur the state secretaries and secretaries in the Council—ranking as state undersecretaries—will have the right to attend meetings of the government and vote on questions directly with their offices.

All high functionaries of the Federal state administration will be empowered with the rights and duties of members of the Council in representing their country abroad.

The State secretaries and under-secretaries will thus become part of the Government as is the case in many countries. However, this does not change the position of the Federal Executive Council as the executive organ of the Assembly. On the contrary, these changes merely indicate that the position of the highest functionaries of state administration and their political responsibility before the Government and Parliament is strengthening. This is necessary in order to transfer the greatest possible number of administrative-political questions to the Federal administration while unburdening the Federal Executive Council from such operative tasks. This will enable the F.E.C. to devote itself to political and executive functions. Raising the secretaries and undersecretaries to a higher rank will also enable people's deputies as well as members of the Government to assume leading duties in some organs of Federal administration which was not possible until now.

President Tito's Speech

sions are taken in a truly democratic way to be implemented by the efforts of our entire socialist community.

I am convinced that it is clear to all of you that this Congress should give a new, still stronger impetus for the further development and improvement of workers' self-government. One of the most essential questions is the labor productivity and a still better organization of production. Naturally, we must remove as soon as possible those elements which do not stimulate the increase of productivity of labor and which still hinder the creative ability and initiative of the workers to be developed to the fullest extent. When speaking of increased labor productivity we must at the same time think of increased living standards of the workers. We cannot always appeal to the consciousness of the workers to produce more without letting them feel the results of their efforts in increased earning and a higher living standard. This is possible now because we can invest and build new factories and enterprises at a more modern rate.

This is what I wanted to say to you with the conviction that this first Congress of Workers' Councils will result in important decisions. I wish once again to extend my greetings to all of you and to wish you much success in your work.

Visit Yugoslavia

Those who love unusual hunting and fishing and other sports activities, will have vast opportunities to take part in them in Yugoslavia.

Every year—along with sports events—dozens of festivals and other cultural events take place, and this, together with the natural beauties and rarities and fascinating historic monuments makes Yugoslavia really very interesting for the Americans and the Canadians—actually a virgin tourist territory to be explored.

We are certain that both sides will enrich their knowledge and goodwill.

The glorious sunshine, lovely beaches, boating, swimming, water polo and all other summer sports is offset with skiing (the highest ski jump in the world is in Planitza, Slovenia) mountain climbing, skating and other sports.

For that unusual treat of a lifetime, visit YUGOSLAVIA.

Dear Ed:

A late communication from our New York Office tells me that you have been signed by Pan American for 1957.

Congratulations, and welcome to the family!

Pan American is a great organization and I am sure you will enjoy working with our group. You can certainly count on the wholehearted support of the Manila Office!

I am planning another trip to Europe and the States next spring if developments permit. We will look forward to seeing you then.

Best personal regards.

Dear George:

Many thanks for your note on the farm show. Brother Benson will get his chance to lacerate me on the twenty-third, which will not be a new experience; but I wish to hell that he would talk about the farm problem as such other than be content to denounce me as a demagogue. I think the farmers would be more interested in farming than in Murrow.

We are trying one on Israel and Egypt on March 13th; a nice non-controversial subject.

Dear Ed:

As always, you made a valuable contribution to public understanding, when you presented the cross section on agriculture. "T" Benson (as we used to know him in Idaho) may be accademically right in his protestation. But he's not coming to grips with the large picture--of agricultural subordination while industrial prosperity reigns, and the inevitable exodus of small farmers.

There's a frightening parallel between realities of today and the neglect of agriculture in the 20s which precipitated depression for all groups. I hope quite a few city people may have visualized this kind of meaning to themsleves when they viewed your very valid, and fairly balanced, program. Congratulations to your network for giving this recognition to the full importance of the subject.

Only one personal jolt. How did all those wrinkles come about on the faces of "young" farmers I used to know, like John McGregor of Hooper, Washington? Or, where did the last 20 years disappear to....

Best wishes,

George Dunning

Dear Mr. Murrow:

You probably won't remember but quite a few months ago Charlie Shaw introduced us while you fed a show from WCAU. At that time you mentioned that if I was ever in New York, I might drop into CBS for a chat.

Since that time, quite a bit has transpired, notably the fact that I dropped you one note a day before you shoved off for the Mid-East.

I'll be in New York on Friday, January 11th. I know that's a Person-to-Person day, but if there's any chance of squeezing in a two-or-three minute chat with you in the morning, I'd certainly appreciate it.

Thanks in advance...

My dear Mr. Murrow:

Your secretary was kind enough to suggest that I write you concerning a 15-minute TV show at the Lighthouse Blind Mens' Club in October or early November. I had hoped that you could come as a guest of honor on one of our monthly evenings, but she tells me that you have had to refuse all speaking dates because of your very busy program.

Thirty-seven blind men live at the residential club; some of them work in the Lighthouse workshop not far away. Some were lawyers; two were actors; one was a banker; some were laboring men. It is, I think, an inspiring sight to see these men, who have not only lost their money and their real means of livlihood through their misfortune and handicap of blindness but who have so many hours of idleness -- to see the cheerfulness, the gaiety and the real gallantry of the way they accept life.

Our Lighthouse Special Campaign, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Frederic Pruyn, comes to a close about November 14th. If your TV show could go on the air in September, October or early November it would help our campaign very much.

Sincerely yours,

Dorothy Kirchner Earle

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Thanks very much. I can't recall ever spending a more stimulating hour. In fact, it passed so quickly, it seemed I'd been in your office no more than a few minutes. Until Mr. Warren blew the whistle, I didn't realize I'd taken so much of your time, for which my profound apologies.

When Mr. Warren called me, he said I could "have as much time" as I wanted. Nor did he brief me when I met him at CBS. The first I knew of a deadline was when he announced it at your office. Be that as it may, he's not to be blamed for my digressions, though I wish he called, "Fifteen minutes!", as they do backstage before curtain-time. Mr. Warren was actually extremely courteous and cooperative in arranging my appointment with you.

Assuming complete responsibility for losing sight of my mission, I cop a plea. Studying my notes, I find I failed to ask several important questions. Thus I seek your indulgence for another session, which I promise to cut short. If neither of us goes off on a tangent, it shouldn't take more than 15 or 20 minutes, at your convenience, any hour of day or night. My deadline on interviews is 72 hours in advance of publication. If possible, I'd like to use it before Oct. 6.

Again, my sincerest thanks for a delightful hour.

Cordially,

Dear Ed:

For some years the American Association for the United Nations has had a committee on the ILO. This committee was representative of the general public, business and labor. Its purpose was to conduct a broad educational program on behalf of the ILO. Because of the preoccupation of the public with many other important issues of international relations before the United Nations, the committee has not been very active for several years.

Now the ILO has again become a matter of wide attention in this country. The questions raised by the US Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers, the appointment of a committee of experts to study the ILO for the Departments of State, Labor and Commerce, the issues of the convention on forced labor, etc., would seem to promote a broad educational campaign on behalf of the ILO at this time.

On May 16 the Association was host to representatives of non-governmental organizations at an all-day conference on the ILO. The group asked the Association to act as a clearing house on pertinent ILO information and approved the revitalizing of the Association's Committee on the ILO. It is our intention to have a committee of approximately a hundred persons representing the general public, labor and employers. From the members a small executive committee will be selected. It would be our plan to have a meeting of the Committee in September to discuss program, etc. We would be delighted to have you serve as a member of the Committee.

Faithfully yours,

Clark

Dear Mr. Murrow,

I am writing you these few lines, on my way to Israel, trusting that you have received the message I left with your secretary concerning this trip and in the hope that you may notify Teddy Kollek of your acquaintance with our television plans.

Before I left New York I had the great pleasure of meeting with Charles A. Siepmann and discussing with him the latest developments in our plans for the introduction of television to Israel with particular reference to the use of the medium for education and cultural integration.

It is my sincere hope that you may be able to spare me some time upon my return to the States, at the end of March, so as to pursue further the helpful and stimulating discussion we had at your office some months ago.

PROPOSAL FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF TELEVISION IN ISRAEL

The undersigned hereby present a comprehensive and conclusive plan for the introduction and establishment of a television service in the state of Israel.

THE NEED FOR A TELEVISION SERVICE IN ISRAEL

It is essential to alert people and clarify the need and urgency of establishing a television service in Israel. An attempt was made approximately four years ago to develop a T.V. service. However, at the time it was considered premature and was seen as an additional financial burden on the government.

Recently, a change has taken place in the attitude of the people concerned. Israel is a highly developed modern country, where science plays a most predominant part. As an example of the advanced thinking of the authorities, no effort was spared in building an electronic computer of a size and diversity only available in very few of the major countries.

It is also agreed now that television with all its uses, applications and potentialities is a necessity, and its introduction is inevitable.

Any forward thinking person can see the invaluable service that television can give to Israel and that it is not too early to start planning and executing this project now.

The problem of integrating the various elements in the mass migration, and their moulding into a national entity, is one of the most difficult and complicated tasks faced by the people of Israel. The audio-visual medium of television will shorten by several years the process of integration.

It is also of utmost importance to understand that the intellectual standard is very high in Israel, and is not limited by locale.

Whether living in a border village, isolated community, or in a city, Israelis are hungry for continuous educational development and cultural stimulation.

Television in Israel will be used for:

A - Education

(1) Teaching of the official languages

(2) Training in healthy and sanitary practices

(3) Encouraging the return to the land movement and training in agriculture.

(4) Telecasts to schools and colleges of special lectures by local and visiting scientists, educators and personalities.

(5) Telecasts of illustrated lectures of national importance.

(6) Regular lectures by specialists to all educational institutions and the public at large which would otherwise not be available to outlying communities.

(7) Telecasts of the sessions of Parliament.

(8) Telecasting of documentary and educational films. (This will bring about local production of films for television, and will result in building up a library of factual data. Such a library will provide material for exchange with other countries.

Also see Special Section on EDUCATION.

B - Culture

(1) Music, which is an integral part of life in Israel, will be made available to everyone through regularly scheduled concerts by the Philharmonic Orchestra, and visiting musicians.

(2) Theatrical Productions, which at present do not reach everyone, will be made available through telecasts.

(a) An incentive will also be created for the further development and encouragement of the Hebrew theatre and opera.

(b) The development of original dance styles will be further aided by televised performances and instructions.

(3) Literature:

The dissemination of a thorough understanding and love for modern and classical literature will be made possible through regular showings of the latest development in these fields.

C - Entertainment

Only through selective television programming can entertainment of a high order be made available on a mass basis. At present, it is found more costly and difficult to bring the proper kind of entertainment to every corner of the country. Television will provide the ideal, and the most inexpensive method of mass entertainment. (American television programs are available on film through various government and private agencies)

D - World-Wide Link

Television on an international scale, which was only a dream seven years ago, is a growing reality today. Judging by current progress, Europe will be TV-linked to the United States within the next few years, and, before long, an international network will girdle the earth. At such a time Israel would become a pivot in the chain of stations, which will tie the European continent with Asia and Africa. Furthermore, programs emanating from Israel will be of great interest, particularly on holidays, sacred to the world's religions.

E - Security

(1) The television service in Israel will be put at the disposal of the armed forces, and police, for use in training and swift communication. Due to the peculiar topography of the country and the continued need for maintaining a high state of military readiness, it is agreed that television will provide an invaluable tool.

(2) Furthermore, the introduction of television transmissions will make available additional channels of communication, several of which can be exclusively used by the security forces.

F - Public Service

Since it is contemplated using low frequencies for telecasting, it will be possible, with some additional equipment, to relay on the same frequency band both telephone and telegraph messages at a lower cost than the installation of additional trunk lines. In other words, the mere establishment of a television service will prove a considerable saving to the Postal Authorities and simultaneously imporve the telephone and telegraph connections with every corner of the country. This fact will also take the burden off the Army Signal Corps, which at present provides the facilities for contact with many of the border and isolated settlements.

G - New Industry

(1) In a growing and developing country such as Israel, Television will provide new jobs for many skilled and unskilled workers.

Transmitters: Many engineers and technicians will be permanently employed at the transmitting stations and the relay stations.

Studio: Engineers, technicians and artists as well as administrative staff will find employment.

See Section on Method of OPERATION-Transmission

Assembly and Production: T.V. sets will be assembled and later manufactured in Israel. This will provide employment for many specialists and unskilled workers.

See Section on Method of Operation - MANUFACTURING

It is planned to develop other allied industries in conjunction with the manufacture of certain component parts for television sets. These and the T.V. sets will open up new export markets.

See Section METHOD OF OPERATION on Export and Allied Industries

H - Government Revenue

The government of Israel stands to benefit directly from the use of the television service by sharing the gross revenues.

I - Government Contact with Public

Television will provide the government of Israel with an ideal medium to communicate with the public and acquaint it with its activities, purposes and future plans. Only an audio-visual medium can bridge the gap which different languages and backgrounds impose.

As a mass medium of communication, television is unsurpassed as a means for reaching the individual as well as the group. Its immediacy and authenticity are most influential and potent forces when directed with a specific purpose at an intelligent audience.

METHOD OF OPERATION

The plan encompasses all the essential requirements for the introduction of a television service into Israel. It includes:

1. The establishment of transmission facilities and studios.
2. Assembly and manufacturing of receiving sets, and their distribution.
3. Programming.

It may prove advisable to set up three separate, subsidiary companies to manage the above services. Such an arrangement may facilitate the acquisition of financial support and technical aid from backers engaged in these various fields in this country and elsewhere. It may also simplify negotiations with the Government of Israel as regards problems of monopoly and control.

Studios and Transmitting Stations.

The main transmitter and studios will be set up in the Tel Aviv area, with two satellite transmitters, one in Jerusalem, and one in the vicinity of Haifa.

This would give us ample grade A and B coverage to supply programs to approximately one and a quarter million people.

The approximate cost of this phase of the operation will be $500,000.oo.*

See Map and Appendix_____TRANSMISSION

Receiving Sets-Manufacture:

To make receiving sets available to as many people as want them, we have determined that a local assembly plant, using imported component parts as well as some locally manufactured parts, could satisfy our needs. We could contract with one or more of the local established radio assembly plants, or set up our own.

* All estimates based on survey made by R.C.A.

Using the cost of 17" TV sets in the United States as a yardstick, our engineers have concluded that the total cost of each set in Israel should not exceed $100,000, ready for delivery.

(See Appendix_____T.V. SETS MANUFACTURING)

A major proportion of the component parts will be purchased in Germany with funds made available from German reparations. These funds will be loaned to the "Corporation" by the "SHILUMIM" Reparation Authority for eight years at 4% interest. (This loan will be repayable in annual installments in Israeli currency).

See Appendix_____ Cost and Financing Breakdown.

Receiving sets:-Distribution

Investigation and analysis revealed that at least 50,000 sets could be distributed in Israel within two years. A further 50,000 sets are expected to be distributed in the succeeding years.

Instead of outright sale, we plan to lease out the sets at a rental of 10 Israel pounds (approximately $5.00) per month. This was found to be well within the means of the number of households stated above. A considerably higher rate will be charged public places such as hotels, restaurants, communal halls in villages and settlements, public bars, etc.

See Appendix_____DISTRIBUTION

Receiving sets:-Income.

The total income after the first two years from approximately 50,000 sets is estimated at 7,800,000 Israel pounds per year. It is our belief that this amount would suffice to cover all expenses of the operation and allow a margin of profit.

Cost of plan.

The total cost of our program is estimated at $7,000,000.

(See Appendix_____Cost and financing Breakdown.)

This figure includes the complete financing of the sets, the transmitting stations and equipment, studios, and at least one year"s operation.

Estimate of disbursements (Annual Budget)

Of the estimated gross income of 7,800,000 Israel Pounds per year, we anticipate the disbursements as follows:

1. 350,000 I.L. per year for stations and studios mainenance and personnel.

2. 700,000 I.L. per year for programming.

3. 1,500,000 I.L. per year for receiving sets and replacements insured by Lloyds of London.

4. 625,000 I.L. loan repayments to Reparation Authority. (this amount will be reduced every year.)

5. 200,000 I.L. approximate interest on loan. (this amount will be reduced every year)

6. 310,000 I.L. reserve fund.

7. 2,340,000 I.L. approximately, for taxes

8. 1,885,000 I.L. Corporation profits after taxes and loan amortization.

EDUCATIONAL TELEVISION FOR ISRAEL

In a commencement address delivered at Baylor University, Texas, on May 25, 1956, President Eisenhower stated:

> ... Many nations, though their cultures are ancient and rich in human values, do not possess the resources to spread the needed education throughout their populations. But they can wisely use help that respects their traditions and ways. For example, the whole free world would be stronger if there existed adequate institutions of modern techniques and sciences in areas of the world where the hunger for knowledge and the ability to use knowledge are unsatisfied because educational facilities are often not equal to the existing need ...
> ... We would gain new knowledge and wisdom out of the priceless values of another people's traditions and proud heritage. They would gain knowledge in the technical and scientific fields where we have had an earlier start ...

The present Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, then Governor of California, addressing a conference of educators in California in December 1952, on the subject of educational TV, stated:

> Science has placed at the disposal of the people a device the educational potentialities of which appear to be tremendous ... If such is the case, then the manner in which our generation uses such an opportunity -- for ourselves and for those who will follow us -- can be a measure of whether we are worthy of being the spiritual heirs of Jefferson, who regarded education as the 'resource most to be relied upon for ameliorating the condition, promoting the virtue, and advancing the happiness of man'.

These statements by President Eisenhower and Justice Warren convey eloquently the spirit and approach that notivate the present plan to create in Israel an educational TV system. A young democracy, poor in natural resources and established under trying conditions, Israel is compelled to avail itself of the most advanced scientific and technological methods and skills if it is to establish itself as a viable society. It must apply diligently the knowledge and the guidance available in the more developed lands.

The experience of the U.S. and other nations in the use of the audio-visual medium of TV has demonstrated the value of this medium in facilitating the handling and solution of educational and social problems in the new State. The goal of establishing in Israel a TV Service, with major emphasis on educational objectives, is justified not only by considerations of need and interest on the part of Israel, but also by the readiness of the country, in terms of already available educational and technical skills, to make the most effective use of the new medium. With a modest beginning in the form of outside assistance, financial and technical, it is felt that an efficient system of educational TV will be developed.

Goals and Applications of Educational TV in Israel

Israel is fundamentally a secular and western-oriented community, with an admixture of oriental cultural elements. Its basic social goals and standards are those of the western liberal states, whose influences are reflected in its institutions and mores, in the fields of education, medicine, and social services, and in its attitudes toward technical advancement, living and working conditions, the fostering of arts and sciences, and human rights.

In the effort to realize its national goals, however, it must cope with problems that are unique to its own historic and social situation. Perhaps its major problem is that of absorbing and integrating in the shortest possible time large groups of immigrants of the most diverse origins. To accomplish this with a minimum of material hardship and spiritual and psychological discomfort represents a major challenge. In this endeavor, Israel has much to learn from the American experience in protecting the rights of its many and diverse racial and ethnic groups to preserve those elements of their traditional cultures which they regard as valuable, in creating conditions whereby they may interact to their mutual enrichment, and in minimizing the inferiority feelings of the newer immigrant groups and easing their integration into the larger society.

In the past eight years, since the establishment of the new State in 1948, almost one million immigrants have been received into the country, most deriving from the countries of North Africa and the Middle East. Even if the present ethnic and cultural pattern were similar to that existing prior to 1948, complex problems of integration would exist. Though the pre-1948 group was predominantly European, it too was multi-national in character, deriving from Russia, Poland, Germany and elsewhere in Europe. The integration problem was rendered vastly more complicated after 1948, with the arrival of immigrant groups from Italy, Greece, Western Turkey and the Balkans, and in even larger numbers, Oriental immigrant groups from the Yemen, Iran, Iraq, Syria, Egypt and Morocco.

The varied and disparate cultural backgrounds of these immigrant groups, as anticipated, have produced forces contributing to separatism and tension. Though systematic programs have been instituted by the Israeli educational and social welfare institutions to deal with these problems, they will not be easily and speedily resolved. In this connection, the following definition of the stake of American social welfare agencies in the success of the educational TV movement in the U.S. applies equally to Israel:

> Every educational, cultural and social welfare agency in these communities has a common stake in the results. In today's complex society all these have a basic motivation - to give the public a fuller understanding of community needs and the purposes and activities of community agencies in endeavoring to meet such needs. Educational television can also provide a private line to family members in their homes, where health, recreation, education and personal aspiration are direct and immediate questions. (Report of Committee on Non-Commercial Educational Television of the National Social Welfare Assembly, 1953)

We indicate briefly some problems in the field of education and social relationships to the solution of which an effective Educational TV Service can usefully contribute.

1. An obvious but important problem is that of language. Hebrew, the official language of the country, must be taught to immigrants whose native tongues comprise most of the languages of the world. The teaching of proper Hebrew diction is a widespread need. In some cases, particularly those of the Orientals, it is often necessary to teach not only reading and writing in Hebrew, but to teach these skills for the first time in any language. This is especially true in the case of the Oriental woman. And even when reading ability exists among the Oriental immigrants, it is generally necessary to improve reading comprehension.

2. In the field of employment and occupation, tensions among the different immigrant groups exist for reasons not unlike those which have prevailed in the U.S. and other immigrant-receiving countries. For example, the more lucrative occupations have tended to be filled by the earlier immigrants - In Israel, these are the Europeans - and the less desirable positions by the more recent immigrants - In Israel, the Orientals. This normal development has been aggravated by the lack among the Oriental immigrants of the skills required in the small-scale factory economy of the country. To an even greater extent, the Orientals have lacked the training and skills necessary to fill professional and white collar positions. Thus, they have tended to seek employment in the unskilled occupations, while the Europeans have been more prominently represented in business, the professions, government and white collar enterprises.

This problem requires, among other things, intensive programs of vocational education and retraining if the unity and favorable development of the nation is not to be impeded.

3. A problem of vital importance in Israel is that of rural settlement. For economic and social reasons the establishment of agriculture settlements - private, cooperative and collective - has constituted a central objective of national planning. The paucity of natural resources, the dessication of the soil over centuries and even millenia of neglect, confronts the nation with challenging economic problems. Economic viability requires the development of a society properly balanced between small-scale industry and agriculture, between urban and rural settlement. In the years ahead, therefore, national planning must be directed, in addition to developing of an adequate industrial base, to reclaiming near-desert and desert areas by the establishment of a net-work of farm settlements.

Efforts along these lines have met, for various reasons, with great difficulties. One is the urban origin of both the European and Oriental immigrants and their consequwnt lack of agricultural skills and the psychological attitudes required for rural living. An aspect of the latter is the feeling of cultural and social isolation experienced by the rural settlers, particularly in the border areas.

Television's potential in this area is demonstrated by the experiments conducted in 1954 and 1955 in a number of rural communities in France. These projects, which were undertaken with the cooperation of UNESCO, have proved so successful that they are now being emulated in Japan and Southern Italy.

The French experiment took form of TV programs focused on a serious French national problem - theneed for modernisation of agriculture and the raising of rural living standards. The gains reported from the project included: providing a source of information on practical subjects of various kinds - up-to-date agricultural technique, hygiene, domestic economy; opening a window on the outside world; awakening interest in cultural activity - theater, concerts; creating links between people through shared activity.

The Israel TV Service will seek to benefit from the experiences and findings of the French and other experiements in the use of TV for fural education. It will endeavor to develop programs aimed at reducing the feeling of isolation of the rural settlers and, in general, at rendering rural living more gratifying.

4. Problems of prejudice are difficult to avoid in any multi-national society despite earnest efforts to deal with them. Such negative attitudes or stereotypes as may exist in Israel among different groups with respect to one another will no doubt disappear or be modified in the process of living together and sharing common experiences, particularly in the case of the children of the immigrants. Experience bears out the positive results of such sharing of experiences. As an example, a major factor in the integration of the Yemenite Jews into the national life, their positive relationship with the European elements in the population, and their capacity to share in community responsibilities during the trying post-1948 years, was in considerable measure due to the common school experiences shared by the Yemenite and European children in pre-1948 period.

At the present time, through intercultural programs and educational projects of various kinds, efforts are being made in Israel to promote harmonious living through mutual understanding. The potentialities of Educational TV for enhancing these efforts are considerable.

5. The different immigrant groups naturally brought to the country a wide range of food preferences and dietary habits. In a country with serious economic problems, resulting from a limited food supply, it is obvious that the diversity in food habits would have economic implications. Moreover, the diet of some of these groups fall short of proper hygienic and nutritional standards, and give rise to public health problems. Educational TV will enhance greatly current programs for modifying dietary patterns and improving nutritional standards.

6. In the 1954 report of the Ford Foundation, the latter's Public Affairs program is described as having the following two-fold objective: "To encourage in the individual citizen an active concern with the affairs of his community, the nation and the world; and to assist him in gaining greater understanding of the issues and forces by which the quality of his government is determined." This statement defines also a central objective of the government and institutions of Israel.

Although Israel is a politically alert society, with numerous political parties and active citizen involvement in community affairs, voting and participation in political life are new experiences for substantial elements in the population.

Again, TV can contribute greatly in the effort to develop an informed and responsible citizenry.

7. The basic Israel education law provides for universal, compulsory, and free elementary education for both sexes from the ages of 6 to 14. In the main, with certain variations, the school curricula, as well as extra-curricula programs are constructed on western models. For this and other reasons, the European child tends to function better in the school environment than the Oriental child. Moreover, the home environment of the Oriental child dis-advantages him in comparison with the European child, from the standpoint of home-school cooperation in such matters as regularity of attendance, parental help in doing homework, duties imposed on children in the home, etc.

A particularly acute problem in Israel is the shortage of teachers and other educational personnel as well as of classroom facilities.

Appropriately adapted to the educational setting of Israel, Educational TV can contribute greatly to the advancement of the educational process in Israel.

Classroom Instruction

The usefulness of the TV medium in connection with classroom instruction, notwithstanding many obstacles and unresolved problems, has been substantiated by the experience of the U.S. and other countries. The Israel TV Service will be guided by these experiences, emulating those which have proved themselves and avoiding others which have failed. As an example, it will take cognisance of the stricture that TV education may prove useless unless supported by adequate preparatory and skilled follow-up activity on the part of the teacher.

The manner and form in which TV programs for classroom use will be produced and utilized in Israel will be evolved in consultation and collaboration with local educational and other appropriate institutions. Though the body of existing experience in other countries will serve as its starting point, the Israel TV Service will, of course, introduce its own innovations on the basis of local needs and opportunities.

The impressive record of the City of Philadelphia in the classroom use of TV suggests programs and themes that will be attempted in Israel. Programs more-presented in the schools of that city have had, among others, the following purposes: to improve the learning of arithmetic on the part of beginning pupils; to enhance appreciation of the arts by upper elementary and secondary school pupils; to provide guidance to teenagers in manners, morals and social behavior; to provide information on nutrition, posture and first aid; to acquaint pupils with the concepts of modern science; to provide information and insights regarding the workings of democracy and various aspects of community life; to promote understanding of and positive attitudes of other nations and cultures. Subjects covered in direct teaching programs have included: science, social studies, literature, foreign languages, art and music appredation, health educationa and safety training, vocational guidance and social behavior.

The gains reported from the programs presented in Philadelphia and other American cities suggest some of the very benefits that would be sought in Israel: stimulating children to seek supplementary reading and to request field trips to places seen on TV; impressing children with the importance of good diction, grammar and vocabulary; bringing current events into the classroom and thus stimulating the child's sense of living and participating in a real world despite the physical remoteness of events; giving pupils the stimulus of variety and a welcome relief from the habitual teacher; enabling sick or incapacitated children confined to the home to maintain the continuity of their education; making possible the presentation of scientific experiments and demonstrations in large and well-equipped laboratories to schools lacking such facilities; multiplying by many times the teaching power of one good teacher, film or demonstration; reducing time needed to instruct the teachers themselves in new methods and techniques; enabling the parents, via home receivers, to "visit" children in their classrooms, and in this manner to keep in tune with the children's own educational experiences. The latter benefit, which is especially important in Israel, will be facilitated under the "open" circuit system of the Israel TV Service.

Adult Education

Referring to the 1952 decision of the Federal Communications Commission to make available a large number of channels for non-commercial TV, the 1953 report of the National Social Welfare Assembly observed that "the Commission's action was hailed by educators and community leaders as a step which would give education in this country a powerful new dimension - extending the boundaries of organized learning from the classroom and community meeting to the fireside of the home..."

The Israel TV Service proposes to exhibit this "powerful new dimension" not only for classroom instruction, but also for extra-classroom education for both school-age children and for adults.

The experience of the U.S. and other countries has demonstrated that TV can be a powerful instrument for providing the adult population with information and insights into the democratic process. It can report on activities of governmental and other agencies affecting public interest. It can deal dramatically but nevertheless objectively with the range of problems facing the community, the nation and the world. It can enrich the daily life of the individual by promoting understanding of the natural sciences and humanities, by encouraging constructive use of leisure time through demonstration of hobbies.

It can offer, in cooperation with local educational institutions, programs on psychology and child-rearing, preventive medicine and health, science and engineering, political science and citizenship, history and geography, home-making and consumer education, agriculture and current affairs. It can enable social welfare organizations to reach selected audiences throughout the community with information and activities of special interest. It can meet, by well-conceived programs, the varying interests and needs of housewives, businessmen, physicians, lawyers, organized workers and farmers.

In the case of both the school-age and adult phases of the program, the Israel TV Service will make provision at the outset for testing and measuring the effectiveness of its programs. In this connection, the cooperation of research groups from foreign universities and institutions in the U.S. and other countries, as well as from governmental and intergovernmental agencies, such as UNESCO, in studying the successes and failures of the program, will be welcomed and sought.

APPENDIX 1 TRANSMISSION

Area I (See map): Population approximately 750,000.

The area to be covered will be capsule-shaped, extending approximately 47 miles in each direction North and South of Tel Aviv.

This would provide an optimum location for the main transmitter and the studios.

A tower of approximately 600 feet would be located a little to the North of Tel Aviv.

It is recommended that we use a 12-bay superturnstile antenna, using a capsule-shaped radiation pattern, which is ideally suited for the elongated geography of Israel.

This radiation system will be fed with 2 kilowatts of power, and will provide the equivalent of FCC grade "A" and "B" coverage to approximately 47 miles in the direction of maximum gain of this antenna, which would be oriented toward Haifa.

This same signal intensity will be found in the direction exactly opposite to Haifa, since the radiation pattern of this antenna is symmetrical, and has a gain of approximately 24.7 in the two opposite directions.

With this transmitting system, it will be possible to receive a television signal with clarity from almost every location within Israel, with the exception of areas whose line of sight path to the antenna at Tel Aviv is obstructed by hills and irregular terrain conditions.

Both at Jerusalem and Haifa, which are large and important population centers, obstructions exist. It is, therefore, planned to construct satellite transmitters in both areas, designated as area II and area III, which will be fed by the signal radiated from the Tel Aviv tower and picked up on nearby dominating hills.

Area II: Population approximately 250,000.

The area to be covered will be an approximate circle of 15 miles radius, centering at a point Northwest of Nazareth. This area will be fed by a rebroadcast receiver with an off-the-air pickup with high gain antenna, plus a TVM-1A microwave relay, powered by a 100 Watt transmitter (TTL-100A Type), including a slot-antenna.

Area III: Population approximately 150,000.

This will include the Jerusalem built-up area, and as many points to the West of it as practical.

This area will be fed by the same equipment as Area II.

Both satellite transmitters will rebroadcast the identical programs originating in Tel Aviv.

Studios

The Tel Aviv studios will require facilities for control, film projection, live pickup and remote pickup.

Control facilities include sync generators, switching equipment, monitoring equipment, turntables, loudspeakers, and other audio equipment and various accessories.

For the medium-sized installation that we contemplate, the cost of the control equipment is estimated at $17,000.

Film projection and pickup facilities include special television-type projectors, optical multiplexers, slide-projectors, film camera chains, editing and accessory equipment. For our requirements, the cost for this equipment is estimated at $22,000.

We are planning on two live stages, including lighting equipment, special audio equipment, additional switching equipment, etc. The cost of this equipment is estimated at $86,000, which will include four live image orthicon cameras.

We are also including the addition of remote pickup equipment and kinescope equipment. The cost of each type of equipment is estimated at approximately $35,000, plus $15,000 for a specially-designed mobile truck unit to house the remote pickup equipment. In our estimate of costs of the transmitting equipment, we budgeted $50,000 for the above items to allow for a later decision as to whether either one or both will be required at the early stages of our operation. There is an additional amount set aside in case it is decided to acquire both items from the outset.

	$500,000

APPENDIX 2 T.V. SETS: MANUFACTURING

Television receiving sets will be made available through three phases:

1. Importation and distribution of 5,000 sets to coincide with the inception of broadcasting.

2. Assembly of efficient standard receivers in Israel. Most of the component parts are to be procured abroad;
a) from a licensing organization and open market in the U.S., (such as picture tubes and some non-standard components);
b) from Germany, (such as non-standard and standard components, i.e., resistors, capacitors and vacuum tubes).

Some parts are already manufactured in Israel, (i.e., coils, transformers, cabinets, etc.), consisting of about 20% of the total.

3. With the gradual introduction of automatic machinery into Israel for the manufacturing of non-standard parts, the importation from the U.S. could be reduced to picture tubes only (15% of cost), while all other parts can be procured in Germany.

In this connection, it is important to note that a large factory in Jerusalem has placed orders for machinery to manufacture vacuum tubes. It is expected to be in production within the next two or three years.

During the second phase, research and development facilities will be set up to draft detailed plans for the manufacture of high quality control system components, defense electronic items, instrumentation devices and high quality test equipment.

See Appendix ___ EXPORT AND ALLIED INDUSTRIES.

APPENDIX 4 DISTRIBUTION

Our estimate of 50,000 immediate customers for our television sets is based on the following facts:

1. As of 1955, there were approximately 260,000 radio sets in the hands of private people, as compared with 146,000 in 1950.

2. As of 1955, 631,000 individuals were earning an income, out of a total population of 1,717,834.

3. The national income per capita in 1955 was $520.00, an increase of 10% over the previous year. This figure was reached after allowing for price increases.

4. The distribution of the population as of December 31, 1954, fell into the following categories:

   Urban- 1,210,769
   Rural- 507,065

5. It is estimated that of the urban population, the average family spends over 20 L.I. per month ($10.00) on outside entertainment such as movies, cafés, etc. This creates a potential market for our television sets of approximately 400,000 family units.

6. The installment purchase or rental of household equipment is very common in Israel. The main reason being that, whereas the average Israeli household is not in a position to lay out a lump sum of money for any individual purchase, the need and the desire to maintain a high standard of living is very great.

7. Our method of leasing the television sets on an annual basis for a monthly fee of 10 L.I. ($5.00) is the most practical inasmuch as the public is used to such methods. It will also make the sets available to a broader market.

APPENDIX 4 DISTRIBUTION (cont'd)

8. We are also planning to make sets available for purchase at the retail cost of approximately 750 I.L., which will cover our requirements on the basis of a five year amortization.

9. In 1955, the National Income amounted to 1,750,000,000 I.L. This represents 2,773 I.L. per working person or approximately 231 I.L. per working person per month.

10. We have interviewed individuals in Israel, representing a cross-section of the population, and have invariably received the answer that television will be extremely popular and that the monthly fee will be readily available.

APPENDIX 5 EXPORT AND ALLIED INDUSTRIES

EXPORT

In view of the ever-increasing use of television all over the world, and the known plans of many countries to embark upon television broadcasting in the near future, we look forward to a substantial export of television sets. This is particularly true of countries with which Israel has trade agreements. When a Middle East settlement is achieved, a large additional market will be opened in the many neighboring countries. Even relatively poor countries are, at present, planning installation or expansion of broadcasting facilities.

This trend is inevitable, and in itself, provides a weighty reason for Israel not to remain behind, inasmuch as, economically, a television industry promises to be an asset rather than a luxury.

Since our plan is to broadcast on the International Standard adopted in July, 1950 by the C.C.I.R. (Comité Consultatif International des Radiocommunications), our sets will be manufactured to receive signals on this standard. The following countries have adopted the International Standard and have already started or have definite plans to start broadcasting in the immediate future:

Australia	Italy	Spain
Austria	Netherlands	Sweden
Denmark	Norway	Switzerland
Egypt	Portugal	Turkey
Finland
West Germany
Iraq

In addition, East Germany is, at present, considering conversion to the International Standard; India, which has plans to start work on a television service in 1957, is most likely to adopt the above standard.

APPENDIX 5 EXPORT AND ALLIED INDUSTRIES (cont'd)

The figures compiled by RETMA indicate that the approximate cost of television receivers in the above countries ranges between $200 and $400.

On the basis of the above and other data, we have reached the following conclusions:

1. In view of Israel's geoggaphic and economic position, and in view of the trends of future television broadcasting in Europe and Asia, the choice of the International Standard for Israel is both desirable and necessary.

2. There is little doubt that most countries in Europe and Asia will adopt the International Standard if and when planning television services.

3. The present natural and most likely markets for television receivers manufactured in Israel have few transmitting facilities and are planning on future expansion. Many of them already have trade agreements with Israel.

4. The prospects for export markets are favorable if Israel can export a standard, reliable receiver at about $225.00. A sharp rise in demand is expected between 1959 and 1960.

5. The only important competitors, at present, are West Germany and the Netherlands, who manufacture International Standard sets in any quantity. Both, even now, are discouraging barter trade. The productive capacity of Phillips, in the Netherlands, is limited, and West Germany is already faced with a labor shortage.

6. Even not discounting the competition, it is expected that the output of an Israeli Electronic industry will find a favorable market in those countries in Europe, Asia and Africa which are primarily raw material suppliers and which suffer from a shortage of hard currency.

In some instances it is expected to offer television receivers on a lease basis through a contract with local broadcasters. Such agreements would enable areas, which cannot afford television, at present, to embark upon television broadcasting with little initial outlay of capital.

7. Present European television models are about three years behind U.S. models in design efficiency. Employing U.S. manufacture and design techniques to accomplish our objective, will place Israeli industry at a considerable advantage.

ALLIED INDUSTRIES

Once the assembly and manufacturing of sets in Israel is established, we shall embark upon the following activities:

1. Sub-contracting of portions of projects from electronic manufacturers abroad, including the U.S. This will be made possible by the organization of a small and capable research staff, an asset which even now is available in Israel.

2. Electronic production for industries at home and abroad. This will include: control system components, instrumentation facilities for industrial plants and scientific institutions, closed circuit television, etc.

3. Production for defense. This will include: radar components, closed circuit television used successfully by the U.S. Army, communication equipment, aircraft instruments, etc.

4. Experience in the U.S. has proven that considerable profit is to be had from custom electronic products (for hospitals, factories, etc.). This requires flexibility of manufacturing facilities and an adequate technical staff. This phase will prove to be a large source of hard currency.

The meteoric rise in the consumption and use of electronic products in the U.S. and Western Europe, since the second World War, forecasts an ever-increasing market. The future prospects of Asian and African markets are incalculable. In this connection, it is important to note that India, for instance, is at present making a supreme effort to modernize and expand its industries with a very inadequate technical staff.

Our estimates of the potentials of an electronic industry in Israel are also partially based on the fact that the raw material consumed by such an industry forms a very small portion of production costs. The major investment is skilled labor, competent engineering, and imaginative design talent, of which Israel already has a considerable reserve and potential abundance.

Eldersveld, A M.

December 9, 1957

Dear Mr. Eldersveld:

I regret that I cannot answer your query in detail. I did not cover the establishment of the United Nations and did not return from a prolonged absence abroad until 1946.

Certainly Senator Vandenberg was an effective public speaker. The reasons were at least three. He was endowed with a good voice and wrote his own copy, and he believed what he said. Incidentally, he once told me his famous speech on the floor of the Senate, reversing his previous position was written on his own portable typewriter in less than two hours, although he had spent many weeks thinking about it.

Sorry I have not sufficient time to write you in more detail. I assume you are familiar with the incident which occurred during the 1936 campaign, when Senator Vandenberg attempted a debate with the recorded voice of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. A. M. Eldersveld

My dear Mr. Murrow:

My reading informs me that you were personally acquainted with the late Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, and that you were involved as a news analyst and radio commentator in covering the establishment of the United Nations. It is your personal observations and candid opinions of Senator Vandenberg with which this letter is concerned.

I am writing a doctoral dissertation at the University of Michigan. I hope to be able to present a rhetorical analysis of Senator Vandenberg's speaking on significant United Nations' issues, and evaluate the effectiveness of his speech style. In accomplishing this task, I'm sure you will agree that the opinions of a distinguished authority in the field of international affairs will lend invaluable credance to such a study. Therefore, I am hopefully submitting the following questions for your consideration:

1. What significant contributions to the United Nations can we credit to the late Senator Vandenberg?

2. Can the nature of United States' foreign policy, 1942-1950, be attributed in any degree to the efforts and influence of Senator Vandenberg's bipartisan leadership?

3. Do you consider Senator Vandenberg to be an effective public speaker? Why?

I realize that public servants frequently are faced with requests of this type, and therefore apologize for this additional imposition on your already busy schedule. I hope that at your convenience you may find time to favor me in reply.

Respectfully yours,

A. M. Eldersveld

The Battle for the Moon

Within the next few weeks an unmanned United States rocket may escape from the earth's gravitational pull and crash-land on the moon. This possibility has been disclosed by scientists connected with the Air Force Operation "Far Side" in which four-stage rockets are being launched from a balloon-supported platform at 100,000 feet.

The project name "Far Side" refers to the opposite side of the moon which is never seen from the earth.

An integral part of the Air Force project is a plan to launch rockets which will circle the moon, relaying television camera pictures of its entire surface back to the earth.

Similar plans aimed at landing a manned rocket on the moon also have been announced by Radio Moscow.

Because of the moon's importance as a military space base, both the United States and Russia are engaged in a battle to win control of the moon. The seriousness of this battle was recently emphasized by Thomas R. Henry, veteran science editor of the Washington STAR. In an article on plans for a moon base, Mr. Henry said he had been given a prediction by an Air Force major general "that the great battle of the next world war probably would be between spaceships for occupation of the moon."

For several years scientists and space travel planners have delivered solemn warnings on the importance of a moon base. In general, their views coincide with that of space travel author Willy Ley as stated in an article entitled "Possibilities For An Invasion Base On the Moon." In this article Mr. Ley said that the aggressor who first sets up bases on the moon can control not only the earth but the planets of the solar system.

Because of the moon's lighter gravitational pull (about one-sixth that of the earth) it would be relatively easy to launch H-bomb rockets and guide them to earth targets.

Most of the space experiments today have as their first major goal the landing of a manned spaceship on the moon. This includes research into effects of cosmic rays in space, weightlessness, space navigation, meteor bombardment, and the physiological and psychological factors involved in space flight.

The battle between the United States and Russia now includes intensive search for new propulsion systems. Methods under study include the use of atomic power, a photon (light beam) drive, tapping vast amounts of electric power in our higher atmosphere, and use of artificial gravity (G-field) power.

If either nation achieves a breakthrough, it could assure an early production of spaceships for moon operations. A lead of five years could be disastrous from the loser's viewpoint. Even two or three years might permit the winning country to build a permanent base and set up missile defenses that would prevent another nation's spaceships from landing.

Unless such a base were successfully attacked by the opponent's spaceships, before its defenses could be fully built up, an aggressor could build launching sites for missiles to attack the earth. Domination of this world by threat would then be relatively easy.

For these reasons, the scores of Government agencies, private researchers and manufacturers involved in space travel plans are working at top speed to win the battle for the moon.

Even these groups disagree on the probable date for the first moon landing. A few months ago one Air Force authority predicted the operation of a manned moon rocket in less than five years. (A breakthrough on propulsion could reduce this considerably.) A few noted scientists still refuse to agree that the moon will be occupied, but the majority go along with the opinion of Dr. I. M. Levitt, Director of the Franklin Institute planetarium in Philadelphia.

"By the year 2000," says Dr. Levitt, "trips from space stations circling the earth will be made to the moon and the nearest planets. . . Unless a new exotic form of rocket fuel is uncovered, scientists may be compelled to use the moon with its low gravitational field as the stepping stone to the planets."

Dr. Levitt makes an interesting suggestion in regard to a water supply and the creation of an atmosphere on the moon. Scientists now agree, he says, that these can be manufactured on the moon.

Trapped in the moon's rocky crust, he explains, are water molecules. Also iron, carbon, silicon, aluminum and magnesium are elements we can expect to find; and some of the magnesium silicates contain as much as 10% water.

"With sufficient energy," Dr. Levitt states, "the water can be extracted. Also it can be broken up into the oxygen atom and the hydroxyl molecule—affording free oxygen for an atmosphere."

Dr. Levitt envisions the use of tremendous plastic domes under which human, animal and vegetable life can exist in a moon-made atmosphere. This will eliminate the use of space suits with oxygen supplies such as would now be necessary for man to exist on the moon, he states.

The Philadelphia astronomer envisions an unmanned trip to the moon within five years. But there is strong evidence that this may happen within months, if not weeks, though the achievement may not be publicly announced.

It is known that operation "Far Side" rockets will almost achieve escape velocity. They may actually attain this speed and streak on into space, free of the earth's pull.

These four-stage rocket tests recall earlier plans by Dr. Fritz Zwicky, noted rocket designer, to fire small "artificial meteors" from high altitude balloons. Dr. Zwicky announced that some of the "meteors" would hit the moon, Mars, Venus and other planets. He also stated—without a detailed explanation—that some projectiles hitting the moon or a planet might set off a nuclear reaction.

The new Air Force tests with large rockets have inevitably revived the discussion caused by Dr. Zwicky's plans. If the UFOs are spaceships, it is suggested possibly an operating base has been set up on the moon—just as the United States and the Russians are trying to do.

What would be the reaction to an earth launched rocket hitting the moon—or orbiting it for observations?

First of all, there is no proof that any such base exists on the moon, despite occasional reports of strange lights, the small widely noted white "domes" and the so-called "moon bridge" over which a controversy has raged since 1953.

Most of the lights have been explained by astronomers as meteors flashing on impact. The "domes" reported by several noted astronomers, including Dr. Gerard Kuiper, remain unexplained—though most professional astronomers believe they are natural formations.

The "moon bridge," confirmed as a real object by the well known English lunar expert, Dr. H. Percy Wilkins, has been called an unexplained natural phenomenon and also an optical illusion.

In 1953 Dr. Wilkins broadcast a report on BBC in London in which he stated that the bridge was real, that it arched some 5000 feet above the Mare Crisium, and that it looked artificial—"almost like an engineering job."

Later, after a furore developed over his statements, Dr. Wilkins explained that he considered the bridge a natural object, but he did not retreat from his claim that it was real.

(A detailed discussion of the "moon bridge" and Dr. Wilkins' analysis will appear in a later issue.)

UFO Encounter Convinces Airline Captain, Former Skeptic

A two-minute encounter with a UFO, which quickly changed a skeptic to a believer, was recently revealed by Captain W. J. Hull, veteran pilot for Capital Airlines. Prior to his experience, which occurred as his airliner neared Mobile, Alabama, Captain Hull was widely known among pilots for his negative views on flying saucers.

In a 1953 article for THE AIRLINE PILOT entitled "The Obituary of the Flying Saucers" Hull accepted Dr. Donald Menzel's natural phenomena explanation for the UFO's. Later he agreed to a re-examination of the evidence, but his dramatic report was the first hint that he had accepted the UFO's as machines of an unknown type.

For over six months Captain Hull withheld the facts from publication, then he released the story to Civilian Saucer Intelligence, New York, of which he is a member. It is printed here by special permission of CSI.

On the night of November 14, 1956, Captain Hull was flying a Viscount four-engine turboprop airliner from New York to Mobile, over a layer of occasionally broken clouds which enabled him to get a look at the ground only occasionally.

"At 10:10 p.m. EST," states Capt. Hull, "we were only about 60 miles from Mobile when my co-pilot, Peter MacIntosh, and I saw what we thought was a brilliant meteor. We were flying south-southwest and it fell across our path from left to right, first becoming visible at the top of the windshield.

"The Viscount has wonderful visibility upward.

"It decelerated rapidly, just as any meteor does when entering the denser layers of the earth's lower atmosphere. We expected to see it burn out with the customary flash which pilots often see, but it abruptly halted directly in front of us!

"It was an intense blue-white light, approximately seven or eight times as bright as Venus when this planet is at its brightest magnitude.

"Pete shouted, 'What the hell is it, a jet?'"

The co-pilot's first thought was that the object had been a diving jet fighter, turning away from the airliner, and in departing giving the pilots "a view right up its glowing tailpipe." But Capt. Hull knew this could not be the answer. He had often seen the glow of jet tailpipes at night. This was not the right color, nor did it grow smaller in size. Instead, it remained in front of the plane, keeping a regular interval.

"I quickly grabbed my microphone," said the Captain, "and called the Mobile Control Tower.

"Bates Tower, this is Capital 77. Look out toward the north and east and see if you can see a strange white light hovering in the sky."

The answer came quickly: "Capital 77, this is Mobile Bates Tower. We are unable to see much of the sky because of a thick cloud cover. Do you think the object is in our vicinity?"

"Affirmative," replied Hull. "It looks like a brilliant white light bulb about one-tenth the size of the moon. It is directly ahead of us and at about our altitude or slightly higher. We are right over Jackson and have descended to 10,000 feet. Please initiate a call to Brookley Field Tower and ask the controller if he can see it on their big radarscope."

The Brookley AFB, twenty miles southeast of Bates Field, was on a military frequency which the Viscount was not equipped to work on its transmitter.

Immediately after this radio exchange the UFO began to maneuver, darting back and forth, rising and falling, making extremely sharp turns, sharper than any known aircraft, sometimes changing direction 90 degrees in an instant. All during this display the color remained a steady brilliant bluish-white, not growing or diminishing in size at all.

"MacIntosh and I sat there completely flabbergasted at this unnerving exhibition," Captain Hull's report continues. "I thought of calling the passengers over the public address system, but the object was dead ahead of us and putting on its performance in an area whose arc was not large enough to enable anybody in the cabin to get a view of it out the side windows."

After a half minute or more of this strange flight, the UFO suddenly stopped and hovered again.

About this time, Bates Tower called back.

"Capital 77, we are trying to raise the Brookley Tower."

At this moment the UFO again began another series of "crazy gyrations, lazy 8's, square chandelles," weaving with a sort of rythmic cadence through the air. Then the object shot over the Gulf of Mexico, rising at an extremely steep angle and at such a fantastic speed that it diminished rapidly to a pinpoint, to disappear into the night.

According to Captain Hull, the most puzzling thing about the performance—lasting two minutes at least—was that the object had remained at the same distance from the plane throughout the exhibition.

"How do we know this?" says Hull. "It never increased in size, and yet we were bearing down on it at more than five miles a minute in the Viscount. If it was in view two minutes and performing in one area, we should have been at least ten miles closer to it. Now any object that flies certainly looks different when viewed at such a great variance in distance. So this UFO must have managed to remain at the same distance from us throughout the entire display."

Also, as Captain Hull points out, the Viscount was "above the clouds, precluding any reflections of searchlights from below.

"I have seen hundreds of advertising searchlights playing on clouds," Hull says, "and this was nothing remotely related. Likewise I am summarily ruling out aircraft (at least the ones we know), balloons, missiles, or any other earth-launched device within my ken. The one thing which I can't get over is the fact that when it came, it came steeply downward; when it departed after its amazing show, it went steeply upward! Now I ask you, is this machine based on the earth?

"I followed up on this spectacular sighting at Mobile. The control tower operators had reached Brookley after a slight delay, but the controller had seen nothing and since no night flights were in progress the surveillance radar had not been energized at the time."

Captain Hull did not report this sighting to the press. Not a word was printed about it until he revealed the details to John DuBarry, former associate editor of TRUE, which broke the first big flying saucer story in 1949. DuBarry is now president of CSI of New York. ●

MOON BATTLE from Page 20

Though there is no proof that any lunar base exists, it is not hard to estimate the effect if an earth launched rocket did hit the moon near such a base. Presumably the reaction would be similar to that on earth if a moon launched rocket struck near a military base or any populated area. It would probably be considered a hostile act and it could set off general hysteria.

The sight of an earth rocket orbiting the moon might be regarded as hostile—or merely as an act of peaceful observation.

It is doubtful that our armed forces would risk hitting the moon with a rocket if they believed that an advanced race had established a base there. The consequences could be serious.

Possibly operation "Far Side" will soon reveal whether the moon is as it is usually considered—a barren satellite devoid of even the lowest form of vegetable life—or that there is evidence of its use as a space base.

But even aside from this speculative angle, the present race for the moon remains deadly serious. It is a battle the outcome of which may affect the lives of everyone on this earth, turning the moon into an armed fortress—or a peaceful colony dedicated to opening up new vistas to earthbound humans. ●

Dear Mr. Murrow:-

For years I have been dying of curiosity to know whether you are the man who, with a few others, was invited to participate in a meeting in Rome in April 1935, to dicuss plans with Mr. Hendrick Christian Anderson concerning his idea of a World Center City of Communication.

I remember Dr. Everett Clinchy, Dr. Morris Lazarus of Baltimore, and one other American besides myself, whom I believe was you, but do not remember meeting you, or the man with similar name.

Mr. Anderson died several years ago, and, in 1953 I visited his sister, Miss Lucia Anderson at the same villa where they both lived in 1935, at via Mancini. At that time, Miss Anderson presented me with an enormous volume containing Mr. Andersons project which never developed, and this book weighing twenty pounds was sent back to my home here in Torrington. I understand that there are only eight of these volumes, and I wonder just why I should be so honored to receive one, but I still have it, of course, in it's large box.

If you are still interested to read on, in Last September's copy of Harper's Bazaar, there was an article and pictures about Hendrick C. Anderson and his friend Henry James, based on seventy seven letters written between 1899 and 1915 by James to HCA, and they have only recently been published. The author is Michael Swan, and, when I sent the copy to Miss Anderson, her reply was that she had never known that it had been printed, and was grateful for it, although the article said, "the letters quoted in the article are used by kind permission of the Henry James Estate and Miss Lucia Anderson"

My visit to Italy in 1935 was long before the travel business. I took the place of Grace Morrison Poole, the (then) President of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and all quite by accident was my trip arranged for me, through Miss Beatrice Beecher of New York who was handling the delegates from this country. I met her when I was one of the hostesses at the Herald Tribune Forum in 1934, which was an invitational affair to prominent club women.

My husband was President of the Torrington Mfg. Company until his sudden death in 1944, and in 1946 I went to work for the first time in my life and have quite a success (much to my surprise) of the travel business.

Knowing how very busy you are, please do not bother to answer ~~thi~~ this if you are not the man who went to Italy to learn more about this idea of Mr. Anderson's only to have Mussolini, at the time, sending troops to Ethiopia right under our noses, which stopped the conference we all went to attend, and sent us home pronto.

Very truly yours,

Margaret H. Ellis

(Mrs. Henry G. Ellis)

PS. Sorry I have never seen you or heard you on T.V. and the reason is because Torrington gets one channel only, which is #8, through New Haven.

Dear Miss Efron:

I have your letter of October 18th, and do indeed remember the pleasant conversation we had when you interviewed me for the profile in LOOK.

I regret to say that there are no jobs open in my own shop, but I sympathize with your desire to return to the kind of journalism you knew formerly.

I shall be glad to talk with you about it. Perhaps you would like to call my office someday to set up an appointment.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

We met, about a year and a half ago, when I interviewed you for a small and inadequate "profile" in LOOK. Perhaps you remember me--if only because I'm Alex and Sarah Kendrick's niece....

Anyhow, I'm sitting across the street from you and pining. I've been Assistant Woman's Editor of LOOK for two years now, and would have left long ago had I not been hypnotized by a salary of ten thousand dollars a year. I have finally decided that this type of work is not for me--and that I want very much to return to meaningful journalism. I happen to share Alex's feeling very deeply, that you are one of the few people in the country who is doing work that is meaningful. And I would like very much to have a job with you.

My background is good. I was a staff writer on the N.Y. Times Magazine section for three year--reported and wrote on a great variety of subjects, from national economic problems, to funny personal essays, and portrait studies of personalities. (I am a good reporter.) I was a foreign correspondent (really a stringer) for Time and Life in the Caribbean, covered Haiti and Santo Domingo, for five years. I've published free lance articles in many major magazines, have written a book on Haitian society (which has so far appeared in chapters in British University magazines), and founded and edited a literary magazine in Haiti which publishes avant-garde literature in French and Creole. I have done many things, think I have done them all well.

May I see you one day when you are in town and it is convenient for you? While I can't afford to work for much less than I now make, I'd be willing to swap some income for a genuinely interesting job. And perhaps, if there is nothing in your own organization for which you think I'm suited, you might suggest whom else I could see.

I shall say a few novenas while awaiting your answer. If you want something besides an affectionate familial reference from Alex, I would refer you to Lester Markel, Sunday Editor of the Times, Edmund Wilson, Herbert Solow, Editor of Fortune, and... odd combination...Fleur Cowles, who is in New York now.

Yours sincerely,

Edith Efron

Alsop Says:

Arms Lag Warnings Met By Bored National Yawn

By STEWART ALSOP

WASHINGTON — Some very sensational statements have recently been made by the highest Air Force authorities, but hardly anybody has paid any attention to them at all. Consider the following brief samples:

Gen. Nathan Twining, Air Force Chief of Staff:

"(The Soviets) have long since passed us in quantity and they are making remarkable strides in quality."

Gen. Thomas D. White, Deputy Chief of Staff:

"They have been and are outproducing us in all categories but medium bombers. . . . Here is the area of deep concern — the Soviets are presently beating us at our own game — production. . . . The Communists are making scientific and technological advances at a faster rate than we are."

Lt. Gen. Thomas S. Power, Chief of the Air Research and Development Command: "With both quantitive and qualitative superiority on their side, we would lose the protection of the deterrent force and be at their mercy. This danger is very real and immediate."

What all three generals are saying, of course, is that the Soviet Union is rapidly outstripping the United States in strategic air power, the one field in which this country has heretofore enjoyed superiority. Surely it is no exaggeration to describe such warnings as sensational. Surely an official warning of "a very real and immediate danger" is nothing if not sensational.

Yet such warnings are met these days with a long, bored, national yawn. Why?

The question is worth asking, because the national indifference to such warnings is a vitally important phenomenon. There appear to be a number of inter-locking answers.

In the first place, there is a tendency to regard all generals as professional cryers of "wolf, wolf."

Certainly the services have sometimes been guilty of budget-minded scare-mongering. Yet, as Gen. Twining pointed out in his testimony, the Air Force has consistently underestimated Soviet progress in air power, and by a very wide margin, rather than the other way round.

Then there is the theory that "they don't really know — they're just guessing."

The theory is comfortable, but incorrect. When Twining testified recently that the Soviets were producing more than twice as many long range bombers as this country, and that they were already testing intermediate range missiles, he was not guessing. He knew.

How he knew may be none of the public's business. But the facts themselves are very much the public's business.

There is the equally comfortable theory that "we can't do anything about it anyway," which is equally incorrect. Assistant Secretary of the Air Force Trevor Gardner resigned essentially because of an official decision not to undertake the "crash" missile program he proposed. By the same token, to increase our long range bomber production at least to the Soviet level, as Gen. Curtis LeMay has strenuously advocated, would require a simple order to the Boeing plants. The order has not been given, entirely for budgetary reasons.

The plain fact is that the American government has officially decided to permit the Soviets to outstrip this country in strategic air power.

Many people refuse to worry about this decision, because Dwight D. Eisenhower is head of the American government. But Gen. Eisenhower's military experience was in a different field, and he himself has often disclaimed personal infallibility.

The President's military reputation is of course a major reason why the Administration's defense policies have been so mildly criticized.

Those who undertake to do so, like Sens. Stuart Symington and Henry Jackson, find themselves charged with "breaking security," becoming "prophets of gloom and doom," or simply playing politics. Critics of defense economies are also accused of wasteful war-mongering, since "there won't be another big war anyway" — which could be true, but only if we do not "lose the protection of the deterrent force."

But all this is not enough to explain the extraordinary public apathy in the face of such sensational warnings as those listed above. Unless the country has become so flabbily self-regarding as to be indifferent to the future, there must be something else as well — a failure of communication between the nation as a whole and those responsible for the national security.

As another report in this space will suggest, the failure seems to center in the system, which has grown up around the august, highly secret National Security Council.

Dear Mr Murrow:

I know that much time has elapsed since you have been in contact with Gordon, but with us it is different for we are a constant part of your audience and have been for some time.

We returned from a sojourn in Japan where Gordon was stationed at Camp Sendai for two years, after thirteen months of service as senior Intelligence adviser to ROKA in Korea. We are now at the above address as Gordon is temporarily attached to the Naval Amphibious Base, though still in the Army.

I have just listened with intense interest to your "See It Now" and learned more about Africa than I could possibly have done, unless actually traveling through the vast distances you covered. Am watching for the next showings. I feel, Mr Murrow, that it is a great privilege to be able to listen in, and that it is really wonderfully covered. I personally particularly needed the information regarding South Africa.

With much appreciation for what you are giving us every evening, and hoping to meet you sometime,

Congressman Clair Engle

DEMO ENGLE TOPS KNIGHT IN POLL

State's Water Problem Figured Importantly in Public's Political Ideas

BY MERVIN D. FIELD, Director, the California Poll

Democratic Congressman Clair Engle leads both Republican Gov. Knight and Mayor George Christopher of San Francisco in the race for the U.S. Senate.

And if the Republican primary battle for the Senatorial nomination were held today, Knight would win with a bare majority of votes.

Those are the findings of a State-wide sampling of bipartisan political thinking taken by the California Poll.

Immediately following Knight's dramatic withdrawal from the gubernatorial race and his announcement that he would run instead for Senator, California Poll opinion reporters interviewed a cross section of voters of both major parties in all parts of the State.

Engle-Knight Choice

Here's the question asked voters:

"If Goodwin Knight, Republican, were running against Clair Engle, Democrat, which one do you think you would vote for if you were voting today?"

Here's how it came out:

Engle (Dem.) 45%
Knight (Rep.) 42%
Undecided 13%

Engle's activities on the controversial California water question have gained him wide publicity. He has championed the cause of Federal development of water resources. Water problems promise to be a prominent issue in the election next year.

While Engle is popular in his own right, there is no doubt that much of his strength shown in this report is due to his Democratic Party affiliation.

Changes Plans

Knight's change of political intentions had been prophesied for several weeks before his actual entry into the Senatorial race. After first announcing that he would seek re-election as Governor, he encountered stiff opposition from Sen. Knowland, who also had his sights set on that office.

Surveys published by the

Turn to Page 5, Column 1

Engle Tops Knight in Cal. Poll

California Poll in February and in September of this year showed that Knowland had somewhat greater strength among Republicans than did Knight.

After reportedly heeding the urging of Republican Party leaders to withdraw from the gubernatorial race and avert a Republican schism, Knight made known his intention to run for Senator instead.

This brought strong protest from Christopher, another Republican contender for the Senatorial nomination, who claimed that Knight had vowed he would not run for Senator.

Smaller Scale

At this early stage Christopher is not as strong a candidate against Engle as is Knight, although he has not yet begun campaigning on the scale that the Governor has.

The vote line-up between Christopher and Engle when the two are opposed in a "trial heat" is as follows:

Engle (Dem.) 50%
Christopher (Rep.) .35%
Undecided 15%

Christopher's political star has risen rapidly. His main support today comes from Northern Californians, where he is best known. Whether his stature will grow or diminish on a Statewide scale as he debates political issues with his opponents remains to be seen.

Bare Majority

While Knight could win the Republican nomination for Senator if it were held today, he does so with only a bare majority.

When Republican voters in the poll's sample of Californians were asked, "Which of these three men would be your first choice if you were voting today for Senator?," they divided this way: Knight 51%, Christopher 26%, Engle 7%, and undecided 16%.

(This question resembles the primary ballot choices that Republicans will face if Engle cross-files.)

Analysis of the choices of these Republicans shows that only about half of the Christopher voters now say they would transfer their allegiance to Knight as a second choice. The result is that even if Knight were successful in winning the primary election, he would have to dig hard to muster backing from his own party.

His standing with Democrats is still substantial (23% of Democrats say they would vote for Knight against Engle).

Dear Mr. Murrow:

This is a protest; albeit a friendly one, it is still a protest. This is the second time you have been in the Middle East and you have avoided Turkey. Do we have to have a volcanic eruption to get you there?

In all modesty, the Middle East cannot do without Turkey. Even if you under-value the human aspect of the people that live on the Turkish peninsula, the compulsions of our geography and our history is such that Turkey must inevitably find herself in the center of the stream of Middle Eastern affairs. As a matter of fact, without "volcanic eruption", in our quiet undramatic way, we can prevail upon the course of the stream.

Consequently, in our overall assessment of the Middle Eastern scene, Turkey's position calls for some attention. That is why I have been trying to get you to Ankara, and that is why we will sabotage all the media of communications next time you fly in that direction unless you make a point of stopping in Turkey and put your hands on the pulse of the Turkish people.

It is too long since I have talked with you. Could we have lunch sometime after Thanksgiving?

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I would like to tell you that the program on "England After Suez" was one of the finest programs I have ever had the privilege of listening to. It was well done and gave us an interpretation of the feelings and attitude of the English people.

You have made a great contribution to better the understanding of English people by Americans through this presentation. But more interesting for us was the fact that our son, Bob Evans, was on the program.

We were thrilled and delighted that he, the only American, had the privilege of being part of this broadcast . If you remember, when you were down at the University of North Carolina, under the auspices of the Carolina Forum, Bob was Chairman of the Forum that year and presided at the meeting at which you spoke.

Although Bob is studying Law, he leans toward public speaking and writing, and we are not sure now that he will go into Law.

Here's a little something that emerged from our luncheon meeting at the Burlingame Country Club, during the Republican Convention.

The dialogue may not be verbatim, but I believe that the gist is kosher. In any case, please accept my thanks for one of those rare anecdotes that assay the high family-affection content so welcome to a fellow in search of Christmas-column material.

Sending you the magazine also affords an opportunity for this proud parent to introduce his brain-child. I was one of the two gents who founded Family Circle. As you may know, it was the first publication to be distributed through chain supermarkets. (Present circulation, 4,000,000.)

Also enclosed is an issue carrying a piece I did on Mary Martin. Just in case you missed this mention of your name. Mary is one of the great loves of my life, and has been for many years. Your "Person to Person" with her was a beauty.

Hoping our paths may cross again, soon, and with warmest holiday wishes to you, Mrs. Murrow, and Casey, I am,

Cordially,
Harry Evans

HE:sbn

P.S. I was tempted to use your explanation of your son's name (just-for-the-hell-of-it), but I reckoned you might be kidding--a touch. And say, remember those rubber elephants he bought for us at the Cow Palace--attached to an Ike button, and when you squeezed a bulb the elephant's trunk waved a flag? I think I bribed at least three votes for Ike by dropping mine in the proper spots. Please express my gratitude to Casey.

Dear Miss Evans:

Thank you for your letter of August 14th.

Your program idea may have merit, however, I have no control over programs at CBS.

Dear Sir:

In lieu of a hat, I am tossing into your office door a letter drafted by me a few years ago.

This I do as an admitted attempt to bribe you into granting a few extra seconds of consideration to my plea.

Briefly, I have conceived a television series designed to capture the Van Doren audience and the Nadler audience without, I believe, sacrificing intellectual quality.

The objective of the show which I have conceived is to raise the mental level of television viewers. I hasten to say that this is not a quiz show, or a give-a-way show, or a gimmick show, or their ilk.

I would like to procure an appointment with you to discuss my idea.

As a bonus - PLEASE, do not send box tops - I enclose a poem which I wrote at the time of the above referred to letter, the same being in its aboriginal form.

I am without training or experience in television writing, and seek your help in this project because of the respect which I bear you, and because of your known talents in the field of production.

For reasons known to us both, I feel compelled to state that I am a Negro.

Sincerely yours,

Josephine A. Evans

IS LIFE THE DREAM

In deep and solitary quietude
Withdrawn from earthly stimuli
    Thoughts of life and being -
    Gifts reposed in us -
Evoke the indeterminable query
Is Life the dream? Sleep (the) reality?

What purpose serves the business coup de grace
Except afford new urn and wing,
    Untouched the inner self -
    No growth, no change;
Another notch in the ruler of success
Sensitized to only the tangible.

An empty gesture it seems but to be.
We dramatize the role we play:
    On it the world turns -
    On it all depends -
When but faint breeze of ill chance or choice
Crumbles our near-grasp of material success.

Sensing its incomplete fullfillment
Through this slavish scheme of gain,
Man's inner self seeks Release from sameness and Communion with Truth;
For regimentation of aspiration
Is annihilation of the inner self.

Transport through Art is but Sleep in a form...
Fleet moments graced with inward truth.
    Sleep so personal -
    Sleep so full
Of universality unblinded
By imposed trappings; molded by self light.

Flute and kettle -
Melody against phrase -
Tone against tone -
Beat against beat, or Light against shadow -
Mood against mood -
Color and harmony -
Perspective, attitude.

Music, art create the dream.
Dream, dream and then a trance -
    A trance so consuming that comes the Sleep.
Ah that Sleep that gives the ecstasy of seclusion;
That Sleep that numbs all;
    From its return the self is Unoriented and resumes its Place in dazed and unreal steps.

"On stage" - Life's command:
    Twirl and dance the jog;
    Laugh and cry the lines.
You are not alone, -
The script repeats without end.

    For what... Reality? -
    More like a restless dream
    From whence you cannot awake.

"Curtain" - Sleep's reprieve:
    Depart from the herd;
    Release the inner self.
And you are alone, -
The script is yours to interpret.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Congratulations on the three Emmy Awards!

And many thanks for seeing the HongKong documentary film. The British Information Service people said they definite-ly want it. We're awaiting confirmation from London.

Had a wonderful opportunity to meet Dr. Shotwell--who in turn arranged many other meetings for me--re an idea about Asia that I discussed with him.

If you could spare a bit of time---on our way through to London---would appreciate your reaction to this thought on Asia.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr.Murrow:

In all sincerity I write asking for the privilege of an interviews with you for Miss Enid Brady and myself. Your files contain a lengthy letter which I wrote you in July. I called at your office about July 8th, found everyone absent, no one in CBS who would speak with me and finally did, later that afternoon, converse with your secretary on the phone.

Our need for having you as our TV spokesman was reenforced when I saw "Around the World in 80 Days" recently and found you doing the prologue. It was terrific and we feel that only you can take the public from dismal depths of disbelief thru cautious skepticism and over the hurdle of admitting it as a possibility at least to the "probability" or "perhaps" stage. We have never asked for "belief" tho we ourselves are utterly sold on the Venusians existence.

What makes us worthy of your attention? At 9:15 this morning over WGAN-TV, CBS affiliate here, with Mr.Sam Henderson as interlocutor, Russ Dorr as announcer, Bill Wadman, Program Director and after previous interviewing with Mr.Marble (formerly of CBS in NYC) - while being interviewed, Miss Brady and myself actually launched "Cymatrali" of Venus to the TV public while Miss Brady was in trance.

Technically it was excellent. Only a moment of conversation elapsed between Mr.Henderson and myself while the camera was on us and Cymatrali popped into being and her voice and personality was immediately "on stage" and Mr.Henderson found himself interviewing what we claim is an actual advance agent of the Planet Venus.

Friday we go on WSCH-TV, Portland, an NBC affiliate in a simple interview without trance. Upon our return to Florida, we are to go on WESH-TV according to a commitment with Joe Smedley, Program Director. News of our activities has already been carried in news programs of this station and of a TV station in Miami.

For your immediate examination there is the Associated Press story written by George Cornell, Religious Editor in their Rockefeller Plaza office. I saw it come in over the teletype of the PRESS-HERALD here yesterday, it is for release Friday, tomorrow, 10/18. Mr.Cornell took some 8 pages of notes while interviewing me in New York - then called and spent 35 minutes on the phone with Miss Brady, myself and an "expert" on the Spiritualist work, Miss Agnes Reuther, editor of the PSYCHIC OBSERVER, Jamestown, N.Y.

Our attitude continues to be that of sincere people striving for final proof and willing to cooperate with military, college or other researchers who might be able to either disprove or prove that there is no bonafide contact with Venusians or Martians. After six months of taping these "contacts", I am not able to disprove them. We have some 60-70 tapes that are now staggering.

We arrive in New York City either Sunday or Monday and our contact for messages will be, %Mrs. Henry A. Siegel, 239 East 79th Street, NYC, TRafalgar 9-6372 - we will be at your disposal.

Monday night, 10/21 at 8 p.m. we lecture and will play tapes in room 1010, Carnegie Hall, under the aegis of Mrs.Glenn Argoe.

Also for your information, Mr.Oppenheim of Columbia Records has heard one of my tapes (not on saucers) two months ago and we hope to interest them in other tapes leading to LP records.

Both TIME and LIFE have had long letters in July as you did, again we are asking to be heard and to have our "Cymatrali" answer any questions of the staffers of TIME whom we have invited to sit in meeting with us and try to perplex the Venusians.

May I offer you the only certain, sure-fire means of a personal quick test to be made by yourself without elaborate work on your part? This was to me most satisfying and I ask that you avail yourself of it if you desire: To merely sit with Miss Brady and have her "read" for you psychically and give you hidden facts that are known only to yourself of your past and present. Or may we visit with you and let you, in the security of your office, converse directly with "Cymatrali" while Miss Brady is in trance?

Thank you for any consideration you may give us.

Sincerely,

Bob Ewing

Spiritualist Claims Contact

Sputnik Speeds Venusian Plans For Earth Landing

Sputnik, the Russian satellite, will eventually be dropped on earth by beings from Venus.

The Venusians have already slowed down and changed the satellite's flight.

The Red moon has speeded up plans of the Venusians to land on earth. The landing will probably take place before the end of this month. It definitely will occur by Nov. 1.

These are just a few of the latest messages Miss Enid Brady of Daytona Beach, Fla., claims to have received from contacts on Venus, Mars and in flying saucers.

Minister of the First Spiritualist Church for the past 18 years, Miss Brady says she has only been in contact with beings from outer space since 1954.

She's in Portland attending the 65th annual convention of the National Spiritualist Association of Churches—but many of that group's members don't agree with her views.

With Miss Brady is Bob Ewing, a 1937 Dartmouth College graduate, who records the words that come through the woman's vocal chords from Venus.

Chief contacts are Johann, chief of flight operations from satellite station No. 5, hovering over Florida about 10,000 miles up, and Cymatrali, a Venusian spiritual guide.

HERE ARE just a few of the other things Ewing has recorded:

The Venusians didn't bother to disrupt the satellite at first because it was not a weapon. But, seeing the propaganda value of the moon to the Russians they've decided to make "queer things" happen to it.

The report on changes in the satellite occurred before reports appeared that an "unknown force" was affecting it.

Between now and the landing by Venusians, there will be green fire balls and strange lights in the sky. (Ewing points out that last Tuesday night a green fire ball appeared over the nose of a U. S. Navy plane in Utah, according to the Associated Press.)

The satellite has both shaken the complacency of the American people and prepared them for arrivals from outer space. That's why the Venusian program has been speeded up.

Every planet in our solar system is inhabited.

So are many other solar systems. All the people are friendly, according to the Venusians, except those in the Orion constellation.

The Venusians have only been sending ventlas (flying saucers) toward earth since we began exploding atomic bombs. They've been vacuum cleaning the atmosphere since that time, preventing its contamination.

THE COMMUNICATIONS from outer space haven't kept Miss Brady from her church work. "The two don't conflict", she points out. "In fact, I kept the whole thing from my congregation until a month and a half ago when we let the first publicity out."

Miss Brady insists she doesn't know what she's saying when she goes into one of the trances through which the contacts are made.

Her vocal chords are the transmitting instrument. For Johann, her voice is recorded as low and almost masculine. For Cymatrali, it is recorded as high-pitched and definitely feminine.

A timetable has been set up for the Venusians on earth. There'll be further contacts for two years after the initial landings. By 1960, landings in force will begin and, by 1963, Ewing says, there'll be a golden age on earth and in other parts of the solar system.

"There'll be no war or disease and man will be one," he declares.

Getting back to earth and Portland, the appearance of Miss Brady and Ewing may signal another split in the ranks of this country's spiritualists, already torn by schisms.

"We do not accept that," declares Dr. Victoria Barnes of Chicago, trustee of the National Spiritualist Association and chairman of the convention press committee. "These are her personal views, not those of the Association."

"She is not our spokesman," asserts Rev. William Hubbard, Lakewood, president of the Maine Spiritualist Association. "We are working to keep our organization dignified and this is not dignified. We accept only that which can be proven and, at this time, we feel this (Venus communication) has no bearing on spiritualism. Our board of education does not teach it."

Miss Brady is the first to admit that her receptions are not part of spiritualism as it's usually practiced.

"I'm getting communications from living people of Mars and Venus. The usual work is with people who have physically died."

She estimates that half of the country's spiritualists — most of them the younger ones — believe in the "New Age" concept of contact with outer space beings.

That conflicts with the more conservative members who believe only in contact with the dead and, of course, in life after death.

Miss Agnes Reuther, Jamestown, N.Y., editor of the "Psychic Observer", the national spiritualist magazine, points out that the National Spiritualist Association of Churches, is the oldest spiritualist group in the country and the most conservative.

"In any church, you have your free thinkers," she declares, "The "New Agers" are spiritualism's free thinkers."

Sputnik Is A Burglar

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Oct. 15 (AP)—The Russian earth satellite, Sputnik, was blamed today for an open garage door in Schenectady.

Dr. Thomas Rinaldi has been trying since Oct. 5 to find out why the radio-operated doors on the garage of his home were open each morning.

Sputnik was launched Oct. 4, but is believed to have passed near the Schenectady area for the first time early on Oct. 5.

Today, Rinaldi, a physician, arose early. At 6:23 a.m., the doors flew open, he reported. No one was in sight. Sputnik was over the area.

Rinaldi said that if Sputnik's radio operates the doors, "I'll have to get something changed."

Valle's Motor Inn Construction Begins

KITTERY, Oct. 15 — Construction of a 56-unit motel has begun here, it was announced today by Roger P. Sonnabend, vice president of Hotel Corporation of America.

Known as Valle's Motor Inn, the motel is being built on an eight-acre site adjoining Valle's Steak House. The 56-room unit will cost about $500,000.

Sonnabend said plans call for ultimate construction of about 200 rooms. Each will have wall-to-wall carpet, fully tiled baths, air conditioning, 24-hour telephone service and separate dressing alcoves.

Architect for the new motel is Engineering Services Inc., Portland. Contractor is Casburage Co., Inc., also of Portland. It is expected to be completed by the spring of 1958.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

This confirms telephone conversation between your office and our Mrs. Kamioner, concerning a feature motion picture to be produced by us, tentatively entitled, STAY AWAY JOE. The story is about a family of indigent Indian halfbreeds on a reservation in Northern Montana.

In certain secnes of our proposed motion picture we would like to mention "Edward R. Murrow" in the dialogue, substantially as follows.

One of the main characters of our story, Franklyn Pryne, is an Indian Agent assigned to take charge of the Indian Reservation on which Louis Champlain and his family, Mary and Joe and his grandfather, live. At a party given in the Agent's honor, Mary's great-grandfather (Gran'pere) addresses Pryne in the following manner.

GRAN'PERE

Me Chief Two Smokes, live plenty long, hundred and five years old. See plenty. See buffalo go. See railroad fire-wagon come. See automobile skunk-wagon come. Edward R. Murrow talk on devilbox. Say H-Bonb come. Make big boom. Everybody hide in caves. (with great satisfaction) White man don't live long in caves. Die pretty soon. Only Indians live. Skunk-wagon gone. Plenty buffalo! Plenty squaw! Good country again!

If you have no objection to our mention of your name as outlined in our forthcoming motion picture, will you please sign and return one copy of this letter of consent.

You understand, of course, that this motion picture may be advertised, dis-

No agreement or order will be binding on this corporation unless in writing and signed by an officer

MEMBER AUDIT BUREAU OF CIRCULATIONS

THE LAUGHTER OF CHILDREN

by

DANNY KAYE

I don't suppose anyone in his right mind would try to pick a date, an event, a circumstance, and say "This is when I started caring about kids." I'm sure I started caring about kids when I was a kid.

After that you begin to grow up, and you try to deny the childishness in yourself: The whole object is to be adult, to grasp the adult world and fight your way into it, playing by the rules of adults. "I'm not a kid any more," you say, as though a kid was a bad thing to be.

Then you get old enough to vote, and to be married, and to have a child born into your house—an event that I still think is done by magic, whatever the experts say.

So now you have your own, another you, in your own image. You look at her (I suppose it could be a he, but why?) all fresh and innocent and helpless, and you move back again into the child world that you've come out of, and you start to grow again as your own child grows.

Maybe it's here that kids as kids begin to seem real and important to you again. Maybe it's here that you sign on for the second go-round. Now you play kid's rules again.

I make my living as an entertainer. I might add here that I am particularly proud of my profession. I like to call it the largest self-sustaining democracy in the world.

People in show business have always sort of chipped in their talents to lend a hand where a hand was needed. It's kind of a tradition — stemming at least partly from the fact that show-business people often need a leg-up themselves. You do benefits, you sign up as a sponsor for a deserving charity, you do a turn onstage to help somebody who needs help. Sometimes you get deeply involved emotionally; sometimes you don't. Speaking for myself, I must confess that I was never able to get completely wrapped up in a cause — until one day in 1953, when a whole new world opened up for me. This is the wide world, the real world, the world of children. It is full of suffering, and full, too, of laughter. It is a world of suffering into which hope has begun to edge its way.

I was on my way home from a personal appearance in London. I got on the airplane, strapped myself into a seat, and settled down for a long flight. It was a long flight, all right, but not quite in the way (Continued on page 00)

I had expected. We get 600 miles out and whammy, we got airplane trouble. It's a runaway propeller. I'm not an aircraft mechanic, and I will not try to explain a runaway prop; but the essence of it is that one engine runs amuck, the propeller can't be feathered, so the silly thing spins and screams, striking terror into the hearts of crew, passengers, ships at sea, fishes under the waves, and most of all—me.

Well, a runaway prop is a great conversation piece, like a lamp made out of an old gasoline pump. As we staggered back to Shannon, Ireland, I fell into conversation with the gentleman sitting next to me, who turned out to be a great man named Maurice Pate, the Executive Director of UNICEF, the United Nations Children's Fund. I didn't even know what UNICEF was, but I do now. I don't recommend a sick airplane 600 miles from land as the ideal place to begin a friendship, but I'm eternally grateful that I was aboard it and met Mr. Pate and that I met, through him, the kids I've come to know and all those dedicated adults I've seen engaged in a labor of noble sacrifice.

What is UNICEF? Well, first of all, it's an independent agency of the United Nations. It has nothing to do with politics, wars, treaties, debates. It has only to do with children—all the world's children—the sick and the hungry. And two thirds—two out of every three—of the world's children go to bed sick or hungry every night. In India, two out of every ten children born die within a year. In Nigeria, children make up nearly half the population. Just calculate the death rate from that statistic! These are staggering figures. What hope is there for the world as long as this situation lasts? Not very much.

So what does UNICEF do? It performs services that are truly prodigious. First of all, it attacks disease and malnutrition—it is bringing milk and medicine to 45 million children in 102 countries in this year alone. It has supplied equipment for treating a million and a half children suffering from the eye disease trachoma, which, if it's not treated, can make kids totally blind. It has started treatments that will arrest almost [illegible] million cases of leprosy in children. Over 16 million have received penicillin shots for yaws. UNICEF has provided the equipment and vaccine to test over 211 million kids for TB, and vaccinated the 81 million who needed shots. (If you think I carry these figures around in my head, you're crazy. A girl had to spend her whole lunch hour looking them up.)

Two

UNICEF has distributed 879 million pounds of powdered milk to over 28 million children. Nobody even knows how many local doctors and nurses—who don't even think about ever "finishing" their work—are busy distributing the medicines and milk supplied by UNICEF. There's a huge training program, too: Classes all over the world, advised by the World Health Organization and equipped by UNICEF, are teaching everybody from pediatricians to village midwives. It's an enormous, inspiring undertaking.

Where does all the money come from? Eighty nations are making voluntary contributions to cover the $24 million budget for 1957. Private contributions make up about five per cent. (It's interesting to note that when the United States Congress was slashing foreign aid appropriations this fall, the UNICEF appropriation of $11 million was not cut by a penny.)

And the the cost is amazingly little—a real bargain—considering the vastness of the work. Thirty cents buys enough aureomycin to treat a trachoma case for a year. Five cents—a nickel's worth of penicillin—will cure yaws in two weeks. Half a penny buys a pint of milk for an undernourished child.

UNICEF is constantly growing. It is now eleven years old. It must never end.

To get back to Mr. Pate for a minute. It was another year before we met again. I was on my way to South Africa for some theater dates, and he asked me—rather casually—whether, since I was going overseas anyway, I'd "look in" on some UNICEF installations along my route of travel. Sure, I said. Would I come home the long way—around the "other" side of the world—and look in on some more? Sure, why not? And that's how it started.

I arrived at New Delhi in India all decked out as an Ambassador-at-Large for UNICEF. No kidding. That's really my title. My job involves various things. First, to see for myself the work that's being done in the field. All the statistics in the world can't make you feel the need and the urgency of the work as vividly as a day spent in a jungle clinic. Second, to beat the drums for UNICEF—to bring the story home to the people of the fortunate countries, the people who aren't sick or hungry but can help those who are. Sometimes I've talked to heads of state, lobbying for the UNICEF program. And the third part of the job, I might say, is to have a wonderful time doing the first two parts. I've traveled with some fine people—camera crews, pilots, liaison people, under some pretty difficult circumstances—and everywhere, even when we were too pooped to think straight—we've gotten an enormous lift from seeing the goodness and humanity with which men and women at their best can help their fellow men when they are in need.

We've made four trips now on the UNICEF circuit. We've been to North Africa, India, Thailand, Burma, Hong Kong, Japan, Korea. We've seen kids in the Middle East, in Italy and England and France, and in the Scandinavian countries. I've seen them, too, in California, where I live, and in Brooklyn, where I was one of them. If I have anything at all to say about them, it's this: They are everywhere the same—the same in the glory of their childhood, the same in their needs and joys, the same in their humanity. What they don't all have in common is an equal chance for the future, and since they are our future, that's where there is a job of work to be done. We'll be making another tour sometime soon. I don't know where and I don't know when. We've moved around an awful lot, but still there's no shortage of places we haven't been.

In Morocco it's desert. The UNICEF team came down on the sand, and the sand is hot. They said it was 115 degrees Fahrenheit by noon, but I would have guessed closer to 200. Here there is trachoma, the virus disease of the eye, transmitted by flies, which flourishes in certain areas that have primitive sewage systems. Trachoma can make you blind, and we saw children who could not see us. This was a village of 2,000 people. All of them—all of them—had it. Their eyes were crusted over, or else, in the advanced stages, there was blindness. Aureomycin was the cure—aureomycin salve applied to the eyes—at a cost, as I've said, of thirty cents a year. The price of one tuna fish sandwich in a cheap luncheonette.

In Nigeria it was leprosy that was cutting them down and keeping them down—leprosy that rots away their bodies and their spirits, making a girl of twelve look like a woman of thirty-five.

Yaws is no fun to look at, either. A young body covered with painful, festering sores is painful to see, especially if you come from a country where almost anyone can go to a doctor or a clinic if he so much as sneezes or coughs.

We saw crippled children in Greece, homeless orphans in Rome. Everywhere we went we found children who had every reason to give up hope, to mope, to despair, to crawl into themselves, think of themselves as cripples and orphans for the rest of their short lives. And yet everywhere, in the midst of all their suffering, we found—laughter.

How do you make children laugh if you can't speak the language? The answer is simply that laughter is its own language. Why, anyone can say more with signs than with words, with pantomime and mimicry than with puns and gags. A pratfall is a pratfall, even in Bangkok. To become a clown is to become a child, one among other children. If you don't mind making yourself ridiculous—and who can feel ridiculous in front of a child who cannot walk?—then you can play with children and help them release their need to laugh.

Any parent has played "you-can't-catch-me" with a child. It's one of the first games a baby plays. And what do you do? You switch roles; you become a child and the child is the grownup. You pretend. You roar like a lion and run as fast as you can (which is really as slow as you can) and you flounder and fall down and you can't catch up or can't escape, depending on who's chasing who. If you sprain an ankle in the process of playing, so much the funnier.

You can play games with no more props than a shoe, a silly hat, a stick, a ball, a thumb or a few foolish sounds like "Hi de hi de he" or even just "Ho." You repeat a certain rhythm to the point of absurdity. If you can get one child in a group to laugh—with you or at you, who cares?—then the whole group will laugh, and if the grownups are standing around too, they will laugh with their children. It is not possible to be solemn in the presence of the laughter of children. There is great sense in nonsense—why, I think "Thumbelina" should rank with the other great Italian arias! You don't catch the crowd at La Scala joining in "Vesti la Giubba," even if it is a clown song.

We played games with the kids we met, and took pictures of them. Maybe this made them unpaid television and movie actors—some, Lord knows, were good enough to work steady. We certainly got more fun out of them than they got out of us.

Sometimes they would rehearse little presentation speeches and give us a present to bring home with us—something, as though we could possibly need it, to remember them by. These little speeches are always profoundly touching in their sincerity, their earnestness, and their awkwardness. But the real gift is the gift of their eager laughter, and seeing a well-fed, happy child where before there had been a hungry one, and seeing the cure of a dreadful disease taking place almost before your eyes.

Dear Sir :

I refer to the Paley Report about natural resources in 1975 and my projects for 4300m subway-tunnel with car parking in Telaviv, with protecting the subsoil-water in Telaviv for 2 m Jews in a greater town with better traffic, and then the long tunnel 140 kms between the harbourcanal Elath and Sdom for magnesium 200.000 tons a year and cheaper irrigation from wells for at least 5 million dunams for peace in the area from Hermon to Elath. The mountains in the North and in Transjordan have enough rain for the subsoil in this area of 30m dunams. I hope that your next film will be the explanation for this development after the visit of Minister Saphir, next week again in Newyork.

Prof. Terghaghi at the Havard University will confirm, that the tunnels in NY are not cheap, but in soft ground between the Jarkon and Batyam here, also with running or flowing ground and shield method the subway and car-tunnel cam be build for 10 million dollars, availabe here with local labourers, engineers and cement Nesher. And the modern shield for long tunnels permits rapid progress and practically eliminates tunneling hazards. Shields are used in Europe since 100 years in soft ground-first for the Themse tunnel in London. And the subway 1943 build in Chicago, Messrs Fairbank-Morse and other contractors there will confirm, that wells in town with enough subsoilwater from the river Musrara and Jarkon are the deciding factor for cheaper water, used 100 cbm/head in town consumption, 100 cbm for cooling and industries, and at least 800 cbm for the irrigation of 1 dunam per head for the economical production of oranges, vergetables and all food for cattle, eggs, milk and butter for Jews in Israel. At least 5 million Jews must be settled here and than all political fear of war will be prevented in the Middle East. The Subway is also the airshelter for atom-bombs, but we have no time and money for the development of atomic energy, because this is made by Euratrom in countries with enoug river water for cooling the atom plants, and enough capital to pay for the scientific staff engaged with radiation problem. Prof. Abel Wolman in Baltimore knows about the danger of Atomic energy plants, and we have no time to wait for the solution, also not for desalting ocean-or brackish water. Israel chemical industries and irrigation is needed before the world War III, and before all Jews are only political opponents of the Western countries. Please give me your help and see Mr. Balaban for better information, according the letter of Mr. Eric Johnson and Mr. Gordon Gray in the interest of free trade also in the Middle East, and Israel.

Die grosse Erfindung ?

Von SIEGMUND URABIN

Purim !! = Kerneval

Rechovot, 2. Feber 1958

Wie hier bekannt wird, gelang es dem Chemiker Dr. Jochanan Finkelstein in jahrelanger Arbeit ein Verfahren zu etnwickeln, das ermöglicht billig und in grossen Quantitäten Wasserstoff aus Wasser zu erzeugen. Wasser besteht bekanntlich aus 2 Gasen, und zwar aus 2 Teilen Wasserstoff und 1 Teil Sauerstoff. Bekannt lich wird auch seit langem Wasserstoff aus Wasser hergestellt, doch war das bisherige Verfahren sehr kompliziert, zeitraubend, und kostspielig, so dass Wasserstoff nur eine sehr begrenzte Verwendung finden konnte, z. . beim Füllen von Luftballons und Luftschiffen. Der Erfinder des neuen Verfahrens glaubt, dass es nun möglich sein wird, Wasserstoff so billig herzustellen, dass es das teuere Petroleum als Brennstoff aus Industrie und Haushalten verdrängen kann. Die Versuche von Dr. Finkelstein haben erwiesen, dass man aus 3 Kubikmetern Meereswasser billig 2 Kubikmeter Wasserstoff erzeugen kann.

Jerusalem, 25. Feber 1958

Die Regierung beschloss auf ihrer gestrigen Sitzung nach Ueberprüfung der neuen Erfindung von Dr. Jochanan Finkelstein zur billigen Erzeugung von Wasserstoff aus Wasser, eine grosse Gasgesellschaft ins Leben zu rufen, die zunächst 3 grosse Gaswerke am Strande in der Nähe von Tel Aviv und Haifa, und am Ufer des Kineret errichten soll. Ein Röhrennetz soll es möglich machen, dass zunächst in den grösseren Städten Hausanschlüsse an das Gasnetz geschaffen werden.

Paris, 3. März 1958

Eine hiesige Kapitalistengruppe hat die Lizenzen aus dem angemeldeten Patent von Dr. Finkelstein zur Erzeugung von Wasserstoff aus Wasser erworben. Die Gesellschaft plant die Errichtung mehrerer Gaswerke am Meeresstrand und an Flussläufen.

Tel Aviv, 5. März 1958

In einem feierlichen Festa'-t in Anwesenheit von Vertretern der Regierung wurde gestern die neue Jisrael-Gas-Gesellschaft gegründet, die aus Wasser den billigen Brennstoff Wasserstoff erzeugen will. Jisrael wird damit weitgehend Neft als Brennstoff ausschalten und statt dessen Wasserstoff verwenden, wodurch enorme Devisenbeträge gespart werden. Von den Aktien der neuen Gesellschaft haben 50% Solel Boneh, 25% Mekorot, u. 25% eine Kapitalistengruppe, die der Miamigruppe nahe steht, erworben. Zum Generaldirekt- der neuen Gesellschaft, soll nach seinen Erfolgen bei der Entwicklung der Potaschgesellschaft, Dr. Dov Joseph ernannt werden. Der Erfinder Dr. Finkelstein wird, wie verlautet, dem Direktorium nicht angehören. An massgebender Stelle ist man der Ansicht, das Dr. Finkelstein in Wesentlichen nichts Neues erfunden hat, da Wasserstoff seit langem bekannt ist, so dass er kaum als Fachmann anzusehen ist. Es wird Gewicht darauf gelegt, dass dem Direktorium Persönlichkeiten angehören, d. mit Land und Leuten in Jisrael vertraut sind, also kurz Persönlichkeiten, die der herrschenden Partei angehören.

der modernen Wirtschaft an Brennstoffen. Man ist sich im Klaren darüber, dass wenn die Entwicklung so weiter geht, in wenigen Jahrzehnten, die Brennstoffvorkommen unseres Planten an Kohle und Petroleum erschöpft sein werden, ohne dass ein geeigneter Ersatz gefunden werden könnte. Nun erreicht uns aus Jisrael die aufseherregende Nachricht, dass es dem dortigen Chemiker Dr. Jochanan Finkelstein gelungen ist, ein Verfahren auszuarbeiten, durch welches man ungeheuere Quantitäten Wasserstoff, als Brennstoff, aus Wasser billig erzeugen kann. Das neue Produkt soll so billig sein, dass man annimmt, dass es in kurzer Zeit Kohle und Petroleum weitgehend vom Markt verdrängen dürfte. Wasser als Brennstoff ist in den Weltmeeren in so unerschöpflicher Menge vorhanden, dass man das Weltall in Brand setzen könnte.

New York, 13. März 1958

Ein schwarzer Tag an der New Yorker Börse.

Der gestrige Leitartikel der „New York Times" über die Erfindung des Finkelsteinverfahrens zur Gewinnung von Wasserstoff verursachte eine wilde und zügellose Panik an der Börse. Petroleumwerte sind ins Bodenlose gefallen und fallen weiter...

London, 20. März 1958

Die Nachricht, dass eine hiesige Kapitalistengruppe die Absicht hat, nach dem Patenten des Finkelsteinverfahrens Wasserstoffgaswerke zu errichten, hat zu schweren Unruhen in den Bergwerksgebieten des Landes geführt. Allgemein wird angenommen, dass die Kohlenförderung nicht mehr rentabel sein wird, so dass Bergwerke still gelegt und hunderttausende Bergarbeiter brotlos sein werden. Polizei und Militär mussten eingesetzt werden, um die Ruhe wiederherzustellen.

Detroit, USA, 6. April 1958

Wie hier bekannt wird, haben die Fordwerke den ersten Wagen mit dem neuen Finkelsteinmotor hergestellt. Die Maschinerie desselben besteht aus 2 Teilen, aus einer Apparatur zur Herstellung von Wasserstoff aus Wasser und aus einem Verbrennungsmotor, der statt Benzin Wasserstoff verbrennt. Statt Benzin tankt der neue Wagen Wasser. Mit der serienweisen Herstellung des neuen Wagens soll demnächst begonnen werden. Wie Henry Ford jun. Pressevertretern gegenüber erwähnte, dürfte der neue Wagen in wenigen Jahren die unwirtschaftlichen Benzinwagen völlig von den Landstrassen verdrängt haben.

Hamburg, den 15. April 1958

Auf der Werft von Voss & Blomberg wurde das erste 30.000 Tonnen-Motorschiff auf Kiel gelegt, dass an Stelle der bisher gebräuchlichen Dieselmotore mit den neuen Finkelsteinmotoren ausgerüstet sein wird. Das Schiff wird als Brennstoff Meereswasser verwenden. Bei Bedarf werden die Brennstoffventile geöffnet und Meereswasser strömt in die Brennstofftanks.

Oslo, 8. Mai 1958

Für den Nobelpreis für Chemie wurde der jisraelische Erfinder Dr. Jochanan Finkelstein für sein Verfahren zur Herstellung von Wasserstoff aus Wasser vorgeschlagen.

Tel Aviv, 12. Mai 1958

Beim Patentamt in Tel Aviv hat die Jisrael-Gas-Gesellschaft durch ihren Anwalt Dr. Tiftler, gegen die von Dr. Finkelstein angemeldeten Patente Widerspruch erhoben. Wie Dr. Tiftler ausführt, handelt es sich beim Verfahren Dr. Finkelsteins um nichts wesentlich Neues, da bekanntlich Wasserstoff seit langem aus Wasser gewonnen wird. Dr. Tiftler hält daher das neue Verfahren nicht für patentfähig und widersetzt sich einer Patenterteilung. Vergebens weist der Erfinder darauf hin, dass ihm solche Schwierigkeiten bei ausländischen Patentämtern nicht gemacht werden.

Berkeley, Kalifornien, 5. Juni 1958

Die Calyfornia University in Berkeley hat den bekannten Erfinder Dr. Jochanan Finkelstein auf den Lehrstuhl für angewandte Chemie berufen. Gleichzeitig wird bekannt, dass die USA-Gas-Corporation Dr. Finkelstein in Direktorium berufen hat.

Lydda, 10. Juni 1958

Unter den Passagieren, die gestern das Land verlassen haben, befand sich auch der angebliche Erfinder Dr. Jochanan Finkelstein, der einer angeblichen Berufung in die USA Folge geleistet haben soll. Wir weinen Persönlichkeiten, d. um des schnöden Mammons willen, unser Land verlassen, gewiss keine Träne nach.

Eine Zeitschrift hatte Roda Roda aufgefordert, ihr humoristisch „eine peinliche Situation" zu schildern, in der er sich befunden habe. Roda Roda antwortete: „Sie verlangen von mir einen humoristischen Beitrag; und mir fällt nichts ein, nicht das mindeste. Das ist gewiss eine überaus peinliche Sitution. Das Honorar für diese wahrheitsgemässe Schilderung erbitte ich auf mein Postscheckkonto."

Bernard Shaw wurde einmal gefragt, ob er glaube, dass es eine Frau gäbe, die lieber geistreich als schön sein möchte. Shaw sagte mit sarkastischem Lächeln: „Das glaube ich nicht, weil die meisten Männer nicht blind, aber dumm sind."

Als Dickens in England auf der Höhe seines Ruhmes stand, kam er auf Besuch nach Paris, wo Balzac gerade seine grössten Erfolge hatte. Auf einem Bankett feierte man ihn als den grössten Erzähler seiner Epoche. Dickens hörte zu, erhob sich dann und sagte: „Im Namen Balzacs danke ich Ihnen."

Worauf Hemingway erwiderte: „Das hängt davon ab, wie schnell man mit einer brennenden Fackel laufen kann!"

Sehr geehrter Herr Dr Moldau !

Ich will Sie nochmals bitten in der Wiener Presse meine Tunnelbau-Projekte fuer U-Bahn Telaviv und Grundwasserschutz und dann den langen Tunnel zwischen Roten und Toten Meer, zwecks ernster Produktion von Chemikalien und Leichtmetall Magnesium, und an der oesterreichischen Friedenspolitik interresierten Kreisen erklaeren zu helfen.

Bisher lehnt es die Presse ab, von Privatpersonen irgendwelche ernste Informationen zu bringen und ich bitte Sie die Herren der Israel Regierung zu fragen, ob Sie sich damit befassen sollen. Weiter bereit Ihnen das notwendige Informationsmaterial einzusenden, oder wenn Sie dazu Zeit finden in kurzer Unterhaltung Sie persoenlich genauer ins Bild zu bringen, warte ich Ihren freundl. Bescheid, nachdem ich 36 Jahre in Telaviv im Fach arbeite und leider Herr Dr.E.Unger und andere Pressereferenten fuer die so wichtigen Entwicklungsprojekte keinerlei Interesse gezeigt haben.

Soweit ich fuer oesterr. Werke viele Jahre taetig war, besteht die Moeglichkeit groesse Lieferungen aus Oesterreich zu bekommen und dafuer in harter Valuta zu bezahlen, und eher den Notzustand mit der vielen Widergutmachung zu beenden. Dazu muss aber Israel zur ernsten Produktion gebracht werden, was nur durch gute Beratung in der Presse zu erreichen waere. Nach der Suez-und Sinaikrise sollte neben dem Aswan Dam, auch fuer Israel die billige Hydrokraft fuer Industrie und Bewaesserung Ihre Artikelserie sein.

Ich wuerde mich sehr freuen, Ihre baldige Antwort zu bekommen und stehe Ihnen jederzeit gern zur Verfuegung.

Mit vorzueglicher Hochachtung

Dear Ed Murrow:

The writer is negotiating with a group of Long Island physicians, who are planning a 150-bed hospital at Plainview, to direct their campaign. He needs the job badly to bolster recent reconciliation with his wife in Pittsburgh, Pa. Job WILL be mine on condition that I find two or three V.I.P.s (big household names) for campaign's advisory committee. Big names, the doctors hope, will make it easy for us to line up local committeemen.

In asking you kindly to lend us your name, to be used on letterhead and publicity, I hasten to assure you that you will be backing a worthy enterprise. It is to be known as CENTRAL PARK COMMUNITY HOSPITAL, Plainview, L.I. Incorporators are Dr. G.A.W. D'Andrea, surgeon, 165 Manor St., Plainview, L.I.; Dr. Emanuel V. Bizzaro, G.P., 22-19 47th St., Astoria, L.I., and Dr. Eric Goss, radiologist, 68-68 Main St., Flushing, L.I.

Similar request has gone forward also to Bob Considine, Gene Tunney, Dorothy Kilgallen and Toots Shor.

Your letter to me should contain the notation, "I am happy to Accept your invitation to become a member of the advisory campaign committee of Central Park Community Hospital. You may my name on letterhead and in publicity."

Mrs. Ferlin and "the beautiful Ferlin Daughter" - as Bob Considine called her in a column that sparkplugged my remarriage to my divorced wife - are fervent fans of yours. So am I. Happy to have hand in the founding of the OPC, which has honored you on more than one occasion and will do it again, I'm sure.

Just learned the other DAY I live over the apartment occupied by your worthy assistant, Raymond Swing.

Doing me the favor requested will earn you a big vote of thanks from all the Ferlins.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Earlier this year Mr. Field announced the Marshall Field Awards to recognize fundamental and imaginative contributions to the well-being of children. The program is fully described in the enclosed material.

I am very anxious for you to join the Board of Directors, the members of which are listed on the back page of the brochure. It would be invaluable if you would consent to serve on this Board, particularly in the field of communications. I can promise you that it will not entail a great deal of work as the nominations material is summarized before it reaches the Board.

Either Miss Elma Phillipson, the Executive Secretary of the Board, or I shall be happy to talk this over further with you. I do hope I can count on your acceptance.

Yours sincerely,

Mrs. Marshall Field

"The destiny of the free world lies in the minds, bodies and hearts of our children"

MARSHALL FIELD

The purpose

To recognize and reward fundamental and imaginative contributions to the well-being of children.

The Marshall Field Awards were established in 1956 by Marshall Field to help focus public attention on children's needs and on the areas in which improved services are required. It is hoped that they will raise the status of the professions devoted to children and will encourage the making of significant contributions to the betterment of child life.

Areas of eligibility

Awards will be given to individuals, organizations and communities in four general areas, and to services which cut across these fields:

EDUCATION • programs and services associated with formal and informal schooling.

PHYSICAL AND MENTAL DEVELOPMENT • health, medical care, nutrition, recreation, rehabilitation.

SOCIAL WELFARE • private and public programs in adoption, foster care, delinquency, institutional and day care, maintaining family income.

COMMUNICATIONS • publications, advertising, movies and films, radio and television.

Children are defined as those who have not yet reached legal majority.

Procedure

Determination of award winners will be made by a Board of Directors whose membership includes national leaders in the fields serving children. Any individual, organization or community may submit one or more nominations.

The awards

Basis for selection

The 1956 nominations

Each award will consist of $2000, a scroll and a statuette. A minimum of six will be available for each calendar year. The distribution among the various areas is at the discretion of the Board of Directors. Awards will be on a nation-wide basis. International awards may also be granted at the discretion of the Directors.

The Board recognizes that significant contributions to the welfare of children are often evolutionary in character and may cover a period of more than one year. Eligibility, therefore, will not be restricted to work begun and completed during a single year. Contributions of both lay and professional workers are eligible. To the extent feasible, awards will honor work beyond the usual demands of duty.

Points to be considered in judging nominations are:

» Does it directly help children?
» Does it benefit a large or significant group of children?
» Can it be applied or adapted for use by others?
» Is it consistent with professional standards in the field?
» Does it represent an original or extraordinary service?
» Will it promote sound development of children?
» Will it stimulate public interest in the needs of children?
» Does it open new dimensions in the lives of children?
» Is it being recognized nationally for the first time?
» Are those who did the actual work being rewarded?

The first awards will be made in December of 1956. Nominations and supporting materials for this year must be submitted by October 1st.

Address nominations and requests for further information to:

Dear Mr. Murrow:

We are delighted with Mrs. Murrow's telephone call of yesterday and the good news that you will serve on Marshall Field Awards' Board of Directors. Enclosed is the requested copy of Mrs. Field's December 17th letter to you.

The Board of Directors is meeting at 2:30 on Thursday, January 24th at Mrs. Field's home, 740 Park Avenue. She is inviting Board members who are free at the time for buffet luncheon at 1:15 prior to the meeting. This will be the first meeting of the full Board. Our main item of business is to select the 1956 Award winners. Material on nominees, prepared by sub-committees of the Board, will be mailed to you within the next few days. Yes

I would like very much to have some time with you, and soon. Probably we should plan for 45 minutes.

It will be a pleasure to work with you on what has proven to be a most exciting project.

Very truly yours,

Marshall Field announced today the formation of Marshall Field Awards, Inc., a non-profit organization "to recognize and reward fundamental and imaginative contributions to the well-being of children."

Six to nine awards will be made annually to individuals, organizations, and communities in the fields of education, physical and mental development, social welfare and communications. Each award will consist of $2000, a scroll and a statuette. The winners will be selected by a Board of Directors which is composed of recognized authorities in child life. The first awards will be made this year.

In announcing the awards program, Mr. Field stressed the considerations that led to its establishment: "Although few would quarrel with the controlling importance of children to America's future, I believe we have not done all we can or should to assure for our young people the opportunity for their fullest physical, mental and social development. I think the reasons for this deficiency are: first, that we have not devoted a large enough portion of our national resources in manpower and money to the professional fields which serve children and, second, that we have not made those professional fields sufficiently high in prestige or reward to attract adequate numbers of top-notch personnel needed to make new and important contributions to the well-being of children.

"Our awards are designed to help meet these deficiencies. It is our hope that they will focus public attention on children's needs and on the areas in which improved services are urgently required. The awards will call attention to constructive programs which set an example for others to follow. We hope, too, that the granting of these awards will, in some measure, raise the status of the professions devoted to children and will stimulate the making of additional significant contributions to the betterment of child life."

Mr. Field has long been active in work devoted to children both through The Field Foundation, which he established in 1940, and as President, since 1951, of the Child Welfare League of America.

Nominations for possible award winners will be solicited by the new organization on a nation-wide basis. All nominations will be screened and final selections will be made by the Board of Directors. International awards may also be granted at the discretion of the Directors.

The following criteria will be used in judging work nominated for awards:

1. Does it directly help children?
2. Does it benefit a large or significant group of children?
3. Can it be applied or adapted for use by others?
4. Is it consistent with professional standards in the field?
5. Does it represent an original or extraordinary service?
6. Will it promote sound development of children?
7. Will it stimulate public interest in the needs of children?
8. Does it open new dimensions in the lives of children?
9. Is it being recognized nationally for the first time?
10. Are those who did the actual work being rewarded?

The members of the Board of Directors in addition to Mr. Field are:

The areas in which awards will be made cover a broad range of activities related to children: education - programs and services associated with formal and informal schooling; physical and mental development - health, medical care, nutrition, recreation, rehabilitation; social welfare - private and public programs in adoption, foster care, delinquency, institutional and day care, maintaining family income; communications - publications, advertising, movies and films, radio and television.

Under the program, children are defined as those who have not yet reached legal majority.

Offices for the new organization have been opened at 598 Madison Avenue, New York City. The deadline for nominations for the first awards is October 1, 1956.

Dear Bill:

I had received the sad news from our Sales Department. No one could possibly contest the soundness of your reasoning.

I have never had a more pleasant relationship with both sponsor and advertising agency and all of us in this shop hope that the able and amiable Art Lund will continue to drop in to see us when he is in New York.

I prefer to regard this development merely as a hiatus and hope that when you and Odd Moe decide to invade the Eastern market, I will dream up a television show for you on a national basis that will be so good that we will drive out all the competition and reduce the consumption of water.

I venture to send you a blow-up of you and your son, and your son and my son, and I am also sending Casey's masterpiece of "Moose Moe." Maybe you would pass it on to him with my best regards.

Dear Ed:

No doubt your sales department has advised you of our decision to cancel the Person-to-Person show after the telecast of March 7, 1958.

In view of our long and pleasant association it was rather difficult for me to accept the recommendation of our agency and marketing department, but under the circumstances I believe you will agree that the reasons are sound and that we have no alternative.

As you are well aware, our peak selling season is by all odds the heaviest in the summer months. For the past five years we have willingly taken what we consider to be an inferior summer replacement program during these heaviest selling months in order to enjoy our association with you the balance of the year.

Now we have been advised by CBS that because of changes in its marketing plans, Amoco can no longer sustain the Eastern leg of the network. For CBS's own business reasons, which we understand and are in sympathy with, they are unable to guarantee us any reassociation with Person-to-Person, or you, in September and for the balance of the 1958-1959 year. The only alternative they offered us was to go along until June, 1958 at which time we would be left without benefit of your program. Obviously as this is just the beginning of our best sales season, we must provide support during that season and our people feel that we can provide stronger support than was previously offered by the summer replacement program.

In order to take advantage of the most likely summer availability we must make a decision to start our new programming in April, and unfortunately the budget cannot stand both the Person-to-Person show and a new availability during the months of March, April, and May.

Our people feel that the chances of continuing our association with Person-to-Person or some other program as a regional sponsor are extremely remote. So, repeating, it looks as if we had no alternative.

Ed, here's hoping that our personal association will continue over the years for I value it just as highly as I do our long and happy business venture together, and I am hoping that one day we will again renew our business association.

Cordially,

Bill

The pictures have arrived and they are truly wonderful.

Janet and I agree that the one of Casey sitting beside the boat is the best we have ever seen, and he prizes it highly. I am having a few blown up of the one Casey took, but I fear that he is far from artistic with a camera.

I haven't a clue as to what the boys upstairs are doing about the future of PERSON TO PERSON, but if I hear anything in this madhouse I will make you a signal at once.

Dear Ed:

Rumor has reached me from New York that there is some feeling on the part of CBS's Sales Department that Hamm's does not want to continue sponsoring Person to Person.

Just in case such a rumor may have reached your ears, I should like to go on record with you personally as to the high regard we have for your program and for you.

It is our honest belief that Hamm's has been greatly benefited by its long association with you --- first on radio and of course for the last five years, on television. We think this goes far deeper than rating points. We attribute some of Hamm's premium position in the public mind to its association with Ed Murrow.

When we were notified that Amoco desired to change its plans and that as a consequence it might be impossible for us to continue sponsoring you, it came as somewhat of a shock, as nothing had been further from our thoughts.

Of course, at a time like this it is necessary to re-evaluate and we are doing so, but we believe that this new re-evaluation will undoubtedly lead to the same conclusions we have held over the years and that is that we certainly would like to be in a position to continue our fine association.

I am writing this to you personally, because I was disturbed about the rumors in New York that Hamm's was no longer interested, and I wanted you to know personally how much we think of Ed Murrow and Person to Person.

Best personal regards.

Sincerely,

Bill

Dear Bill:

Your overpaid travelling "consumer research man" is glad to report that in the Western Wilderness Hamm's is the most. In most places they serve it to you naturally when you just ask for a bottle of beer.

This is really a belated report on our westward trek. We made the detour through the bad lands; spent a day in Yellowstone, which is as commercialized as Coney Island; went to the Grand Tetons, then up to Glacier which was altogether delightful although the trout fishing was a little slow. Our Janet joined us there and we drifted on out through Spokane to Seattle, had one day of excellent salmon fishing at the tip of the Olympic Peninsula; went up to Bellingham, where we found my mother in fine form; and then flew East.

Casey and I wish to report to you and Brother Moe that this is a hell of an unsatisfying island - the guides are no good, they talk too much - and we haven't been able to find a decent place for a shore lunch on the whole island. The time we spent with you at Barney's literally seems like a dream, one that is vivid and fresh and recallable in all details. Casey contends, and he means it, that he would be quite happy to be car-sick and airsick all the way, both ways, in order to have another such experience. He now has a spinning rig and spends his time in the country beating up the lawn practising, he says, for God's River next year.

I remind you, Sir, that in a matter of weeks there will be duck and pheasant shooting in Duchess County. It is eastern and it is effete, but it isn't far from New York, and you can shoot 'em from a rocking chair while wearing bedroom slippers, if you want to.

I venture to enclose the results of Casey's photographic efforts. He is rather proud of the composition of "MOOSE MOE".

The prospect of going back on the air fills me with stark terror, but maybe I'll recover from the vacation after a few weeks.

Our best salute to Odd and your family. And our best thanks for your gracious hospitality. I enjoy working with you and playing with you, and that's an altogether pleasant state of affairs.

As ever yours,

Dear Ed:

As a member of the Board of the Lafayette Fellowship Foundation, I was sorry indeed that we were not together at the luncheon held last spring in behalf of the Foundation, at which you made some impromptu but very effective remarks. This time it is my desire, in behalf of the Foundation, not to take you unaware.

There are two members of the United States Delegation to the United Nations which is presently in session, as you know, who are members of the Board of Directors of the Lafayette Fellowship Foundation. We have for sometime wished to invite a distinguished group of business and community leaders to meet them, in order to be able to explain to a wider audience the aims and objectives in relation to our program of bringing Lafayette scholars to this country.

I am acting as host at a luncheon in the Biddle Room at the Harvard Club on Thursday, December 5th at 12:30 P.M., for Miss Irene Dunne and Dr. Herman B. Wells. It would be helpful indeed if it were possible for you to join us at this luncheon and with sufficient notice in advance, to make some prepared appropriate remarks. I have asked Mr. Michael M. Nisselson, the Executive Vice President of the Foundation whom you will remember as having furnished you with information in connection with your speech at the Albert Einstein College of Medicine, to contact you if you wish any material relating to the Foundation.

I would appreciate indeed hearing from you at your earliest convenience. I realize how full your schedule is, but it may be possible for you to "steal this hour" and spend it with us.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

May we ... in behalf of the Saginaw Y.M.C.A. - borrow two minutes of your time to help us insure endless years of future growth for the kids of our city? We're not asking for money, gifts, or offerings of any type. All we ask is your voice and a few brief words recorded on the enclosed tape.

We are currently engaged in completing a new and completely modern Y.M.C.A. here in Saginaw and are in the midst of the task of spreading the word of the importance of this great addition to our city. All area media are cooperating with us to the hilt. Publicity has been most generously accorded us, but we now need a new sound - a new accent - to add further impact to our free radio time. Because of your long-standing popularity throughout our area of Northeastern Michigan it was natural that your name should be recommended as a "Public Service Spokesman" for our Y.M.C.A.

Edward R.C.

In addition to the enclosed tape, which should be recorded at 7½ speed, we have also included a few sample announcements which we would like to have you do for us, if you will. Naturally, we don't expect you to do all of them, and will be most happy if you will choose any two and record them for us in your own inimitable style and manner. The tape may then be returned to us in the enclosed self-addressed, postage-paid envelope.

Recognizing the hectic complexities of a busy schedule such as yours, we realize this request may be an imposition on your valuable time. Any effort on your part, in behalf of our Saginaw Y.M.C.A., will be, we assure you, most sincerely and humbly appreciated.

Very truly yours,

Howard W. Finger

This is _____. Your Saginaw YMCA means many things to many people. For example, to parents, the Saginaw "Y" is a trusted guide who will teach their children the enduring values they will need in adulthood ... give them a balanced outlook on life ... show them how to work and play together. The YMCA is a combination of programs and activities which build strong bodies and mold good citizens. The Saginaw YMCA, a Community Chest agency, has been doing just that since 1868. And now, with new and bigger facilities in the offing, it is preparing to be of greater service than ever before. This is _____:, asking you to support your Saginaw YMCA.

This is _____. What does the Saginaw YMCA mean to you? It could be one of many things. But if you are a young man starting in business or industry, it is a home away from home where you may have not only a decent place to stay at a price you can afford, but also have the friendship and companionship of men of your own age and interests. The new and larger Saginaw YMCA -- a Community Chest agency -- will have an expanded many-sided program of activities and events designed to help you in business and your personal realtionships. This is _____ , asking you to support your Saginaw YMCA.

This is _____. Today's growing boy needs action, adventure, and the chance to belong to a group. There's one place where he can fulfill all those needs and more. It's the Saginaw YMCA, a Community Chest agency, which soon will have new and larger facilities. The new Y will be prepared to give today's growing boy greater opportunities to pursue his interest in a hobby or craft work, to take part in group athletic activity. In short, to do all the things he wants to do, with skilled, sympathetic directors to show him how to do them. This is _____, asking you to support your Saginaw YMCA.

This is _____. What does the Saginaw YMCA mean to you? It could be one of many things. But if you are a businessman, the Y means ... above all else, perhaps ... relaxation. It means a respite from a busy day's activities with a physical workout, a swim, a rubdown or a nap to restore tired nerves and muscles. Soon, with new and larger facilities, the Saginaw YMCA -- a Community Chest agency -- will be ablt to serve the needs of businessmen more than ever before. This is _____, asking you to support your Saginaw YMCA!

This is _____. For more than 75 years, the YMCA has guided Saginaw area youth toward a constructive future. This guidance is needed more urgently today than ever before. With your help, the Saginaw YMCA, through its new building program, is preparing to provide an even greater service to the youth of the community. the "Y", a Community Chest agency, will continue to furnish competent leadership to countless boys and young men, guiding them toward responsible citizenship.

This is _____. Since 1868, the Saginaw YMCA has guided thousands of boys and young men along the path to good citizenship. Now, with a new building and expanded facilities soon to be realized, the "Y" is preparing to provide an even greater community service. This Community Chest agency, founded on broad Christian principles, has an incomparable know-how with youth - providing sound, constructive leadership for the building of high moral and spiritual characters. This is _____, asking you to support your Saginaw YMCA.

This is _____ _____. You may think of the Saginaw YMCA as an organization which runs summer camps for boys -- or as a place to go swimming -- or as an economical hotel. All of these conceptions are correct -- as far as they go. Actually, the Saginaw "Y", a Community Chest agency, is a force for democracy. It is a dynamic force which leads our youth along the road to good citizenship. Through its new building program, the Saginaw YMCA is preparing to greatly expand its services to the Saginaw community and its youth. This is _____, asking you to support your Saginaw YMCA!

This is _____. The YMCA, by building health and character in boys, has been performing a great service for the Greater Saginaw area for well over 75 years. Soon, with expanded facilities provided by a magnificent new building, many more boys and young men will be able to take advantage of the Y's programs of physical, mental and spiritual preparation for the deomocatic way of life. The Saginaw YMCA, a Community Chest agency, is YOU -- dedicated to the service of boys and young men. This is _____, asking you to support your Saginaw YMCA!

This is _____. You've undoubtedly heard the adage, "As the twig is bent, so grows the tree." Sometimes, I know, we women feel that all our time is spent struggling with stubborn twigs, getting them started in the right direction. There are many forces on our side, of course, and one is the YMCA. In Saginaw, the the "Y" has furnished competent leadership among women, as well as men, to countless boys and young men. With its new building, and your continued support, this Community Chest agency is preparing to provide a service to your youth greater than ever before. This is _____, asking you to support your Saginaw YMCA!

This is _____. Saginaw area women today benefit directly from the work of the YMCA since their sons, brothers, and husbands find so much of physical, mental, and spiritual value in the classes and games offered by the Saginaw YMCA, a Community Chest agency. As volunteer "Y" workers, women have demonstrated their dedication to the youth of the community. With the expanded facilities of the new YMCA soon to be realized, these women are preparing to be of even greater service. This is _____, asking you to support your Saginaw YMCA!

This is _____. In giving boys and young men in the Greater Saginaw area the kind of leadership they need and the type of programs and activities which appeal to them, the YMCA has no peer. A non-sectarian, non-denominational organization founded on broad Christian principles, the "Y" has an incomparable know-how with youth. With its magnificent new building and expanded facilities, the Saginaw YMCA - a Community Chest agency - will be able to provide many more boys and young men with a wholesome outlet for excess energy and spirits.

nice note

Dear Mr. Murrow;

We are writing this letter as representatives of Dibble Hall here on campus. First of all, we were genuinely disappointed in your being unable to take part in the Grinnell College Convocation.

Being the respected news analyst that you are, we were indeed looking forward to your views on American Foreign Policy. We hope we are justified in saying that we on this campus are more interested in contemporary world affairs than most. We also hope that by the time this letter reaches you, you will have recovered.

We feel here at Grinnell that this school, our school, is going a long, long way. We feel that the potentialities of this school are of the finest calibre!

We feel that we have some really outstanding men on our faculty. We feel that we have here a school with a very old and respected reputation. We feel that we have a lovely campus, enriched by all the years of tradition that have gone into establishing the reputation of which we have just spoken. Of course, this is only our opinion, and it's quite possible that we are somewhat prejudiced. As Frank Lloyd Wright said, upon visiting the campus, " I have just walked through your campus. You have lovely trees. "

What we are really trying to say is that we here at Grinnell feel that we are awfully lucky in having the opportunity of of pushing our school as far as we can. We feel that gives so much more meaning to the education we are attaining. And, the education afforded by Grinnell is a fine one!

If you have the opportunity to get out this way before the end of the academic year, and we certainly hope you do, we cordially invite you to visit our hall and chat with us. Incidentally, bring a bottle. Liquor is damn hard to come by in this state!!

We would very much appreciate hearing from you.

Dear Ed,

I was sorry to miss you in the Studio today, but I was out on a job.

Please come again (you know how grateful I shall be if you can let any of your friends know about our Studio).

I hope all went well today, I'm sure it did. You were in good hands with Dick Warman who certainly knows his stuff.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Dr. Flexner:

Since Mr. Murrow has been in Israel for the past two weeks, I would like to acknowledge receipt of your letter dated October 3rd. I am sure you underatand how busy Mr. Murrow is, and just as soon as he "catches his breath" when he returns from the Middle East next week we will call you to set up a mutually convenient time for an appointment.

I must apologise for the delay in arranging an appointment in the past, but after several unsuccessful attempts to phone you, Mr. Murrow had to leave the country to film a report on Africa and immediately following that he took his summer vacation.

I do hope you and Mr. Murrow will be able to get together shortly.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

You have doubtless seen a publication by Simon and Schuster issued last year and entitled See It Now. On page 115 there is reported a conversation with Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer. You addressed him:

"Dr. Oppenheimer, why don't we begin by your telling me a little about this Institute for Advanced Study - how it began?"

Dr. Oppenheimer replied: "It began at the time when I wasn't anywhere near; and it's already a subject for historical research. I'm about to find someone to see if he can find out how it began."

I think I called your attention to this amazing confession of ignorance once before. As a matter of fact, unless he is a complete blockhead - which is not the case - Dr. Oppenheimer knows it as well as I: whose idea it was, who enlisted the interest of Mr. Bamberger and Mrs. Fuld, his sister, and who was the first director.

Indeed I suggested the creation of an institute for higher learning when lecturing at Oxford in 1928 and in a book, which was published in 1930 by the Oxford University Press, I wrote as follows: (Universities, pp. 217-218)

"Progress might be greatly assisted by the outright creation of a school or institute of higher learning, a university in the post-graduate sense of the word. It should be a free society of scholars - free, because mature persons, animated by intellectual purposes, must be left to pursue their own ends in their own way! ... The institution should be open to persons, competent and cultivated, who do not need and would abhor spoon-feeding - be they college graduates or not. It should furnish simple surroundings - books, laboratories, and above all, tranquillity - absence of distraction either by worldly concerns or by parental responsibility for an immature student body. ... There exists in America no university in this sense - no institution, no seat of learning devoted to higher teaching and research. ... What could be expected, if a modern American university were thus established? The ablest scholars and scientists would be attracted to its faculty; the most earnest students would be attracted to its laboratories and seminars. It would be small, as Gilman's Johns Hopkins was small; but its propulsive power would be momentous out of all proportion to its size."

I do not know that Dr. Oppenheimer ever read these lectures, although my secretary called these paragraphs to the attention of the Institute librarian, who was getting data for Dr. Oppenheimer about two years ago.

Yesterday I had luncheon with Dr. Bluestone, and I am sending you a copy of a letter from which you will see that Mr. Samuel D. Leidesdorf, who was a confidential adviser to Mr. Bamberger and his sister, Mrs. Fuld, consulted

Dr. Bluestone as to the person who might be asked to advise regarding the disposition of the fortune of Mr. Bamberger. You will see if you have patience to read this letter that Dr. Bluestone referred Mr. Leidesdorf to me, that I advised against creating a medical school for Jewish students at Newark, that it was a poor place for a medical school, that a medical school for Jewish boys would be superfluous, and that the real need in this country was for an institute for advanced study. At that time I was going over the galleyproofs of Universities and later showed the above paragraphs to Mr. Leidesdorf and Mr. Bamberger and Mrs. Fuld. When Mr. Bamberger and Mrs. Fuld returned from Arizona after a month or two, they asked me to lunch with them and Mr. Leidesdorf and said they had decided to take my suggestion provided that I would undertake to be the first director. For Dr. Oppenheimer at this time to find someone to see how the Institute began is just about as superfluous and useless as was the effort of Diogenes to go about with a lighted lamp in the daytime to look for an honest man.

I should suppose that you are anxious to win public confidence for your broadcasts, but you have given no evidence of a desire of this kind in your treatment of my previous communications in reference to the matter.

Very sincerely yours,

Abraham Flexner,

Dear Doctor Flexner:

In further elaboration of the letter which I wrote to Mr. Leidesdorf on the occasion of his 75th birthday, I can give you the following details. Mr. Samuel D. Leidesdorf, who was one of the executive officers of our Board of Trustees at the time, called on me on Sunday morning, December 19, 1929, in accordance with his custom, to discuss hospital affairs. Among other things, he told me of the new Rockefeller development and said that five million dollars would be made available for some important public benefaction. Specifically, he asked my opinion about the desirability of establishing a Jewish medical school. I did not hesitate to tell him that a strictly Jewish medical school was not as urgent a necessity at that time as other educational projects which might be more eligible for consideration. This led to my suggestion that he seek you out as an outstanding educator and leading thinker on the subject of medical education who is universally credited with the remarkably effective reorganization of medical schools in the United States. In his characteristic perceptiveness and philanthropic spirit, Mr. Leidesdorf agreed that he must talk the entire matter over with you. The actual letter of introduction to his subsequent meeting with you was placed in his hands by the late Mr. Fred M. Stein, who was beginning his presidency of Montefiore Hospital at the time.

You can imagine the pleasure in which I heard shortly after that of your meeting with Mr. Leidesdorf, of the idea of the Institute for Advanced Study which you placed before him, of the establishment of the school and of your appointment as director of the enterprise. I have always felt a glow of satisfaction for the part, however minor, which I played in this dramatic turn of events.

My meeting with you at lunch this noon was another pleasant experience in our long friendship and I hope that you will have many more happy years in which to enjoy the memories of great deeds productively done.

With affectionate regards, I am

Faithfully yours,

E. N. BLIZSTONE M.D.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I received thus morning a letter from Chicago from an unknown person from which I quote:

> I have seen the television production in which Oppenheimer presents the Institute for Advanced Study. I have been amazed that Oppenheimer does not give recognition to you as the person who conceived the Institute and who was its first director. In the film, Edward Murrow questions Oppenheimer concerning the inception of the Institute, but Oppenheimer avoids an answer.

I confess I am not really astonished by Dr. Oppenheimer's silence, but I am at a loss to understand your lack of action. Your secretary wrote to me on February 6:

> Mr. Murrow is expected back on February 10th and will telephone you on his return.

But I have heard nothing from you nor has the Columbia Broadcasting Company taken any action as far as I know.

Now you have really gone and done it! Our eleven year old son had been badgering for weeks for a portable television set; and since he was receiving everything else imaginable, I had declined. Then came your gift and he concluded that it was for him, and that Folsom was a better man than his old man.

Your generosity is equaled only by my respect and, indeed, affection for you. We two Palouse boys who have somehow managed to end up in the big city ought to meet more often, and I will make you a signal for lunch when I get back from a quick trip to the West Coast.

Dear Ed.

This is to introduce my good friend Mary Hewat, who, accompanied by her husband, is visiting New York.

Mary has been working with us in Manchester on T.V., and has done - if I may say so - some extremely good work which should interest you. Not a Quiz game, not a musical, not a comedy, not a drama, not a serial came in her schedule. It was all on a reasonably intellectual level that made some appeal to the "culture" of our Northern viewers - and we have plenty of them. The Station is doing very well, thank you. The only regret we have is that the B.B.C. have the first charge on C.B.S. better programmes, including your own.

Anyway, now that our rainy season is over (and it's been Hell this summer), why not come over for a possible dry winter and the smell of a General Election ? I do not think Sir Anthony can last much longer.

Love to Janet and yourself,

As ever

Dear Ed:

Last night my sister, Sylvia Kaye, ran a kinescope of your new show SMALL WORLD.

Since you know me only slightly (an audition from the Philadelphia zoo and some very mild acquaintance in regard to THE SECRET LIFE OF DANNY KAYE), I think it is necessary to qualify what I am about to say by noting that I am not given to bursts of gushy praise.

I think that SMALL WORLD is not only a fine television show but one of yours and Fred Friendly's finest to date - as far as I am concerned, that is saying a great deal.

The technique of outstanding persons actually talking to one another as if in the same room is superb. Eric Severeid, as usual, was extremely good, and practiced the art of not dominating the program adroitly. If anything, I hoped he would say just a bit more, but that is a minor comment.

At the Peabody Award luncheon of 1952, the pleasure of winning one with WHAT IN THE WORLD was heightened by the coincidence of your winning one of your many for SEE IT NOW.

Seeing SMALL WORLD has, in retrospect, heightened the pleasure even more.

If this sounds like a fan letter, it is.

Most cordially,

Robert A. Forrest

Foster, Myron

August 26, 1957.

Dear Myron:

Nothing written about Earl will be adequate. It is times like these when those of us who deal with words realize what puny instruments they are. Kathryn mentioned in a note that sometime she would like to hear about the last morning's fishing. I have attempted to write her, and a copy is enclosed. It is without literary merit - may appear to be without heart - and indeed perhaps it should not have been written, but I felt impelled to tell her what I could.

I will attempt no stereotyped condolences to you, having no facility for appropriate phrases, but I would like to say this. My affection for Earl developed over a period of years - there were long lapses between our meetings - there were times when I was an undergraduate when he led me in a gentle fashion, while at the same time he must have been tempted to beat me over the head with the heel of a boot and have done with it. All of this is merely by way of saying that if anything is to be done in his memory - and I can think of one or two things that might be done - I shall want to be an active participant.

If there is anything that I can do for you or your family at any time, you need only command me.

As ever yours,

Mr. Myron Foster

Dear Ed:

Dad always said I was the worst letter writer he knew and it looks as if I am following in old pathways again. Ever since our trip I have wanted to thank you for all you did for us and especially for driving back to Seattle with me. I shall always remember your kindness. It helped very much to talk to you but I must have bent your ear unmercifully about politics and economics, my favorite subjects. Somehow at the time I couldn't talk about Dad and what had happened. Must have been in somewhat of a daze.

That was a long night, probably much longer for you. I don't know how those in the public eye have any peace of mind when strangers are continually invading their privacy. I was very disturbed for you but then reasoned that after all these years, you must be accustotomed to handling such things. One thing still has me very confused. Where did we make the wrong turn to end us up in Bremerton?

Did you sell your car? If not and it is still here on the coast, my offer still goes. I would be glad to give you a hand with it, so let me know.

Mother is back home now after staying here a week to give her a chance to be prepared to go home and face things that reminded her of Dad. We flew to La Jolla and she took everything just fine. She seems to be adjusting much better than any of us had expected. While there, we got all of the legal matters cleared for her. She has never taken care of business matters and I was glad most of them could be cleared so quickly. Her neighbors are just wonderful and have been a real help.

Pat and I are hoping Mother will decide to move up here to live after awhile, but feel she should decide for herself. There are many things we cannot do for her because of the distance. She has not been too well and we would like her close where we can watch and help her. Maybe if they had lived closer

I could have picked up the beginning of Dad's heart attack. I was nauseated from the boat ride and thought he was too. I sure was lacking in knowing the condition and to think I pick these things up in my patients all the time.

In the past weeks I have often thought of our trip and the events that took place. At first it was hard to believe what had happened was reality, but time does help us to see more clearly. Dad was happy at the end doing the things he loved most and I can't help but think that he knew the time was near and wanted circumstances as they were. He carried the secret from World War I of a heart condition for which he received compensation for fourteen year. Neither Mother nor I knew of it and I guess he would have told us had he wanted us to know. He was not only a brave and unselfish person, but a devoted husband and the most any son could want in a father. All of us will miss him, but I sincerely believe that no man really dies who remains in the hearts of those behind and he will in ours.

You were one of Dad's most loved and respected friends and your kindness to me will be forever appreciated. We hope it will not be too long before seeing you again. Our home is open to you and your family at all times. We have a restful place and with the hectic schedule you keep you might appreciate having peace and quiet occasionally when in this area.

Tell Tracy that I think he is a real fisherman. You can certainly be proud of him Ed. He is going to be a real man when he grows up. Suppose we can make a dentist out of him? He picks out a good toothbrush.

My very best regards to you, Janet and Tracy.

Sincerely

Bob.

P.S. You have a new TV fan in our 4-year-old Nancy. When you appeared on your person-to-person show this week we told her that Daddy knew Mr. Murrow. She dashed over and gave you a real "smacker" on the set.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am one of the executors of the estate of the late Hugh Govan who was a business associate of your brother Lacey and Walter Draham of Olympia.

I have been informed by sources in Sequim that you are interested in making an investment on the Olympic Peninsula.

We have for sale a farm containing approximately 270 acres in Clallam County on the main highway between Sequim and Port Angeles. On this property there is one large house, three smaller houses and a large hay barn with feed racks. Mr. Govan ran about 250 head of beef cattle and raised approximately 300 tons of hay per year. While this property is not water front property, there is a view of the Straits from the main house.

We are asking $110,000.00 for this property, which price includes some farm and irrigation equipment.

If you are interested in this type investment, please advise me and I will furnish you with any additional information you might desire.

Very sincerely,

Josephine Fox

Dear Pat:

Good luck with the picture! I don't know exactly where we stand about Barnee Briskin, but I am grateful for your word on the subject.

Do let me know when you are coming to New York again; it has been much too long since we met.

Dear Ed:

I am out here doing an Air Force movie for Twentieth Century Fox.

I just heard that you were considering using Barnee Briskin on your "Person to Person" show and I think he would be most successful.

A few months ago Barnee showed me all the material he has gathered in twenty-six years of watching Congress dance and he has some terrific stories. When I get a chance - and God knows when that will be - I'm going to do an article on him.

All the best,

Dear Pat:

Many thanks for your letter of June 23rd.

We did one hurricane piece on SEE IT NOW almost two years ago, so I don't think we'll be likely to be doing another one this season.

Thanks, however, for thinking of us, and taking the trouble to make the suggestion.

With all good wishes,

Sincerely,

Dear Ed:

I have an idea for a television documentary film which I feel would be very exciting. You may have considered it already, in which case I apologize for wasting time.

Why not do a hurricane from all angles? Title it whatever the name of the hurricane is, saying "Hazel."

A hurricane starts, so far as man is concerned, about two thousand miles south of here when a weather station, or ship, first notices an "area of suspicion." Navy hurricane hunting planes from Jacksonville, or perhaps Puerto Rico, shadow it thereafter.

In Miami is the Weather Bureau's plotting center. Once a storm is located, they send out advisory warnings every six hours, and when the storm nears the mainland, every hour or two. Their chart rooms and communications center, operating around the clock, makes an exciting background.

Then, of course, the hurricane strikes.

This year, if one hits Florida, it will be by no means a disaster, no matter how many buildings are damaged. The state desperately needs the heavy rains. Many lakes have dried up.

The effect on humans is mixed, and dramatic.

Should you decide to do such a story, I would like to participate in writing the script. I can think of about six locations for camera and sound right now.

All the best,

Pat

Dear Ed:

I also sweat and fret and cuss myself, for taking it on, when there is a major piece of writing to do -- and the closer to deadline the more I fume and the more disorganized I become. It finally gets done and occasionally I'm satisfied but it is torture before the final draft is completed.

So, I have an idea of what you would go through in preparing a fresh and major piece for The Pulse luncheon. Likewise, I have an idea that inviting you at the tailend of a full season of hard creative work, just when you're fagged out and looking ahead to six or eight weeks of rest, also had something to do with your turndown.

But, how about this for a solution: forget about doing a fresh piece of speech writing. Just use the material you used at the Einstein Awards affair. The people we'll have at The Pulse luncheon did not hear your Einstein talk.

Or, if you'd rather, give me a copy of your Einstein talk and let me do a fresh draft. If it makes sense, give me your comments and permit me to do a preliminary polish; then you finish it off.

That way I earn my pesos for Pulse and you get your rest. Nor would I be ghosting a piece for you; it's my hunch that if we exchanged ideas on this, over a pint of mild, our thoughts would just about blend.

This approach also resolves the possibility of your having to cancel out at the last minute. Should another Suez pop our audience would understand; and Friendly, Zousmer or Aarons could step in and read your piece.

How about it Ed? I'll call you on Friday.

Sincerely,

Lou

P.S. Q: How many drafts did I do of this letter?

A: Eight, by actual count of the balled false starts on the floor of my typewriter stand.

Frankel, Lou

June 17, 1957

Dear Lou:

I can't do it. Reason - if I agree now, I'll probably have to cancel at the last moment and if I don't, I will just sweat too much blood writing the piece. I am sort of an agonizing writer and I just haven't time to prepare something that would be suitable to the group.

Thanks for asking me.

Dear Ed:

Here is the fact sheet on our phone conversation last week.

Topic: Ed Murrow as guest of honor at 16th annual luncheon of The Pulse.

Date: Wednesday, October 23, 1957.

Place: Hotel Plaza, New York.

Why Murrow: Because of what he said in accepting the Einstein Commemorative Award.

Because of See It Now, Person to Person, and the 7:45 news on radio.

Because Murrow & Crew never forget that a human being needs exposure to ideas to live. (Curtail the stimulii to his mind, conscience and ambition and a man needs only to exist - and that he can do with bread and water.)

However the men of Madison Avenue and the boys of broadcasting have started to forget that the exchange of ideas and controversy of opinion is basic Americanism. The curtain of complacency is closing in on the truly mass medium of broadcasting.

What Murrow said in accepting the Einstein Award might have more impact if said before 300 ad agency and advertiser and broadcaster people at The Pulse luncheon.

If sponsors and stations continue to offer mediocre programs because they're cheaper and - sometimes - get a larger audience, then it's just a question of time before broadcasting audiences begin to shrink. Take the program impact out of broadcasting and it's nothing but pap and "pap don't sell no pop".

Guests at Some Previous Pulse Luncheons: Bob Kintner, Bob Saudek, Allen B. Dumont, Marion Harper, Jr., etc.

I know of no one else who can say what has to be said, get the point across, and have the audience applaud the speech.

Say you'll do it, Ed.

Sincerely,

Lou

Dear Mr. Murrow,

I am writing to you at the suggestion of Howard K. Smith, Chief European Correspondent of C.B.S. News in London, to ask you for your very kind co-operation in the following matter.

The Honorary Officers of the Jewish National Fund would be extremely grateful if you would allow us the use of your film "Egypt & Israel" for a special Gala Premiere in aid of our Fund. As you perhaps know, some negotiations had been going on with Mr. Sydney Bernstein of Granada Cinemas in connection with this film, but we have now been told both by Mr. Bernstein and Mr. Smith that the film will not be used as originally intended, and in the circumstances it appears that subject to your and Mr. Fred W. Friendly's permission we could have the film for our purpose.

I am sure that there is no need for me to dwell upon the aims and purposes of the Jewish National Fund, which is the oldest established and most renowned of the Israel fund raising institutions, and is in fact the pioneer of all work in Israel by originally providing and now developing the land on which all important Settlements and Institutions are founded. In addition of course the Jewish National Fund has been responsible for most of the afforestation of the country and plays a vital part in the development of its water resources.

The J.N.F. Charitable Trust has, over many years, saved the lives of hundreds of thousands of Jewish refugees and given them a new home in Israel. All this work is still going on and desperately needs funds. We trust that with your very kind co-operation we may by your generous permission use this film for one Gala Opening, and thereby raise additional funds so badly needed at this critical hour in the lives of our people.

PTO.

I look forward to hearing from you, and should like to thank both you and Mr. Friendly most sincerely in anticipation of your favourable consideration of this letter.

Yours sincerely,

R.J. Friedmann.

Miss Charlotte Friel is being considered by this Department for a position as Recreation Leader overseas.

In the application for employment, the candidate indicates:
[x] your name as a reference [ ] association with your organization from

---------- to ----------

The Department is charged with the responsibility of administering certain critical programs both at home and abroad. It is essential that these programs be administered in a manner which reflects to the credit of this Government. Therefore, it is necessary that individuals selected for employment be fully qualified and have personal characteristics and loyalty which are above reproach.

In selecting applicants we must depend in a large measure upon information and advice given us by persons who have been associated with them. It will be appreciated, therefore, if you will furnish to the best of your knowledge information as indicated on the reverse side of this letter. Your frank evaluation will be of great assistance to us in determining the applicant's suitability for selection for the above position. The information which you furnish will be held in confidence.

Inasmuch as final selection for this position will be influenced by your reply, we shall appreciate hearing from you as soon as possible. We are enclosing a self-addressed envelope which requires no postage.

Just a note to let you know that I have applied for employment with Radio Free Europe in Munich -- and in doing so, I listed your name among my personal references, remembering you once offered to help me get to Europe! I tried to call you to warn you but you were in Israel at the time I was sending my resume.

I'm hoping to be able to get a job abroad by early next fall -- I'd like to remain here with CBS until September. I'm still enjoying my job as Mr. Hallonquist's assistant in Program Analysis very much, but since nothing has developed for me here in the production department in these two years, I think I'd like to "broaden the horizon" a bit.

My mother is venturing East for the first time to visit me for a couple of weeks in April. I'll give Miss Holder a call when she comes to see if you have a free minute -- I know she'd like to thank you personally for being so nice to me.

Please remember me to Mrs. Murrow and Casey -- I enjoyed your Christmas card so much.

With this strong backing, I am confident that KNAC-TV will have a most successful operation.

I am very grateful to John and also Senator Fulbright for speaking to you on behalf of KNAC-TV. If you want any further information or data I will see that same is forwarded to you promptly and delivered to you personally if you so desire.

New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Akerberg:

In accordance with your telephone conversation of yesterday with Mr. Jerome M. Ney, we are writing to express our interest in becoming the CBS affiliate in this market. American Television Co., Inc. holds a construction permit for Channel 5, which CP specifies a 10 KW transmitter, with 6 element antenna, for power of 50,000 watts. We expect initially, however, to go on the air with a 5 KW transmitter with an estimated 26,000 watts effective radiated power.

The transmitter site is Mt. Vista, some 5.3 miles nne of the Fort Smith business district, but with a substantial elevation above Fort Smith. Atop this mountain will be mounted a 365' guyed tower which, with the radiators, will furnish a tower height of 448' above ground. Even with the foothills of the Ozarks lying behind the tower to the north, our antenna still retains an elevation of 642' above average terrain. From this site we have a commanding view of the entire Arkansas River basin and expect excellent coverage in all of the areas of concentrated population important to the economic life of Fort Smith and to advertisers wishing to avail themselves of the purchasing power of this population.

An order has been placed with General Electric for all new equipment of the latest design, which contract was signed on August 1st. GE has promised the equipment for delivery, including the tower, within approximately thirty days. The target date for being on the air with programming is on or before November 1st, 1956.

According to Broadcasting Magazine, KFSA-TV, the UHF station in Fort Smith, (and the only tv coverage now existing in this market with any degree of consistency and clarity) claims a 40,600 set count. We expect that this count will be approximately doubled with Channel 5, KNAC-TV, because of the better coverage of VHF as against UHF. Our station will also fill in those serious "holes" that even now exist in the KFSA-TV area.

With respect to station management, we wish to advise that we have retained Mr. Weldon Stamps of this city as General Manager, effective immediately. Mr. Stamps has been in the broadcasting business for twenty-six years in all capacities and is well and favorably received in this area. He managed the radio properties for Southwestern Publishing Co. of Fort Smith and built and operated KFSA-TV until October 1955, at which time he applied for a construction permit for his own radio station here. He now owns and operates KTCS, a 500 watt daytime outlet, but because he is still very much interested in tv, arrangements have been worked out with him to take over the General managership and supervision of KNAC-TV. We can assure you that Mr. Stamps is highly competent, exceptionally well qualified for this particular position, and that he will give good business administration to our station. I am sure that your network has already had experience in dealing with Mr. Stamps and I am confident that his relationship with your people has been completely satisfactory. You may be assured that we will do everything within our power to satisfy, in all areas, the responsibilities of our network affiliation.

Our rate cards, coverage maps, and market data are in various stages of preparation at this time and we have nothing to forward you along these lines as yet. In the meantime I am certain your own Research Department will be examining the market and the data you require may even now be in your hands. Certainly we want to supply you with whatever information you require and we trust you will advise us of such additional information, which will be forwarded to you immediately.

We hope that a dependable VHF affiliate for the Fort Smith, Arkansas market will be advantageous to CBS and that we may look forward to becoming your affiliate. We shall do everything possible to insure a long and mutually profitable affiliation between our two companies.

We would be pleased to have you advise us at your earliest convenience as to the next step you would like for us to take.

Very truly yours,

A NEW VENTURE IN INTERNATIONAL UNDERSTANDING

INTRODUCTION

The largest international educational exchange program in our history was launched on August 1, 1946, when the Seventy-ninth Congress enacted Public Law 584, the Fulbright Act. With the end of World War II and the advent of nuclear weapons, the compelling need for greater international understanding and good will among nations could no longer be ignored. As Sen. J. W. Fulbright said, "We all know that no country is far away in the age of airplanes. The necessity for increasing our understanding of others and their understanding of us has an urgency that it has never had in the past. The adoption of this program by the Congress is a vital counterpart to the steps we are taking to increase our participation in world affairs."

The educational exchange program was designed to meet this challenge on the cultural level, just as the Marshall plan on the economic level, and later the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization on political and military levels. In terms of lessening the likelihood of another war by promoting greater people-to-people understanding, the program has been described as the most fabulously profitable investment ever authorized by the Congress of the United States. Altogether, nearly 22,000 persons have been exchanged with 28 countries at a lower cost to the American taxpayers than 5 hours of fighting World War II.[1]

Beating Swords Into Plowshares

The Fulbright Act itself is a plan for turning the implements of war into instruments of peace and understanding. At the end of World War II many millions of dollars worth of American military equipment were left idle in warehouses all over the world. They included bulldozers, machine tools, locomotives, and food and clothing stocks which could be of great usefulness in rebuilding the war-devastated countries in which they were located. Yet these countries did not have the dollars with which to purchase this much needed equipment.

The bill, as introduced by Sen. J. W. Fulbright, proposed that we sell our war surpluses to the governments of these countries--not for dollars, but for their own foreign currencies and credits. Part of these funds would be set aside, through special agreements, for educational exchange purposes. In that way, both the United States and these countries could profit mutually. The debt would be paid, but it would be paid in terms of things money cannot buy--good will and better international understanding.

[1] See appendix 1 for number of exchanges with each country and appendixes 2 and 3 for the cost.

The Hoover Precedent

A precedent for this type of educational exchange program was established in 1920 by former President Herbert Hoover. His experiences and views on the subject were stated in a letter to Senator Fulbright.

"In 1920, as a disposal of part of the funds from liquidation of supplies, etc., for the Belgian Relief Commission, I established the Belgian-American Educational Foundation, the purpose of which was exactly what you propose. In its 25 years, more than 700 individuals (477 Belgians and 225 Americans) were exchanged during the period between World War I and World War II. Several important results have followed. At the outbreak of World War II nearly one-quarter of the teaching and research faculty of the Belgian universities had been graduate students in American universities. One Prime Minister and six Cabinet members have likewise done graduate work in American universities. Numbers of American and Belgian professors and specialists have been exchanged between our American and Belgian universities. ... I doubt whether there is a country in Europe where the ideals and purposes of the American people are so well understood and so respected as they are in Belgium."

If such results could be achieved in a single country, the future augured well for a program that would embrace many countries throughout the world. Steps were taken in this direction in 1939, when Congress authorized the Department of State to conduct an official program of educational and cultural exchanges within the Western Hemisphere, as part of our good neighbor policy. However, it was not until the Fulbright Act was passed that the Department could initiate a large-scale program commensurate with the needs of the times.

GETTING THE VENTURE UNDER WAY

The Role of the Department

A long-term venture of the magnitude authorized by the Fulbright Act required careful planning. The Act placed responsibility for administering the program in the Department of State which set about establishing the necessary machinery of operations. The resulting pattern is shown in the chart on page 4. In addition, the Department had to negotiate executive agreements with each country covering the sale of surplus property and to determine the amount of foreign currency accruing from these sales that could be used for educational exchange purposes. These amounts ranged from the equivalent of $16,000 annually for the Union of South Africa to $1 million annually for such countries as the United Kingdom, France, Italy, and Japan.

By the fall of 1947 the first two of these agreements had been signed. Today the program is active in 23 countries in Europe, the Middle East, Asia, and the South Pacific. Next year a program with Chile will inaugurate operations in the Western Hemisphere.

Binational Foundations and Commissions Abroad

Under these executive agreements binational Foundations or Commissions have been established to administer the program in each country according to general policies established by the Board of Foreign Scholarships and the Department of State. Americans and foreign nationals of outstanding reputation and influence work together as members of these bodies to plan annual programs consistent with the needs, resources, and interests of the United States and the participating countries. The binational administration of this "educational exchange trust fund" has done much to develop public confidence in it both in this country and abroad.

The Board of Foreign Scholarships

The Fulbright Act wisely provides for a Board of Foreign Scholarships appointed by the President to assure impartial supervision of the program and to select persons and educational institutions qualified to participate. Its members, including outstanding representatives of cultural, educational, student, and veterans groups, help to keep the program fresh with the vigor of American scholarship and ideas.

Selection: Criteria and Procedures

On July 18, 1947, the President announced the appointments of the first members to the Board.[1] One of their most immediate tasks was to decide what kinds of people should be selected and how they should be selected. The Board concluded that academic or professional competence should be a primary criterion for selection. In view of the purpose of the program, they decided that it was equally important that the people selected be good unofficial ambassadors for their countries and be able to adapt well to unfamiliar and sometimes difficult environments. Therefore they went on record as favoring candidates who display a broad range of interests, who participate actively in community life, and who give evidence of a capacity for leadership. According to the terms of the Act, American veterans are given preference, provided their qualifications are equivalent to those of nonveterans.[2]

In tackling the question of how grantees should be selected, the Board decided to enlist the help of organizations with special competence in this field. Acting on the Board's recommendation, the Department contracted with three agencies to assist in recommending candidates and to provide other related services (see chart on page 4).

Geographic Distribution of Grantees

The Board also took steps to assure compliance with the directive in the Act that "due consideration be given to applicants from all geographic areas of the United States." As a result of continuing efforts by the Board and all other agencies concerned with the administration of the program, people from every State, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico have been selected for grants.[3]

Public-Private Cooperation

One of the most difficult problems facing the Board was how to defray dollar expenses for foreign grantees during their stay in the United States. Since grants could be made only in nonconvertible foreign currencies, benefits to nationals of other countries had to be limited to travel expenses to and from the United States. On the other hand, many private organizations and institutions offered scholarship assistance which qualified foreign nationals were often unable to accept because they couldn't finance the expense of international travel.

The Board, therefore, recommended that, wherever possible, travel grants under the Fulbright Act be awarded in conjunction with the scholarship programs of reputable private groups here and abroad. Thus both public and private programs benefited. Moreover, the existence of Government-financed travel grants stimulated the offering of more scholarships by private groups.

The response from American educational institutions and organizations as well as from public and private sources overseas has been enthusiastic and generous. It is estimated that the total of such financial support to the program during 1955 amounted to approximately $6 million--scarcely a million less than the dollar equivalent of foreign currencies expended by the Government.

The extent of public-private cooperation in this program cannot be measured in terms of financial collaboration alone. Its real significance can be assessed only when one looks at the voluntary services rendered by thousands of our own citizens and those of other countries--the people who serve on committees and in advisory capacities, and the families and individuals who help to make grantees "at home abroad." More than 5,500 American educators and specialists in many fields are currently serving on 860 screening committees throughout the country. State committees serve by appointment of the Governors in every State and Territory. In addition, Fulbright advisers and foreign student advisers on over 1,000 campuses are helping American applicants and foreign grantees.

Integration With Other Exchange Programs

The program under the Fulbright Act is closely integrated into the overall International Educational Exchange Program administered by the Department of State. The Smith-Mundt Act of 1948 (Public Law 402, 80th Congress) is the basic authority for the Department's exchange-of-persons activities with over 70 countries and dependencies in the free world.

Although maximum use is made of private scholarships and other resources where available, dollars appropriated under the Smith-Mundt Act are still necessary to utilize to the fullest foreign currency grants under the Fulbright Act in 23 countries. It is estimated that one appropriated dollar in United States currency and one or more dollars from private sources are required for each two dollars available in foreign currency.

THE SUCCESS OF THE VENTURE

When the Fulbright Act was signed in 1946, Congress recognized that a long-range venture of this kind would be cumulative in effect and that some of the benefits might not become apparent for many years. Considering that the program started on a very limited scale in 1948 and did not reach sizable proportions until 1950, it might seem too soon to take an inventory of its accomplishments.

Yet, so great has been the interest abroad in the United States and the need so urgent in our own country for greater knowledge and understanding of other peoples, that by the end of 1955 dramatic results are clearly apparent.

Benefits to Foreign Nationals

Over 12,000 foreign students, teachers, lecturers, and research scholars have observed American life at firsthand in towns and cities in all of our 48 States, the District of Columbia, Hawaii, and Alaska. Systematic evaluation studies indicate that these people not only return home with a better understanding of the United States, but share that understanding with their fellow countrymen through informal discussions, lectures, articles, and books. Their activities draw greater significance from the fact that many of them are becoming leaders in the community and national life of their countries. In India, for example, at least half of the returned grantees have enhanced their positions and many hold posts where they have a voice in policymaking on an all-India level.

Grantees also take home a store of new knowledge and skills valuable to the scientific, social, and cultural development of their countries.

- In Finland a young doctor who studied with the first "blue baby" heart specialist at Johns Hopkins University Hospital has since performed many successful operations on children with congenital heart disease.
- In Egypt a young woman lawyer, who took her master's degree in social work at the University of Southern California, has become the first woman District Attorney in the Middle East. Her United States training will be of particular value in her work in the juvenile courts.
- In Italy a professor of medicine at the University of Genoa has set up an isotope laboratory after having done research in hematology and visited medical and biological projects of the Atomic Energy Commission in the United States.
- In England returned British scholars have given a big boost to the study of American history and literature at King's College, Cambridge, the Universities of Hull and Nottingham, and a number of other educational institutions.

What personal meaning does the exchange experience have? Grantees phrase it in many ways. One, for example, contrasted his countrymen's scoffing attitude toward America a few years ago with their favorable attitude today. "Americans haven't changed," he said. "We just know them better." Perhaps the most laconic was the answer of the foreign student to the question of friends back home whether he liked the United States. Proudly introducing his new bride to his countrymen, he said, "I married an American."

More typical, however, are the following samples:

- "I believe that my year in the United States has been the single most important event in my life. ... Considering my future career--that of a journalist and politician--it has been an invaluable experience. The most important result... however, is that I have discovered the real America."
- "Not the least important stimulus has been that of sharing for nine months in the ordinary life of the United States, and of meeting a cross section of American citizens of all walks of life. ...

No one could, I hope, live for any length of time with so generally openhearted and kindly a race as the Americans and remain unaffected. But of that it is hard to speak because it is impossible to forget."

- "Seeing the much vaunted American way of life would convince the stanchest Communist that there must be something to individual liberty and free enterprise after all. ... The American has no need for a blueprint of democracy--he lives it."

Benefits to American Citizens

Over 9,000 Americans have had the opportunity of becoming intimately acquainted with the ways of life, problems, and values of the people of other countries. Through their studies they are adding continually to our store of knowledge about these countries. At the same time they are, by example as well as by words, explaining our way of life to the people they meet and with whom they work. Furthermore, they are gaining new insights into America. As James Truslow Adams once said, "Residence in foreign countries is likely to bring out the inherent 'Americanism' of the sojourner." Many tangible results are already evident.

Our somewhat meager knowledge of the languages and history of many countries of the Near East and Asia is being increased every year by the work of American grantees and visiting foreign scholars. These benefits are not confined to students in our universities and colleges. They are being shared with the general public through lectures, articles, and books. People as far apart as Schenectady, N.Y., and Little Rock, Ark., are learning more about India in their clubs and on TV from returned grantees. People in our Middle West are learning about life in the Middle East through frequent talks by an American professor who spent a year in Iraq.

American scholars are also advancing the frontiers of knowledge through joint research with their foreign colleagues. At the Institute for Coagulation Research at the University of Oslo, American scholars have worked together with Norwegian specialists in developing anticoagulants and successfully treating some 700 patients with various types of heart disease. In Germany another American scholar is working with a Nobel prize winning biochemist on the conversion of light into chemical energy. An American forestry expert is studying Scandinavian methods of utilizing waste wood products. His purpose is to help the United States to save some of the $140 million which he estimates is lost each year through inefficient handling of wood byproducts.

How does the American view his experience in terms of better international understanding? Here are the ways two grantees expressed their views.

- "Once a person has lived in a country for a reasonable period of time... and has gradually come into intimate acquaintance with its people, then that person can never be indifferent to that country, can never fail to want others to know and understand it as he has done, can never be unappreciative of its struggle for a better life, nor unmoved by its failures. ... But not only does he gain in knowledge and understanding of the country with which he comes into such close contact, he finds that he has suddenly gained a real insight into the way of life of his own country."
- "Ordinary people of different countries who live and work together in day-to-day contact cannot help developing feelings of friendliness and sympathy and lose part of their fear and suspicion of each other. ... My experience during the last two years... has convinced me that these things are true. I have made friends of people who have never had American friends before. I believe that I have made America more real and more reasonable to them than it seemed previously. ... Our international policies may not always command wholehearted approval, but discussing them usually succeeds in removing doubts about American motives."

How Exchange Activities Contribute to Program Goals

The story of the program's success in creating a better understanding of the United States abroad, in developing greater knowledge and understanding of other countries in the United States, and in advancing the frontiers of learning through the exchange of knowledge and skills can best be told by examining in detail some of the particular exchange activities that have been carried out since 1948.[1]

Creating Better Understanding of the United States Abroad

The situation around the world has changed radically from the days of Sir Sydney Smith, who remarked in 1820, "In the four quarters of the globe, who reads an American book or goes to an American play, or looks at an American picture or statue, what does the world yet owe to American physicians and surgeons? What new substance have their chemists discovered?" Yet, even as late as World War II, when America's scientific and material achievements had achieved wide recognition, Sir Sydney Smith might still have asked, "Who knows much about the American peoples, their government, culture and way of life?"

One of the important goals of the program under the Fulbright Act is to bring forth an affirmative answer to this question in countries as near as the United Kingdom, France, and Italy, and as far away as India, Burma, and Japan. Here are some of the answers.

1. Development of American Studies in Foreign Universities

Thousands of foreign students around the world are now learning about American history, literature, government, and the free enterprise system from courses given by American lecturers or by their own scholars who specialized in these subjects while in the United States. During 1955 alone, American studies courses were offered in educational institutions in Finland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, the United Kingdom, France, Italy, Egypt, India, Pakistan, Ceylon, Japan, New Zealand, and the Union of South Africa. Altogether, since the beginning of the program, over 1,200 American and foreign grantees have lectured or specialized in American studies courses.

In France nearly all the Departments of English in French universities offer courses in American literature and civilization leading to a master's degree. The Chair in American Literature and Civilization established at the State University at Liége, Belgium, by an American lecturer in 1953 has been so successful that the Universities of Ghent and Brussels plan to offer such courses in the future. Belgian teachers have returned to develop in primary and secondary schools new units of study in American history.

The series of lectures by an American professor at the University of Rome in 1950 created such interest in American studies that they have become an integral part of the curricula at three Italian universities, and seven other Italian universities are planning to establish such courses. This trend has been matched by a notable increase in publications on American history, the development and functioning of American democracy, and books and essays on the American novel, poetry, and literary criticism.

In Germany not a single university accepted American studies as a major field for an advanced degree before World War II. Today, among the universities which have approved this field for the conferring of advanced degrees are those at Cologne, Frankfort, Mainz, Münster, Munich, and the Free University of Berlin.

An American lecturer in Sweden created such interest in American history at the University of Stockholm that his successor has not only met with steadily increasing attendance at his classes, but has also initiated a course on American institutions at the Stockholm School of Economics.

The widespread interest in American studies has extended to many Near and Far Eastern countries. In Egypt, through the efforts of American lecturers, the teaching of American literature has been introduced into the curricula of three Egyptian universities. In India a professor who undertook advanced historical studies at the University of California has become head of the Department of History at Gauhati University, Assam, and has introduced the first course in American history.

2. American Studies Conferences and Seminars

The mounting interest in American studies overseas could not be satisfied solely through university courses. Many career people who had finished their formal academic training were interested in short-term conferences and workshops to discuss American subjects and methods with American scholars. The Board of Foreign Scholarships decided to meet this interest primarily by enlisting the services of American professors already abroad under the program.

The request for the first such conference came from a group of British scholars who were particularly anxious to have a common forum for the discussion of their American interests, under the guidance of American professors. The idea was later extended to include sessions for British high school teachers. The result has been four conferences in which 43 American lecturers have held discussions with British teachers and scholars representing over 160 educational institutions. The benefits of the 1954 conference were further increased when the British Broadcasting Company, taking advantage of the presence of such a distinguished group of American lecturers, recorded a 3-month program which was beamed to schools throughout the British Isles early in 1955.

The success of these conferences prompted eminent British scholars to organize, in May 1955, a British Association for American Studies. The association not only plans to continue these conferences, but also to stimulate study and research in the British Isles on the history, institutions, literature, and geography of the United States.

Around the World. Similar conferences, seminars, and workshops have been conducted in other countries, including France, Italy, Germany, Norway, the Netherlands, Pakistan, India, and Japan. In Norway, eight summer seminars have been held since 1953, for groups ranging from elementary and secondary school teachers to workers and leaders in the trade union movement.

Participants have come from other Scandinavian countries as well as Norway. American professors and research scholars have lectured and held discussions with these groups on "Trade Unions in American Society," "American Civilization," "U. S. Education Today," and "The Role of Congress and the Origin and Growth of the American People."

The popularity of the seminars is revealed in the comments of some of the participants. "... We have met American professors, we have been listening to them, and during their lessons the picture of America has become richer, more full of details"; "... the greatest value of this course has been the general orientation it has given us of American life," and "... All the lecturers have given us a clear picture of American social problems in an excellently objective fashion."

Other results can be glimpsed from a recent report which indicates that through the assistance of Norwegian teachers, 27,000 Norwegian pupils have received within the last 6 months copies of the publication, U.S.A.--Its Geography and Growth. Altogether, during the last 3 years, Norwegian schools have tripled the quantity of books and other reading material about the United States used in English classes.

In India. The Seminars on American Civilization will enter their 4th year in India in 1956. College and university teachers, representing practically every state in the Indian Union, participated in the last seminar which was held at the Indian Institute at Bangalore. Among the topics discussed were "American Government and Foreign Policy," "American Art," "American Literature," and "American Economic Organization." Both Indian and American participants, along with their families, lived together at the Institute. The informal experience of living with typical American families contributed as much to the success of the seminar as the lectures themselves. The Ford Foundation defrayed the cost of travel and partial maintenance for Indian participants, and the Railway Ministry of the Government of India regarded the project important enough to authorize concessional travel fares. The fact that many participants in the seminars apply for scholarships for future study in the United States is evidence of the interest which the seminars have stimulated in American studies.

In Japan. Conferences and seminars on American studies have been held in Japan since 1953. The most recent was the seminar on Public Administration which took place in Fukuoka last May. Its purpose was to bring together Japanese government officials and representatives from Japanese educational institutions to develop public administration studies and practices in Japan. American lecturers discussed such topics as, "Revenue Problems of Local Government," "American Concepts and Recent Trends in Public Administration and Personnel Administration," "The Case Study Method in Public Administration," and "Trends in State and Local Administration." As a result of the seminar, the Dean of the Faculty of Law of Kyushu University proposed regular meetings of faculty members to develop further the study of public administration, and a Japanese professor is scheduled to visit the United States in 1956 to pursue further studies in this field. The Embassy commented, "The seminar was a perfect medium for introducing--without shoving--American ideas in a little developed field. American participants, too, learned much from the exposition of Japanese problems and attitudes. In sum these two days and what followed represents educational exchange at its best."

3. English-Language Training

Former President Quezon of the Philippines once said, "If you want democratic ideals and institutions to flourish here . . . you should help to diffuse among the masses a knowledge of English. It is in English Literature that comprehensive discussions of true liberty and democracy are to be found." The Board of Foreign Scholarships, since the beginning of the program, has consistently sought to promote English-language teaching and linguistic study, particularly in the countries of the Near and Far East.

Altogether more than 1,150 American and foreign nationals have engaged in study, research, and teaching in this field. In countries such as the Philippines, Burma, and Greece, significant English-teaching projects date back to 1948-49.

In the Far East. In the Philippines the United States Educational Foundation and the Philippine Government's Ministry of Education have enthusiastically supported a long-range program for the improvement of the teaching of English in the Philippine school system. In the 1st year of the program, Americans began their lectures in the Philippine Normal Schools and Filipino teachers and English supervisors were awarded grants to study English teaching and supervisory methods in the United States. Later American lecturers in linguistic science gave courses and held seminars for teachers of English in the Philippines. These seminars have been particularly successful as "refresher" courses for teachers who have not had the opportunity to receive specialized training either in their own country or in the United States. The teaching of English is also to be an important adjunct of the newly established Asian Institute at the University of the Philippines. The use of a common language will help realize the purposes of the Institute, which are not only to forge stronger bonds between the people of the Philippines and their Southeast Asian neighbors, but also to show that the kind of mutual understanding developed by Filipinos and Americans can help to provide answers to some of the long-standing human, social, educational, and economic problems of Asia.

In anticipation of the signing of an agreement under the Fulbright Act, a survey was made in Thailand in 1948 which concluded that "the basic need here is for English so that future training in other fields by English-speaking teachers will be grasped by the students." Furthermore lack of familiarity with the English language was a basic handicap to advanced students in making use of reference materials in English at Thai universities. Therefore, the first program in Thailand included grants for nine American teachers of English. By 1953 interest in the English language had reached such proportions that the United States Educational Foundation was unable to meet the requests of many Thai schools for teachers of English. As a consequence, in 1954, a beginning was made to shift the emphasis away from the general objective of "improving the knowledge of English" at many levels of instruction and to concentrate on the training of Thai teachers of English. This shift accorded with a general policy of the Board of Foreign Scholarships to send American linguistic experts to establish centers of linguistic study and to introduce new methods of instruction so that each country could eventually develop its own experts, train its own teachers, and produce its own texts.

In Japan American teachers have been placed in widely dispersed areas. They are not only helping to raise the standards of English teaching, but are providing personal examples of American democracy in daily contacts in areas where there has been little previous communication with Americans. At the same time Japanese teachers of English and supervisors of English teaching have come to the United States for training in methods of teaching English as a foreign language. The United States Educational Commission in Japan feels that this program will have far-reaching repercussions, not only among the young students whose pronunciation and general knowledge of English will be improved, but also among Japanese teachers whose interest in new linguistic methods will be increased and where ties with their American colleagues will be strengthened.

In the Near East. Since World War II English has supplanted French as the most important second language in Greece. Consequently there has been a great demand for teachers of English. Since 1952 an average of 17 American secondary school teachers of English have served in Greece each year. At first most of these teachers were placed in American-sponsored schools in Greece which are attended by a large number of Greek students. Later the number teaching in national schools was increased sharply. In 1954 and 1955 the English-teacher project accounted for nearly half the exchange program with Greece. American linguistic experts have also been assigned to the Universities of Athens and Salonika since 1952 for the training of future teachers of English in Greece and the improvement of English teaching techniques.

The United States Educational Foundation in Egypt reported in 1954 that "assistance in the teaching of English is desperately needed." Part of the urgency for an expanded program lay in the fact that the Egyptian Government, as a result of political events occurring in late 1951, asked all teachers and professors of British nationality to quit their teaching posts and leave the country. In 1954 a team of six American linguistic experts went to Egypt headed by an eminent specialist in philology and linguistics, Dr. Freeman Twadell of Brown University. They traveled extensively to towns and cities in upper and lower Egypt, delivering lectures on linguistic science to the staff and students of teacher-training institutes and local townspeople, under the joint sponsorship of the Egyptian Ministry of Education and the United States Educational Foundation in Egypt. For a number of these towns, these Americans represented the first visit of a sizable group of foreign professors in memory.

Through the combined efforts of both American teachers and specialists, considerable interest has been aroused among Egyptian teachers of English in the new concepts and methods being evolved in the United States for the teaching of English as a second language. As a result of Dr. Twadell's explorations, plans are now under way for groups of three Egyptian teachers to come to the United States each year beginning in 1955-56, so that a corps of Egyptian linguists will be trained to provide indigenous roots for a permanent program in this field.

In Germany. The approach to more effective English-language training in Germany was given substantial support with the grant in 1954 to Dr. Charles W. Fries, Director of the University of Michigan Language Institute. In view of the break in scholarly interchange in this field during World War II, he has recommended the sending of other American experts in modern linguistic science to establish essential working relationships with their professional colleagues in Germany.

The presence abroad of American specialists in the teaching of English and the interest they have generated have prompted the organization of special seminars and workshops for teachers of English in such countries as the Netherlands, France, Norway, Italy, Greece, Egypt, Austria, Thailand, and the Philippines. Frequently new teaching guides and materials have been developed which have become valuable aids to the local teachers.

4. Teacher Exchange Projects

Teachers are vital channels, not only for reaching impressionable youth who are groping for answers to the world's social and political problems, but also for influencing many important community groups. As a Burmese grantee noted, "A teacher's influence never stops--it goes on until eternity." Multiply this personal factor by the 3,308 teachers who have been exchanged under the Fulbright Act, and the potential for better understanding is apparent. About half of these teachers exchange classroom teaching jobs. The other half undertake specialized training programs in our universities and colleges and observe our educational methods in classrooms throughout the country.

Teachers Exchange Jobs. The teacher interchange program, which began with the United Kingdom, has now been expanded to include Australia, New Zealand, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Germany, Austria, Denmark, Norway, and Italy. By "swapping" jobs Americans have been able to teach in all parts of the United Kingdom from the Shetland Isles in the north to Penzance in the southwestern tip. British teachers in the United States have been similarly scattered from Maine to Florida, from New Jersey to California, from North Dakota to Texas, and as far away as Hawaii. In the course of their work, these teachers have come into contact with hundreds of thousands of school children and have made over 70,000 "talks" to community and professional groups in the United States and the United Kingdom.

While interchanges have been fewer with other countries, the story is much the same. From Denmark, an American teacher writes of his many extracurricular endeavors which ranged from leading discussion groups and coaching basketball teams to producing an American play. And in the United States a teacher from New Zealand says, "I have been welcomed in many homes, have been a regular member in a church choir . . . I have attended City Council meetings, court sessions, and have met the Governor, State Secretary and other officials." Teachers, it is evident, have abundant opportunities to learn about America and other countries at the grassroots level. These experiences as well as their classroom work lead to lasting friendships, the enrichment of educational curricula, and a greater store of accurate knowledge about the United States in other countries.

Teachers Learn Our Methods. In addition to teacher interchanges, between 150 and 200 foreign teachers and school officials come to the United States each year for specialized training in our elementary, secondary, and vocational school methods as well as to study American civilization and culture. Many of these teachers come from areas where teacher interchanges are not feasible, either because of great differences in school systems or language.

After 3 months of special courses at our universities and colleges, these teachers are assigned to State Departments of Education which place them in local schools for several months to observe classroom and administrative methods. They live in local homes and take part in many community activities. In a single year the program thus reaches into thousands of American homes in hundreds of towns.

Many of these educators are studying our educational methods in order to find ideas that they can use to advance educational reform plans in their countries. Such is the case, for instance, in India, Burma, and Pakistan. In India and Pakistan these American-trained teachers have frequently joined with American lecturers in conducting workshops for hundreds of other teachers, thereby sharing their experience in a very practical fashion. The Indian Ministry of Education considers these workshops so fruitful that it will finance their continuation next year from Ford Foundation funds turned over to the Government of India for this purpose.

Not only are these returned teachers benefiting professionally; they are working too for better understanding between their home countries and ours. In Finland returned teachers have formed an alumni association to strengthen friendly relations between that country and the United States. As one of the founders of the organization wrote, "I think it can make its contribution to what we call good will and that is so important a thing nowadays in this unfriendly world."

5. Study in American Schools Abroad

One of the provisions of the Fulbright Act designed to add to the reciprocal nature of the program, was the clause authorizing grants to foreign nationals to attend American schools abroad. These schools, with American standards of teaching and school administration, provide as authentic an atmosphere of American life as is possible on foreign soil. Since the beginning of the program, 2,917 students, mostly at the secondary or junior college level, have attended American schools in 14 countries, primarily in the Middle East.

The largest number have attended American schools in Greece. The presidents of these schools, as well as a large proportion of their staffs, are American. Many of the Greek teachers have studied in the United States. Most of the young people who receive grants could not attend these schools without financial assistance. And to this group Greece will look for many of her future leaders. For example, the American Farm School in Salonika, with its emphasis on agriculture and village trades is training young men for leadership in their villages most of which lie near the frontiers of Communist countries. Other American schools, such as Athens, Anatolia, and Pierce Colleges, are training people for teaching, business, and other professions. As a recent report commented: "One has but to imagine the day when large numbers of the graduates of the American schools in Greece are poured out into society as engineers, doctors, lawyers, businessmen, teachers, social workers and secretaries to realize how important the institutions are in forming a strong connecting link between the United States and Greece."

In the Arab world students are attending the well-known American University at Beirut whose student body represents some 30 nationalities and whose graduates occupy leading positions in the political, economic, and cultural life of their countries. In Egypt future teachers are being trained at the American University in Cairo.

And further east in Burma some of the Burmese nurses who are being trained at the Namkham Hospital Nurses and Midwives School established by Dr. Gordon Seagrave are receiving assistance under this program.

6. The Inter-Foundation Lectureship Program

Shortly after the program got under way, the Foundations and Commissions abroad realized that the demand for American lecturers in each country could never be fully met within their annual allotments. So they hit on a scheme "to share the wealth" by inviting professors teaching in neighboring countries to come over for a brief series of lectures. The Board of Foreign Scholarships encouraged this plan and so the inter-foundation lectureship program was born.

In countries where the funds are quite limited, the Foundations are constantly on the alert to enlarge their programs through this scheme. In Sweden last year it was not possible to assign a lecturer in American literature. Nevertheless, eight American professors in this field from nearby countries were able to make brief lecture tours of Swedish universities under inter-foundation auspices.

Even Foundations and Commissions with comparatively large programs are not always able, under their annual allotments, to provide American specialists in some of the fields desired by colleges and universities in the participating country. American specialists in such varied fields as dairy science, law, physics, and American literature, for example, visited Italy during 1955 under the inter-foundation lectureship program, through arrangements made by the Commission in Italy with their host Foundations and Commissions in the United Kingdom, France, and Denmark. American lecturers and research scholars affiliated with French universities lectured in such nearby countries as Norway, Germany, the Netherlands, Belgium, and Sweden. Their topics ranged from American history to peaceful uses of the atom.

A country like Finland, somewhat off the general European circuit, was able to arrange eight short lecture series in 1 year by professors working in other countries. Again the range of subject matter is notable. Visiting speakers included a sociologist, an economist, a specialist in American literature, a forestry expert, two medical scientists, a zoologist, and a nuclear physicist.

Although arrangements of this sort are not as easily made in the Near and Far East, Egypt was recently able to "borrow" an American city planning expert from Denmark and to "lend" an urban sociologist to the Foundation in Iraq. Greece arranged a series of lectures on atomic energy under this plan, while India sponsored the visit of two American educators to Ceylon, and Burma welcomed an American economist from Pakistan and an educator from India.

The inter-foundation lectureship program has also made it possible for Americans in specialized fields to be represented at important international conferences dealing with their specialities, and to exchange views with colleagues from many countries. An American agronomist affiliated with the University of Naples in Italy, for example, participated in an international symposium on crop protection held in Belgium and American research chemists, affiliated with universities in a number of European countries, were able to attend International Chemical Congresses held in Stockholm and Paris.

Other inter-foundation arrangements have increased the effectiveness of seminars and workshops for teachers and other groups. An American grantee from the Netherlands helped to conduct a seminar in Norway on American home economics, and American lecturers on American literature and drama in Denmark and the United Kingdom visited the Netherlands to take part in a special conference on American studies sponsored by the United States Educational Foundation there. An American nuclear physicist teaching at the University of Copenhagen was able to join in a seminar on theoretical physics held at the Institut Henri Poincare in Paris, while on the opposite side of the world a linguistics expert teaching in Thailand was able to contribute greatly to a language seminar in Burma.

7. Personal Diplomacy

The influence of grantees in creating a better understanding of the United States on a person-to-person level in communities abroad has been one of the most significant outcomes of this program. The friendships and respect won by American grantees in their day-to-day lives abroad, the articles, talks, and other activities of American and foreign grantees, show the ramifications of this personal diplomacy.

The Board of Foreign Scholarships had pointed out when the program began that its goal was to do more than give isolated individuals experiences which would be of value primarily to themselves, or to restricted circles of academic or technical specialization. It was regarded rather as a means of giving to a substantial number of both American and foreign nationals an experience which would enable them to bring to the public and educational life of their own countries a better understanding of each other's way of life, ideals, and aspirations. Discoveries of those unifying factors among the peoples of the world, which Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick once described as the most important elements in international relations, have occurred in every country participating in the program.

Americans in the Foreign Community. In India an American lecturer and his wife lived in a rural university area entirely surrounded by rice paddies. "The humblest of peasants and farmers were our neighbors," he wrote. "To our surprise, toward the end of our stay we were actually invited to dinner in Hindu homes such as the more orthodox Meenachisundarams, the Brahmin family of Muniswami, and others. I have a feeling that in our friendships and talks we built new attitudes toward Americans and America. . . . Both my wife and I feel that it was more effective than a dozen of Russia's superficial cultural missions."

In Iraq, as in India, the families of American grantees have lived very plainly, used the local bus systems, and attended local schools. Iraqi families felt a closer affinity toward these normal American families after discovering that they, like themselves, were not living in the lap of luxury. The 13-year-old son of one American grantee was a source of great curiosity at first to the Iraqi boys at the local school he attended because his family didn't drive a car and because he had never owned a dinner jacket.

Similar stories turn up in every country, each with its adaptation to the local scene. The story is told, for example, of an American professor who first established a close relationship with his students in the college classroom, then invited them in small groups to his home. During the following vacation he traveled from one end of the country to the other to meet their families and see their villages. His wife was also busy--teaching English and helping with a Girl Scout program.

The activities of American grantees in their host communities are so varied as not to submit to statistical measurement, but one facet--talks to community and professional groups--is so extensive that it warrants mention at least by example. During one 7-month period, American grantees in Austria gave over 200 talks to audiences totaling more than 14,100 persons. Leading the list was an American teacher who filled 103 speaking engagements in 36 towns and villages.

Returned Grantees Interpret America Abroad. Communities abroad are also learning about America from their own citizens who have visited this country under the program. The talks they give and the books and articles they write interpret life in the United States in ways best understood by their fellow countrymen. Their effort to disseminate information about us is especially significant because evaluation studies have shown that people abroad believe that the most reliable sources of information about the United States are their own citizens who have lived in our country.

Like their American counterparts, returned Austrian grantees have been very active in community affairs. During 1954 they gave over 400 talks to some 34,000 Austrians and published 115 articles about the United States in newspapers and magazines. In France it is estimated that 1,500 grantees have returned eager to tell their story in the form of lectures, articles, and conversations with their families and friends. The result has been an awakening interest all over France in American culture and our way of life. In a 6-month period, grantees from the Netherlands gave 119 talks, mostly illustrated with films and slides, and so the story goes around the world.

Teachers, of course, have a great variety of opportunities to spread a knowledge of our ways. It is reflected in their classroom work. Many of them are also stimulating correspondence between their pupils and American youngsters, while others are organizing student councils, parent-teacher meetings, and similar innovations to make their schools a more integral part of the community. Both teachers and professors have helped to prepare textbooks on American subjects for classroom use.

Alumni Associations. Their visits to the United States have also prompted foreign grantees to form alumni associations. Their activities range from conducting English classes and offering hospitality to American visitors to holding lectures and discussions about various phases of American life. The Fulbright Alumni Association in France, for example, has a membership of over 500 former grantees. The association in Belgium is similarly active. Alumni from Luxembourg invited all American grantees in Belgium for a weekend in the Grand Duchy where they were guests of the Ministry of Education. The United States Educational Foundation in Belgium commented, "The full significance of this gesture of welcome to foreigners in Belgium can only be appreciated by those who understand the closed societies of Northern Europe."

In the Philippines the alumni association established a scholarship fund for high school graduates needing assistance in securing collegiate training in Philippine universities. They have also been active in encouraging the exchange of books and educational equipment, as well as providing hospitality for American grantees and assisting them in carrying out their work.

Thus, participants in the program are not only creating a better understanding of the United States in other countries; they are seeing to it that this understanding grows and develops lasting ties of friendship and respect.

Increasing American Knowledge of Other Countries

1. Benefits to American Students

Although various types of exchanges are authorized by the Fulbright Act, one of the principal intentions of Congress was to provide young Americans with increased opportunities to learn at firsthand about other countries; 5,598 young Americans have now had such opportunities.

And it was none too soon. As Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Howland Sargeant noted at the first meeting of the Board of Foreign Scholarships, "I believe our participation in World War II convinced us more than ever of the importance of exchange programs. At the outbreak of war, the United States needed immediately hundreds, even thousands of individuals who knew the language, industries, geography, customs and histories of foreign countries. ... With the conclusion of the war, the United States emerged as the most important world power, with responsibilities all over the world. Its participation in the United Nations and its specialized agencies again required individuals who knew foreign countries from firsthand experience."

Their Careers Contribute to Our National Life. These student exchanges have increased markedly the number of American citizens with specialized knowledge of other areas of the world. A survey conducted as early as 1953 revealed that their overseas experience was leading them into careers where they could make significant contributions to our national life, especially our relations with other countries. Some took jobs with United States Government agencies, others with business and publishing firms; some were engaged in scientific research, and many were in teaching positions where they could pass on their firsthand knowledge of foreign lands to scores of other Americans.

For example, an American student at the School of Oriental Studies at the University of London, later became vice consul in Dhahran, Saudi Arabia. He reported that the insight his studies gave him into Near Eastern problems and his position as a scholar of oriental history enabled him to make valuable contacts in that country. Two Americans who studied law in France have made profitable use of their experience--one in the foreign department of the Chase National Bank, the other in the legal department of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. A number of grantees have found editorial positions interpreting foreign news events for American magazines and newspapers. Still others have joined investment companies where they are concerned with reporting on foreign economic conditions and analyzing foreign investment opportunities. One of this last group recently returned to India on behalf of his firm to gather information on current investment opportunities in that country.

2. Increased Interest in the United States in the Study of Foreign Areas

The exchange program has given considerable impetus to studies about foreign areas in our educational institutions. Many American grantees are now teachers and lecturers in our schools, colleges, and universities, bringing to American students a more intimate knowledge of the life, cultures, and languages of other countries. Over one-third of those who went abroad on student grants, for instance, hold posts as college or university instructors. In addition, 1,566 American teachers who have received grants under the program are employed in elementary and secondary schools throughout the country. A partial survey of catalogues of American universities with special foreign area studies programs shows that many of the American faculty members directly associated with these programs have done advanced research overseas under the Fulbright Act.

American economists, political scientists, geographers, and sociologists who participated in the program have published many articles and books which are contributing to an increased understanding of contemporary life in many foreign countries. Altogether, 26 percent of the publications of returned grantees are concerned with social and political conditions overseas.

The interests of the local community are also being met, for returned grantees are sharing their knowledge of other world areas through talks to civic groups, radio broadcasts, and membership in local organizations devoted to the study of foreign affairs.

3. Contributions of Foreign Grantees

Equally significant have been the contributions of the thousands of foreign grantees who visit the United States under the program.

This year students at Washington University in St. Louis and Western College for Women are learning about Middle Eastern history and Islamic civilization from Egyptian professors; those at Bowdoin and Oberlin are studying Indian history with a professor from that country. At Syracuse, Indiana, and Drew Universities Far Eastern literature and religions are being taught by Japanese professors, while at the University of Arkansas Italian civilization is the subject of lectures by a professor from the University of Florence.

The popularity of these visiting specialists can be gaged from two examples. One Indian professor was invited by nearly 50 American colleges, universities, art galleries, and museums to lecture on Indian art and culture, while an Austrian professor, in addition to teaching German language classes at Olympic Community College in the State of Washington, developed a course in contemporary European history and served as adviser to the Ski Club. He also had many opportunities to bring about a better understanding of his country in the 30 talks he gave to various community groups, including Parent-Teacher Associations, faculty groups, Kiwanis, Rotary, and Lions Clubs.

Foreign teachers in the United States brought a more intimate glimpse of their countries to American children in over 6,000 communities in 47 States during a single year. The impact of these teachers is evidenced by countless letters from American educators. The principal of an Ohio school wrote, "What wonderful ambassadors they are from their countries to our children." Another official, commenting on the visit of a Burmese teacher, said: "I want to report to you that we gained more than we gave as a result of her visit. ...Her informal talks with fourth, fifth, and sixth grade children were wonderful."

The young people from overseas who carry on graduate work at our universities are equally concerned with helping the American public to understand their home countries. They rarely miss an opportunity to give talks, appear on radio or television, or write articles for campus and local papers. A Thai student at the University of California at Los Angeles told of 14 speeches, some in schools, some in churches, and some in clubs. He proudly pointed to his press interviews with five newspapers and said, "Usually I talk about my country, giving a general idea to these people about Thai customs, culture, religion and our educational system." People in the Philadelphia area heard a dozen talks on India from a young lawyer of that country, while those in Kansas learned about Philippine agriculture from a student at Kansas State College who supplemented his many talks with colored slides of his country.

4. Strengthening Relations Between Americans and Foreign Educational Institutions

The exchange program has not only resulted in closer relations between individual Americans and foreign nationals, but also in stronger ties between American and foreign educational institutions and communities as a whole. For example, long-range cooperation has been established between American and Italian universities as a result of exchanges of research scholars working together in specialized fields. The University of California and the University of Padua are cooperating on research in land economics, the University of Rome and Wayne University in the social sciences, and the University of Wisconsin and the Universities of Genoa and Padua in economic history.

In Germany virtually the full weight of the program is now being devoted to promoting institutional contacts through exchanges of university lecturers, research scholars, students, and teachers.

As a result of a visit to the United States of the dean of the Lucknow Law School in India, strong ties are being established between that institution and Yale University. In Japan, an exchange of legal experts has been arranged to foster greater cooperation between Japanese and American law schools. Funds for the project are being provided by Harvard University, the Ford Foundation, and the United States Educational Commission in Japan.

Establishment of these institutional and professional ties provides an avenue of international understanding which will remain open and well-traveled for generations to come.

The Interchange of Knowledge and Skills

It has been said that "communication is the lifeblood of science." It is scarcely less true of learning in other fields. The program under the Fulbright Act, by providing so many personal channels of communication among scholars, has encouraged joint research which has advanced the frontiers of knowledge in a wide variety of fields. Only the bare outlines of the story can be sketched here.

1. Scientific Studies of Human Relationships

The study of man's relationships to his own and to other human societies can do much to improve international understanding. Under the Fulbright Act a number of such studies have been made. Some have sought ways to replace the stereotyped ideas that the people of one country have about the people of another country with more realistic and factual concepts. In Japan, for example, social science methodology and research techniques are being used by American anthropologists and social scientists to learn more about Japanese society and, in turn, to interpret this society to America. This approach represents a new development in the Orient. Several of the world's centers for the study of oriental culture are to be found in Japan and, as a result of the increased interest of American scholars, the Japanese themselves are learning much that had previously escaped observation. In addition, American universities are inviting Japanese scholars to work with their research and lecturing staffs to develop more accurate cultural interpretations of the Orient.

Shortly after World War II, the University of Oslo established an Institute for Social Research. Grants under the Fulbright Act have enabled American scholars to join with their Scandinavian colleagues at this Institute to further knowledge on both sides of the Atlantic on subjects ranging from basic family relationships to industrial and political behavior. In a recent report the Institute noted that it has "profited immensely from the guidance of American social scientists who have been brought to Oslo under the Fulbright program. ...As a matter of fact, the whole idea of organizing such an Institute as ours was developed in close cooperation with American visitors and its development has been planned and carried out in the same close relationship."

Growing appreciation of the usefulness of the social sciences and of American methodology is apparent in a number of countries. An Indian scholar who carried on advanced work at Columbia University is now principal of the Delhi School of Social Work--one of the few institutions of its kind in India. In France, where an increasing number of students have been trained in the United States, an Institute of Human Sciences has been created at Bordeaux, and a laboratory of community-life psychology is being set up on a trial basis by a national research group.

2. Social Rehabilitation

Both American and foreign grantees have helped to introduce American techniques for the rehabilitation of the handicapped. One young woman returned to organize Belgium's first Center for Re-education of Cerebral Palsied Children. Aided by an eminent Belgian neurologist, who also visited the United States, she is pioneering in a field in which Belgium was far behind.

Similar work has been carried out in Norway by American specialists. The Norwegian Association for Aiding Cerebral Palsied Children noted, "There was no possibility of obtaining specialists in Norway for this particular field. We shall always be grateful to the Fulbright Foundation for its help in finding just those people who had the right instinct, imagination and initiative to break new ground in this discipline in Norway." Occupational therapy, introduced into Italy by an American grantee, has resulted in the establishment of training centers in four Italian cities. The demand for trained therapists by Italian hospitals has since shown a marked increase.

3. Toward a Well-Informed Public

A well-informed citizenry is essential to democratic states. Believing in this, the United States has recognized the study of journalism as a regular part of its university and college curriculum. Many other countries are realizing the value of such studies and the exchange program is helping to satisfy this interest. Last year an American was invited to start a School of Journalism in Thailand at the University of Thammasat. An Italian scholar, recently returned from the United States, has submitted a report to his Ministry of Education on American schools of journalism as a preliminary to discussions with educational authorities for the establishment of similar schools in Italian universities.

In India interest in the study of journalism is closely connected with the campaign to stamp out illiteracy. As early as 1952 Prof. Roland E. Wolseley of the School of Journalism at Syracuse University set up the first formal department of journalism along American lines in any Indian university. This department, at Hislop College, Nagpur University, is now well-established. He not only laid the plans and prepared a detailed curriculum but also served as the department's first head for a year and was editor and coauthor of the first general text on the Indian press. It was adapted to the level and needs of his students. At Literacy House, Allahabad, several of the administrators, teachers, or writers were students trained by Professor Wolseley either in the United States or at Nagpur University. This center also now is on a firm footing. Also before leaving India in 1953, Professor Wolseley discussed journalism education with the journalists and government of Hyderabad. As a result of the State Ministry of Education offered the facilities of Osmania University for the founding of another department of journalism along the lines of that at Nagpur. Local publishers and journalists have since organized the department and the university has obtained the services of an American professor of journalism to direct the department.

4. Increasing Historical Research Source Material in the United States

American scholars, in addition to their research and lecture projects abroad, have contributed to the extensive microfilming project sponsored jointly by the Library of Congress and the American Historical Association. For example, the loss of State and County records in Virginia relating to the early history of the State through the burning of the colonial capital during Bacon's Rebellion in 1677 has been repaired in part by the microfilming of records in scattered collections in Great Britain. New Testament studies have been enriched by the photographing of manuscripts housed in the 20 monasteries on Mt. Athnos in northeastern Greece. American scholars have also recorded materials in the port archives in Genoa which contain valuable material on medieval trade and economic conditions, and in various Japanese archives bearing on Japanese-American diplomatic and trade relations. Much of this material is now available from the Library of Congress for use by researchers everywhere.

5. Understanding the Physical World

An Iranian scholar recently reported that the research he undertook in connection with the climatology of his country "was never done before...and the result will prove, I hope, to be a major contribution to the knowledge of world climate." Similar advances in man's understanding of the world around him are resulting from exchange activities in many countries. The president of the Japan Science Council wrote in the Tokyo Shimbun at the end of 1955 that "the exchange of persons with the United States under the Fulbright program has achieved great success in the sharing of scientific knowledge."

Australian scientists have won world recognition for their work in soil and plant analysis. Through the exchange program, an American specialist is able to work jointly with these men on ways to increase the productivity of various kinds of green plants.

Physicists in England, Denmark, France, Germany, and several other European countries have contributed much to recent advances in theories of nuclear structure. American physicists are exchanging ideas with these groups and joining in many types of measurement and other special research projects.

American research chemists have worked in some of the leading European chemical laboratories, such as those at Cambridge, Leiden, Liége, Delft, Heidelberg, Göttingen, Nancy, Louvain, Rome, and Paris. Their projects ranged from specialized study of growth hormones to molecular structures and the effects of atomic radiation on a variety of chemical substances.

WHAT OF THE FUTURE?

In these critical times the importance of maintaining and expanding our efforts on the cultural front have an urgency comparable to our increased efforts on political, economic, and military fronts. As an American student recently returned from the Middle East remarked, "The proposition of getting onto common ground is no longer a matter of philanthropy. It is a matter of survival. ...Creating a new spirit of tolerance, understanding and cooperation among the peoples of the world is not something we should do merely because it is a good thing, but because we need it to survive and grow."

The fact that this program is making a valuable contribution to our foreign relations objectives has been recognized by the Congress. When the original supply of foreign currencies available for the program began to run out in some countries, several pieces of legislation were enacted to broaden the source of foreign funds available for exchange purposes. The signing of the first agreement under the Fulbright Act in the Western Hemisphere (with the Government of Chile in March 1955)[1] was made possible by the use of funds accruing from the sale of surplus agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act. These new sources of foreign currency funds are making it possible to include new countries in the program and to extend or reactivate programs in others.

Recognition of the worth of the program is not confined to our shores. The Prime Minister of Thailand recently stated that "the Fulbright program has accomplished most valuable work in our country and has brought greater understanding between the Thai and American people." The Danish Ministry of Education referred to the Fulbright agreement as "one of the most valuable agreements which the postwar years has produced."

Continuing Appraisals Lead to Improvements

All of the agencies concerned with the administration of the exchange program have been mindful of the need for objective appraisal of its accomplishments and its shortcomings in order to make it more effective in the future. Reports by and about grantees have been analyzed. Competent observers, including members of the Board of Foreign Scholarships, have studied the operation of the program in foreign countries and their recommendations have been of great help in improving the operation of the program. And, finally, outside research organizations have conducted comprehensive studies to determine the effectiveness of these exchanges. The results of these studies have validated many of the successes noted in this report. They have also pointed to specific areas in which improvement should be made.

One of the most important areas in which improvements are being made is that generally called "orientation." As experience with exchange programs has grown, it has been possible to study the problems facing individuals in their adjustment to new environments. It is axiomatic that the more easily these adjustments can be made, the more effective the exchange experience will be. While grantees under the Fulbright Act all take part in some form of orientation, ways are now being developed to refine these programs. In this venture, the Government has received the enthusiastic support of private organizations.

The John Hay Whitney Foundation has started special orientation conferences for foreign lecturers to acquaint them with American life and educational methods. The Asia Foundation arranged a special course at the University of Michigan for a group of American teachers going to the Far East to explain the unique problems and techniques involved in teaching English to Asians. Since orientation is a continuing process, the Hazen Foundation has developed a number of seminars for foreign educators so that toward the middle or end of their stay in the United States they can discuss their experiences with each other and with American scholars in order to fill in the gaps and round out their understanding of our country.

The Future Is Promising

Thus the program is constantly moving forward toward its goal. As one of the first members of the Board of Foreign Scholarships said, "Our chances for a peaceful world . . . will depend to a very large extent upon the development of knowledge and understanding in the minds of living persons--thousands and hundreds of thousands--here and abroad." As we have seen, the exchange program is already making rapid strides toward this objective. It is bringing about a new kind of chain reaction which may eventually work more powerfully for peace than nuclear weapons. For exchanges under the program are beginning to influence, in ever widening circles, the people of our own and other countries. Misconceptions and enmities are being torn down and new understandings and friendships are rising in their place. All of this represents a new American achievement--an achievement in international human relations as significant in our history as the spanning of the continent by the first railroad or the invention of the automobile.

"Civilization is a race between education and catastrophe," H. G. Wells once said. The exchange program is helping us to win that race. The future, therefore, is promising. Through personal persuasion this new venture is developing a kind of people-to-people understanding that may prove a mightier weapon for peace than the pen or the sword.

HOW THE INTERNATIONAL EDUCATIONAL EXCHANGE PROGRAM CONTRIBUTES TO UNITED STATES FOREIGN RELATIONS OBJECTIVES

Today, as a leading power in world affairs, the United States must cultivate good relations with the people of other countries. The growing interest in foreign affairs at all levels and the importance attached to this interest in the development of foreign policy have created an urgent need for mutual understanding among the peoples of the world. Three factors have increased the need for such understanding: the rapid growth in methods of communication and transportation, the mounting interest in science and its application to human welfare, and the rising standards of citizenship resulting from general education.

International educational exchange has a definite part to play in meeting this need. It helps to build and maintain friendly attitudes toward the United States in other countries, and to increase respect for and confidence in our aims and policies. It contributes extensively to better understanding in the United States of the way of life, the culture, and the aspirations of other people. It promotes greater stability in international relationships by broadening the community of interests between the people of the United States and other free people and by increasing awareness of the common principles underlying a free and orderly society.

Basic Approach

The basic approach to this reciprocal undertaking is one of cooperation "with other nations in--(a) the interchange of persons, knowledge and skills; (b) the rendering of technical and other services; (c) the interchange of developments in the field of education, the arts, and sciences." (The United States Information and Educational Exchange Act of 1948, P.L. 402, 80th Congress, section 2). The program today centers around the interchange between the United States and other countries of persons who, by virtue of their positions at home and their activities and contacts while abroad, can explain our institutions and be of mutual benefit to us and the peoples of the other participating countries.

Types of Activities

Whether grantees engage in study, teaching, research, or specialized observation and consultation, their activities, in addition to producing personal, professional benefits, serve the goals of the program in one or several of the following ways. Many of the activities which the program encourages are concerned with securing a clearer understanding of the life, institutions, and culture of Americans and their historical background. Such activities include those which increase the knowledge overseas of our literature, language, history, and political and social institutions; which spread information about characteristically American practices such as free public libraries or agricultural extension work; which share specific skills of joint concern--for example, the peaceful uses of atomic energy--or which demonstrate American educational, artistic, and cultural achievement through, for example, performance abroad by outstanding musical, theater, and dance groups.

Of equal importance are those activities which help us to develop and broaden our knowledge of foreign areas. These include grants to foreign professors to teach at American colleges and universities, and to the staffs of these institutions to do research abroad. It likewise includes the work of many other Americans whose study and research abroad enlarge the corps of experts needed for many types of overseas service and enrich our educational curricula.

Still other activities draw their primary significance from the special role which the participants play in their home countries, for example, the visits to the United States of members of national legislatures, trade union officials, top newsmen, or leaders of youth groups. Others concentrate primarily on the establishment and strengthening of contacts in significant institutions overseas or between institutions and organizations in the United States and those in other countries. Finally, some activities are designed to complement the work of other United States Government agencies, private organizations, or international bodies of which the United States is a member. In this group, for example, would fall certain social science projects which undergird some of the technical assistance programs of the International Cooperation Administration.

Significant Contacts

In going about their educational work and in their everyday living, the participants reflect in their views, behavior, and services the ways of life and attitudes of their own countries. They may also informally present such matters in discussions, lectures, or published writings. All of the participants, when they return home, act as "witnesses" to what they have experienced and interpret that experience to their fellow countrymen in terms which they can best understand. The informal give-and-take of such discussions make these contacts a highly effective form of communication.

Coordination With Other Programs

In carrying out its responsibilities, the Department of State, through its International Educational Exchange Service, has consolidated effectively the educational exchange programs authorized by the Smith-Mundt, Fulbright, and other similar acts of Congress. It has also made much progress in the International Cooperation Administration under the technical cooperation program and the few other small programs of this general nature conducted by other agencies of the United States Government.

Even more important, however, is its basic policy of furthering, encouraging, and cooperating with independent, nongovernmental exchange programs in the United States. The Department is well aware of the extensive private efforts in this field, and its program is planned in the light of such activities, and is coordinated with such efforts.

An important phase of the program is the facilitation of private programs. This service is especially significant in view of the increased interest of independent groups in this field and the necessity, frequently encountered, of having to make arrangements with agencies of foreign governments in the implementation of their programs. This policy has contributed in large measure to the widespread popular support which the program enjoys in this country, both in terms of voluntary services and financial cooperation.

Special Role of the International Educational Exchange Service

In addition to its services to independent, nongovernmental programs, the Department's role in international educational exchange is threefold. First, it conducts negotiations with other governments and with other agencies of our own Government on fundamental matters of policy and procedure which affect all types of exchange programs. In this capacity, the Department negotiates bilateral agreements for official educational exchange programs, takes part in international conferences on cultural affairs, and deals with appropriate agencies on such matters as income taxes and insurance. Secondly, it shares with private organizations and other governments the costs of certain exchange activities. Its grants for international travel are awarded jointly with the scholarships and other stipends which are offered by hundreds of universities, professional and civic groups in this country, and by similar groups abroad. Thirdly, it finances and conducts activities which are not, and in some cases cannot be, carried out by nongovernmental groups. Such activities include the interchange of persons whose visits will be measurably enhanced by an invitation from the United States Government, those whose visits must be arranged on short notice to have the desired effect on our relations with a particular country, or those whose program arrangements require extensive use of government facilities.

During the past few years the scale and scope of this program have been moderate but significant. From 1950 through 1955, 39,972 grants were made to Americans and nationals of some 70 other countries. Each year more than 400 organizations and agencies cooperate in this undertaking and are, in turn, served by it.

Success To Date

Programs like this are not fully appraised by statistical measurement, nor do they always yield quick returns. As in all enterprises of this scope and in which the selection of participants and the arrangement of personally profitable experiences are so important, many problems are encountered. All who take part in the administration of the program are both aware of such problems and constantly working out ways to solve or minimize them.

However, direct observation and systematic evaluation indicate clearly that those who have taken part in educational exchange activities have been successful in furthering the objectives of the program. They have developed a deeper understanding of the countries which they have visited, and have helped to revise unrealistic or stereotyped views of these countries. By their conduct and performance, they have demonstrated the traditions, achievements, and way of life of their own countries, especially those aspects which have been misunderstood or misinterpreted. Through the study of those fields in which the country they visited has attained preeminence or made significant contributions, they have stimulated needed developments or advanced similar studies in their home countries. They have shared their overseas experience with the people at home, both through informal discussions and published writings. They have developed lasting and mutually beneficial relationships between the people and institutions of the United States and those of the other participating countries.

All this has been accomplished on the basis of cooperation with the American people and reciprocity with other nations--our partners in an enterprise which has proved to be a popular, constructive, and effective phase of our foreign relations.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE GOVERNMENT OF CHILE FOR FINANCING CERTAIN EDUCATIONAL EXCHANGE PROGRAMS

The Government of the United States of America and the Government of Chile:

Desiring to promote further mutual understanding between the peoples of the United States of America and Chile by a wider exchange of knowledge and professional talents through educational activities:

Considering that the Secretary of State of the United States of America may enter into an agreement for financing certain educational exchange programs from the currency of Chile held or available for expenditure by the United States for such purposes:

Have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE 1

There shall be established a commission to be known as the Commission for Educational Interchange between the United States of America and Chile (hereinafter designated "the Commission"), which shall be recognized by the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Chile as an organization created and established to facilitate the administration of an educational program to be financed by funds made available to the Commission by the Government of the United States of America from funds held or available for expenditure by the United States for such purpose.

Except as provided in Article 3 hereof the Commission shall be exempt from the domestic and local laws of the United States of America as they relate to the use and expenditure of currencies and credits for currencies for the purposes set forth in the present Agreement. The funds and property which may be acquired with the funds in furtherance of the purposes of the Agreement shall be regarded in Chile as property of a foreign government.

The funds made available under the present Agreement, within the conditions and limitations hereinafter set forth, shall be used by the Commission or such other instrumentality as may be agreed upon by the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Chile for the purposes of:

(1) Financing studies, research, instruction, and other educational activities of or for citizens of the United States of America in schools and institutions of higher learning located in Chile or of the citizens of Chile in United States schools and institutions of higher learning located outside the continental United States, Hawaii, Alaska (including the Aleutian Islands), Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, including payment of transportation, tuition, maintenance, and other expenses incident to scholastic activities:

or

(2) Furnishing transportation for citizens of Chile who desire to attend United States schools and institutions of higher learning in the continental United States, Hawaii, Alaska, (including the Aleutian Islands), Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, and whose attendance will not deprive citizens of the United States of an opportunity to attend such schools and institutions.

ARTICLE 2

In furtherance of the aforementioned purposes, the Commission may, subject to the provisions of the present Agreement, exercise all powers necessary to the carrying out of the purposes of the present Agreement, including the following:

(1) Plan, adopt and carry out programs in accordance with the purposes of the present Agreement.

(2) Recommend to the Board of Foreign Scholarships, provided for in Section 1641 (B), Title 50, appendix of the United States Code, students, professors, research scholars, teachers, resident in Chile, and institutions of Chile qualified to participate in the program in accordance with the aforesaid Section.

(3) Recommend to the aforesaid Board of Foreign Scholarships such qualifications for the selection of participants in the program as it may deem necessary for achieving the purpose and objectives of the present Agreement.

(4) Acquire, hold, and dispose of property in the name of the Commission as the Board of Directors of the Commission may consider necessary or desirable, provided, however, that the acquisition of any real property shall be subject to the prior approval of the Secretary of State of the United States of America.

(5) Authorize the Treasurer of the Commission or such other person as the Commission may designate to receive funds to be deposited in bank accounts in the name of the Treasurer of the Commission or such other person as may be designated. The appointment of the Treasurer or such designee shall be approved by the Secretary of State of the United States of America. The Treasurer shall deposit funds received in a depository or depositories designated by the Secretary of State of the United States of America.

(6) Authorize the disbursement of funds and the making of grants and advances of funds for the authorized purposes of the present Agreement.

(7) Provide for periodic audits of the accounts of the Treasurer of the Commission as directed by auditors selected by the Secretary of State of the United States of America.

(8) Incur administrative expenses as may be deemed necessary out of funds made available under the present Agreement.

ARTICLE 3

All commitments, obligations, and expenditures authorized by the Commission shall be made in accordance with an annual budget, to be approved by the Secretary of State of the United States of America.

ARTICLE 4

The management and direction of the affairs of the Commission shall be vested in a Board of Directors consisting of six members (hereinafter designated "The Board"), three of whom shall be citizens of the United States of America and three of whom shall be citizens of Chile. In addition, the principal officer in charge of the Diplomatic Mission of the United States of America to Chile (hereinafter designated "Chief of Mission") shall be Honorary Chairman of the Board. He shall cast the deciding vote in the event of a tie vote by the Board. He shall have the power of appointment of all members of the Board. Of the citizens of the United States of America, two shall be officers of the United States Foreign Service establishment in Chile; one of them shall serve as Chairman of the Board, and one of them shall serve as Treasurer.

The members shall serve from the time of their appointment until the following December 31 and shall be eligible for reappointment. Vacancies by reason of resignation, transfer of residence outside of Chile, expiration of service, or otherwise, shall be filled in accordance with the appointment procedure set forth in this article.

The members shall serve without compensation but the Board may authorize the payment of the necessary expenses of the members in attending the meetings of the Board and in performing other official duties assigned by the Board.

ARTICLE 5

The Board shall adopt such by-laws and appoint such committees as it shall deem necessary for the conduct of the affairs of the Commission.

ARTICLE 6

Reports acceptable in form and content to the Secretary of State of the United States of America shall be made annually on the activities of the Commission to the Secretary of State of the United States of America and the Government of Chile.

ARTICLE 7

The principal office of the Commission shall be in the capital city of Chile but meetings of the Board and any of its committees may be held in such other places as the Board may from time to time determine, and the activities of any of the Commission's officers or staff may be carried on at such places as may be approved by the Board.

ARTICLE 8

The Government of the United States of America and the Government of Chile agree that currency of Chile acquired by the Government of the United States pursuant to the Surplus Agricultural Commodities Agreement, dated January 27, 1955, and any other currency of Chile owed to or owned by the United States and available for educational exchange activities may be used for purposes of this Agreement and that the performance of this Agreement shall be subject to the availability of appropriations to the Secretary of State of the United States of America, when required by the laws of the United States, for reimbursement to the Treasury of the United States for currency of Chile held or available for expenditure by the United States.

The Secretary of State of the United States of America will make available for expenditure as authorized by the Commission currency of the Government of Chile in such amounts as may be required for the purposes of this Agreement but in no event may amounts in excess of the budgetary limitations established pursuant to Article 3 of the present Agreement be expended by the Commission.

ARTICLE 9

The Government of the United States of America and the Government of Chile shall make every effort to facilitate the exchange of persons programs authorized in this Agreement and the Convention for the Promotion of Inter-American Cultural Relations and to resolve problems which may arise in the operations thereof.

ARTICLE 10

Wherever, in the present Agreement, the term "Secretary of State of the United States of America" is used, it shall be understood to mean the Secretary of State of the United States of America or any officer or employee of the Government of the United States of America designated by him to act in his behalf.

ARTICLE 11

The present Agreement may be amended by the exchange of diplomatic notes between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Chile.

The present Agreement shall come into force upon the date of signature.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed the present Agreement.

Done at Santiago in duplicate, in the English and Spanish languages each of which shall be of equal authenticity this thirty-first day of March, 1955.

Office Communication to: Mr. Akerberg

from: Miss Holder (Secretary to Mr. Murrow)

July 12, 1956

The enclosed is self-explanatory. Mr. Murrow asks if you would communicate with the Senator as soon as convenient.

Thank you.

Dear Senator Fulbright:

Your letter of June 29th arrived in Mr. Murrow's absence on vacation. I was able to reach him by telephone and he asked me to tell you that since he has nothing to do with matters of station relations he suggests that I take the liberty of forwarding your letter to Mr. H. V. Akerberg, Vice President in charge of Station Relations. I am sure you will hear from Mr. Akerberg in due course.

Sincerely yours,

Rebecca Holder
Secretary to Mr. Murrow

Dear Mr. Murrow:

This is to thank you for your courtesy in writing me explaining that you cannot serve on the National Selection Committee for the Leadership Training Awards Program of the Fund for Adult Education. We understand very well the demands upon your time.

Sincerely,

R. J. Blakely
